KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 23.—Edwin W. Deleon, manager of the Maryland Casualty Company of New York, and Miss Fanny Emma Moise of Kansas City were married at the home of the bride's brother, Lionel Moise, to-day. They left to-night for Jacksonville, Fla. After spending a short time there they will go to Porto Rico, where they will be the guests of Chief Justice Sulzbacher of the Porto Rican Supreme Court. They will then go to Havana, where they will spend five weeks of their wedding tour, after which they will return to New York.

Holmes—Gregory.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Jan. 23.—The marriage of Miss Lulu F. Gregory, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Gregory, to Charles Lyman Holmes, son of the Rev. L. W. Holmes, pastor of the Westport Methodist Church, took place this afternoon at the Norwalk Congregational Church. The ceremony was performed by the bridegroom's father, assisted by the Rev. G. D. Egbert.

LUNCHEON ON A NEW YACHT.

Mr. Boas Entertains a Party on the Prinzessin Victoria Luise.

Emil L. Boas, General Manager of the Hamburg-American Line, entertained a number of his friends at a luncheon on board the company's new twin screw cruising yacht, the Prinzessin Victoria Luise, at the Hoboken terminal of the line, yesterday afternoon. During the luncheon speeches were made by Mr. Boas, Mayor Fagan of Hoboken, Capt. Sauermann, who commands the new vessel, and Mr. Whittemore of the engineering department of the line. Mr. Whittemore gave details of the new pier that is to be erected on the site of Pier I. Contracts for the pier were let last Saturday.

After the luncheon the guests were shown through the Prinzessin, and its many comfortable and elegant apartments and appointments were much admired. The first cruise of the vessel, which will be to the West Indies and the Spanish Main, will begin Saturday. The itinerary will be as follows: Port au Prince, Haiti; Domingo City, Santo Domingo; San Juan, Porto Rico; St. Thomas, Danish West Indies; St. Pierre, Martinique; Port of Spain, Trinidad; La Guayra, Venezuela; Puerto Cabello, Venezuela; Curacao, British West Indies; Kingston, Jamaica; Santiago, Cienfuegos, and Havana, Cuba, and Nassau, New Providence, arriving back in New York about March 2. On March 9 a cruise of fifty-seven days in the Mediterranean and Black Seas will be begun by the vessel.

Aid for a Consumptive.

THE NEW YORK TIMES has received $1 from "K. D. F.," $1 from "S. M.," and $1 from "A. C. H.," in aid of the consumptive young man in whose behalf an appeal was made by the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities.

Bjornsen's New Play a Success.

BERLIN, Jan. 23.—Bjornstjorne Bjornsen's play, "Beyond Our Power," (Part II.,) which the censorship has finally allowed to be produced, scored an enormous success at its première in the Berliner Theatre.

EDWARD FLOYD-JONES DEAD.

Stricken Suddenly Tuesday Night After Retiring.

Ex-State Senator Edward Floyd-Jones died suddenly yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Condé R. Thorn, 35 East Sixty-third Street. He was a member of a family that has been very prominent in Long Island's history for more than two centuries, and within the past two years six of its members have passed away.

Edward Floyd-Jones was born at South Oyster Bay, Jan. 26, 1823. Both his parents were native Americans. He was educated at the Union Academy at Jamaica, and early in life entered commercial pursuits, but soon abandoned them to manage a big farm at Seaford.

He was always a Democrat, and his first official position was that of Supervisor of the town of Oyster Bay. He was elected to the State Senate in 1891, serving for one term.

Mr. Floyd-Jones was one of the many who went to California in 1849. He organized the firm of Jones & Hewlett at Stockton. The business was a general one, and included the importing and sale of agricultural implements of all kinds.

The ancestors of the Floyd-Jones family acquired the greater portion of Long Island under a grant from Queen Anne of England, and he owned a mansion at Oyster Bay, which was surrounded by about five square miles of land belonging to him. It was the largest single possession on Long Island. He also owned property at other points on Long Island.

His villa was destroyed by fire on May 29, 1900, and Mr. Floyd-Jones and the servants barely escaped with their lives. Then he took up his residence on property he owned at Amityville, and that was damaged by fire on June 15, 1900.

Mr. Floyd-Jones was a great sportsman, and for several years was the champion shot of the West. He was passionately fond of hunting, and was the crack shot of the Carroll Island Gun Club. He was very generous, and the baymen along the shore of Long Island held him in the highest regard for his many charities.

Mrs. Edward Floyd-Jones, who was a Miss Lord, died several years ago. Two children, Edward H. Floyd-Jones of 10 East Sixteenth Street, and Mrs. Condé R. Thorn, survive.

Mr. Floyd-Jones was apparently in excellent health on Tuesday night and played cards before retiring. At 5:30 o'clock yesterday morning he was dead. Death was attributed to heart disease.

DIED AT 105 YEARS.

Isaac Laudy, 105 years old, died yesterday in the home of his son Isaac, at 31 Orchard Street. Laudy came from a long-lived family. One of his brothers, in the family's native home, in Kiev, Russia, lived to be 122 years old.

Laudy up to eleven years ago was a dealer in flour in the city where he was born. One by one he saw his family dying, until his brothers and his sons had gone, and at the age of 94 he found himself alone in the world. He decided that he was feeling too old to continue without some one near him, and when his son Isaac wrote to him to come and live with him he crossed the ocean and came here to live.

The son is the father now of one of the Vienna Bakery wagons, and he decided that he could afford to give the old man all he might wish to make him happy. Accordingly old Laudy took up his new home and spent the remaining years of his life playing with his grandchildren and taking a keen interest in his son's affairs.

He retained all his faculties to the end, and when he died yesterday morning, just because the poor old mechanism was run down, he passed away so peacefully that none knew for some time that he was dead. He suffered from no illness. About a week ago he began to have trouble in catching his breath. He was therefore put to bed for fear he might catch cold. He declined to lie down, however, and when his daughter-in-law came to him yesterday morning to bring him his breakfast she found the old man dead. The body was buried in Mount Sinai Cemetery.

WARREN LELAND, JR., BURIED.

Services at the Church of the Heavenly Rest Largely Attended.

Funeral services for Warren Leland, Jr., proprietor of the Hotel Grenoble, who died at the hotel last Monday, were held yesterday at noon at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth Avenue and Forty-fifth Street. The Rev. Dr. D. Parker Morgan, rector of the church, officiated, assisted by the Rev. John Williams, assistant rector. There was a profusion of floral tributes, one of the noticeable pieces being a cross ten feet high of white roses, the tribute from the employes of the Hotel Grenoble. Another was a wreath six feet in diameter of lilies of the valley and violets from the Hotel Men's Association.

Among those in attendance at the services were the proprietors and managers of all the leading hotels of the city. Considerable comment was made on the fact that this is the third funeral of prominent hotel men in this city this year, Proprietors Allen of the Astor House and Hitchcock of the Fifth Avenue being the other two. The burial took place at Woodlawn.

DIED WHILE PRAYING.

Alfred A. Dunham Stricken with Apoplexy at Home of a Minister.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 23.—Alfred A. Dunham, fifty-five years old, of 452 Washington Street, died in the house of the Rev. Dr. Lyman Whitney Allen, 41 Spruce Street, yesterday afternoon while kneeling in prayer for his wife and listening to the invocation of the minister. Death was caused by a stroke of apoplexy. Mr. Dunham and his family have been friends of Mr. Allen for a long time. He came to Newark from New York City to live near his daughter, Mrs. W. L. Brown of 104 Pennsylvania Avenue. Mr. Dunham, with his wife, went yesterday afternoon to his daughter's home partly to cheer up Mrs. Dunham.

She had been in poor health for some time, and at times she became downhearted. It was proposed that Mr. and Mrs. Dunham call on Mr. Allen. Upon reaching Mr. Allen's house they talked on religious subjects. Mr. Allen then proposed that they all join in prayer. It was offered by Mr. Allen, who particularly petitioned God to restore Mrs. Dunham's health. Toward the end of the prayer Mr. Dunham fell to one side unconscious. Mrs. Dunham and Dr. Allen immediately hastened to his side and a physician was sent for. Dr. L. E. Hollister, when he arrived, found Mr. Dunham dead.

SPANISH WAR VETERAN DEAD.

Alfred Rosetky, Who Was at San Juan Hill, Succumbs to Fever.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 23.—Alfred Rosetsky, a veteran of the Spanish-American war, died at St. Michael's Hospital on Monday night, after suffering from fever for over two years. The funeral will be held to-morrow at the hospital. The interment will be held in the Cemetery of the Holy Sepulchre.

Rosetsky was born in Austria about twenty-three years ago. When the Spanish war broke out he determined to enlist.

On May 13, 1898, he went to Trenton and enlisted in Troop C, Sixth Cavalry. Troop C got into Cuba on June 22. Rosetsky participated in several engagements previous to the battle of San Juan Hill and took part in the storming of the hill. During an engagement a Mauser bullet clipped his blue flannel shirt on the shoulder, while another tore through the sole of his foot and buried itself in his leggins. His campaign hat also had a bullet mark. Rosetsky claimed the honor of being the first American soldier to ford the San Juan Creek.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Col. Morris R. Hamilton.

Col. Morris R. Hamilton, formerly State Librarian, died at his home, in Trenton, yesterday after a long illness. Col. Hamilton was born May 24, 1820, just one year later than Queen Victoria. He always made it a boast that the two had the same birthday. Col. Hamilton was graduated from Princeton in 1839, and three years later was admitted to the bar. In 1849 he took up newspaper work as editor of The Trenton True American. He was elected State Librarian in 1884 and held the position for fifteen years.

Col. Hamilton was born at Oxford Furnace, Sussex County, N. J., May 24, 1820, and was the son of Gen. Samuel R. Hamilton of Trenton, who was Quartermaster General of the State for twenty-five years. He

CHARITY WORKERS OBJECT

Meet to Consider Bill for Reorganizing the State Board.

United in Opposition to the Measure Now Pending at Albany—Resolutions Adopted.

Representatives of every important charitable organization in this city and vicinity met last evening in the Assembly Hall of the United Charities Building and gave expression to their indignation over the proposed reorganization of the State Board of Charities. The most important action of the meeting was the adoption of resolutions condemning the bill now pending in the Legislature which provides for the reorganization of the State Board of Charities, and providing for the appointment of a committee to oppose the passage of the bill. The resolution, offered by Thomas M. Mulry, President of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul of New York, is as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the passage of the bill providing for the reorganization of the State board of Charities (Senate Bill No. 111, Assembly Bill No. 160,) would be detrimental to the best interests of the public and private charitable institutions for the following reasons:

1. There is no economy in the proposed plan.

2. The measure destroys the non political character of the board, and would tend to introduce partisan politics in the management of the public and semi-public institutions of the State.

3. The present system has protected these institutions from the influences of partisan politics for the reason that the present board is solely charging and is practically unpaid.

4. The present system has resulted in important economies in the construction and management of State and local institutions and in other ways.

5. The proposed plan would endanger religious liberties, and destroy the practical safeguards now surrounding the enforcement of vital provisions of various State laws.

6. The measure is apparently unconstitutional.

7. The proposed plan is a subterfuge. It virtually proposes to substitute a single Commissioner for a board of twelve members.

8. The composition of the board is vicious. The single Commissioner, who might be an expert, could be outvoted by the two other members of the board, who are elected to devote their time and energies to other matters.

9. The board should remain a deliberative body.

10. The experience of other States proves that the present system is the best. To change it would be a step backward.

11. The State should be slow to do away with the services of a body of twelve public-spirited citizens who have shown an intelligent, sympathetic, and painstaking interest in the charities of the State.

The following resolution introduced by Homer Folks, Secretary of the State Charities Aid Association, was also adopted:

Resolved, That the Chairman of the temporary committee which called this meeting be, and hereby is, authorized to appoint a committee of twenty, with power to add to its members, of which committee he shall be a member and Chairman, which committee shall be authorized and empowered to take such action as it may deem advisable in opposition to the proposed reorganization of the State Board of Charities.

About seventy-five charitable organizations were represented at the meeting. Among the more prominent were the following: The Catholic Protectory, the Mission of the Immaculate Virgin, the Catholic Home and Bureau for Dependent Children, the Brooklyn Children's Aid Society, the State Charities Aid Association, the United Hebrew Charities, and several Day Nurseries.

R. Fulton Cutting acted as Chairman of the meeting, and introduced the first speaker, George B. Canfield of the State Charities Aid Society. Mr. Canfield said:

"The present system is a good one and that proposed is a bad one. It has been reported in the press that Gov. Odell is irrevocably committed to this measure. I can say to you that this is untrue. Only a few days ago I saw the Governor and talked with him about the bill. He told me that he was not committed to the measure and that his mind was open on the matter. I am sure that if we unite here this evening in expressing our opposition to the bill and acquaint the Governor with our feelings, the bill will not be passed."

Prof. Felix Adler made a speech indorsing the remarks of Mr. Canfield. Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell, who was a member of the State Board of Charities for thirteen years, and Father D. J. MacMahon, Superintendent of Catholic Charities, spoke in a similar vein.

Lee K. Frankel of the United Hebrew Charities also attacked the bill and questioned whether it would effect the economy that was claimed as the chief virtue of the measure.

Among those present were the Rev. Father D. J. MacMahon, Superintendent of the Catholic Charities; Jacob H. Schiff of the Committee of Fifteen, George B. Robinson of the Catholic Protectory, Thomas M. Mulry of the Mission of the Immaculate Virgin, E. J. Butler of the Catholic Home and Bureau for Dependent Children, George F. Canfield, President of the State Charities Aid Society; Homer Folks, Secretary of the State Charities Aid Society; Nathan Bijur, and Lee K. Frankel of the United Hebrew Charities; Prof. Felix Adler, and Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell.

HONORS FOR BRAVE POLICEMEN.

Police Commissioners Dispense Medals and Praise to Three.

A rather unusual and refreshing episode for these troublous days took place yesterday when the Board of Police Commissioners made honorable mention of one policeman and commended two others for personal bravery, besides giving medals to them.

George May, a member of the bicycle squad, was commended for bravery in stopping a runaway at One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street and Eighth Avenue on Dec. 6 last. Policeman David J. Goss of the Fifth Street Station received honorable mention and a medal for jumping into the East River at the foot of East Thirty-second Street on Nov. 12 last and rescuing Capt. John Anslow of the tug Henry A. Peck from drowning. Policeman W. H. Ahrens of the East Twenty-second Street Station received a medal and honorable mention for stopping a runaway team at the corner of Irving Place and Fifteenth Street on Aug. 27 last.

WARRANT FOR NEELY HERE.

The Alleged Embezzler Will Be Taken to Cuba on Saturday.

Charles F. W. Neely, who is charged with embezzling the funds of the Cuban Post Office, will sail for Havana on Saturday on the Ward Line steamer Mexico to stand trial for his alleged crime. United States Marshal Henkel yesterday received the warrant for Neely's extradition from Secretary of State Hay, and he at once ordered Deputy Marshals Daly and Adler to be in readiness to take the prisoner to Havana.

Accompanying the warrant was a letter to Marshal Henkel from Secretary of War Root directing him to take the first available vessel sailing for Havana. Neely, who is now in Ludlow Street Jail, takes the whole matter philosophically, and declares that he will be acquitted when the case comes to trial. He will be tried under the old Spanish law, which is quite different from that of the United States.

"THE LORD WOULD PROVIDE."

So Said Blewitt, but His Wife Invoked the Law for Non-Support.

Possessing an abiding faith that "the Lord would provide" for his wife, Charles J. Blewitt of 87 Fourth Street failed to do so himself, and as a result Mrs. Blewitt had her husband arraigned in the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday to see what the law had to say about it. The wife said that her husband was a "preacher of the Gospel," that he sold soap, and that he compelled her to live in Manhattan, but said the "Lord had told him he must live in Brooklyn." She also said that when she asked him for money to defray her living expenses he invariably replied that "the Lord would provide."

Blewitt told the Court that he was "going about his Father's business."

"The Lord says His children shall take no thought unto themselves what they shall wear or wherewith shall they be fed," continued Blewitt impressively, "and I am trying to keep the letter of the law."

Magistrate Deuel told him that it was the duty of a good Christian to provide for his wife and family, and adjourned the case for one week.

Jersey Live Stock Burned.

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Jan. 23.—Arthur M. Hamblen's barn, one mile south of this place, the largest structure of its kind in the county, was destroyed by fire early this morning. Four horses, eighteen cows, and seventeen hogs perished. The loss will exceed $10,000. The origin of the fire is not known.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

"It's a dangerous proposition to take a tip from a drunken man. No sane man would ever think of doing it. But I wish I had taken one that was bawled all about the corridor of the Fifth Avenue Hotel a couple of weeks ago when American Steel and Wire common stock reached 48 or thereabouts." The speaker was one of the men-about-town class who takes an occasional flier in Wall Street, and who was engaged in conversation about the situation in the steel and wire trades as seen through Wall Street spectacles.

"On the night I speak of there fairly blew into the hotel a well-dressed man who declared he was from Colorado. I reckon he was. He certainly had all the symptoms. His 'jag' was of the Wild Western type. He had all sorts of money, and he produced it from all sorts of pockets. He was good-naturedly drunk, and as he rolled down the corridor toward the café he bellowed at the top of his voice, 'I want to give everybody a real good thing. Sell Steel and Wire at the opening to-morrow morning. There's millions in it, if you press my tip.' No one seemed to know the man, and no one paid much attention to him as he bowled along like a ten-pin with the blind staggers after a hard 'spare.' He continued to declare himself until the porters and the clerks thought him worthy of their attention as a common nuisance who was disturbing the somnolence of the corridors and the politicians. Spoken to, he declared himself to be a millionaire and a mine owner, and produced a roll of bills, fat and of large denominations. This was after he had noisily ordered a case of wine and had invited every one in the house to have a drink with him. He expatiated on his Steel and Wire tip all the time. He was bubbling over with good nature, whisky, and a desire to benefit mankind in general. He was sad when he found the sitters would neither accept his invitation to drink nor pay attention to his tip. He was finally suppressed when invited to leave the hotel by several who didn't like their peace of mind disturbed in this fashion. They suggested to the porters that he was not a guest of the hotel, and was disturbing people who were. This the tipster confessed. Then he attempted to remedy that trouble by going to the desk and asking for a room. From a hip pocket he extracted a roll of bills as big around as John L. Sullivan's biceps in his palmiest days. After much trouble he found a one-dollar note and pushed that over to the clerk in payment for a room. Told that there were no dollar rooms in the house he declined to register, remarking, 'Dollar's 'nuff to pay fer a room to sleep in anywheres.' As he was gently but politely shown to the door he continued to urge his hearers to sell Steel and Wire, assuring them that it was the good thing of the week.

"The next day Steel and Wire tumbled 4 points, and it has been tumbling ever since, but no one, so far as I know, took advantage of the tip the man with the skate had in his possession. Yet it was about a hundred per cent. better than most tips that are floating about. I, for one, have been clubbing myself ever since for not taking the advice of a man who knew what he was talking about. Appearances, except for the great wads of money he had, were all against his maudlin talk being good for anything. If he hadn't kicked about paying more than a dollar for a room perhaps I should have taken a chance on the speculation. But that bit of seeming parsimony steered me off."

"Speaking about taking drunken men's tips reminds me of an incident in the career of that once spectacular person, Count Mitkiewicz," remarked one of the party who occasionally bets on the ponies. "It was at the Sheepshead Bay track a number of years ago, and I went down on the same train with the Count. He was a reckless sort of fellow, as you know. Just at the entrance gate we met a young fellow connected with one of the newspapers, who had taken on about a week's load of rum in one morning, and showed it. The Count had done him some sort of a favor in the interviewing line, and the newspaper man declared that he proposed to make good for the favor by giving the Count some good things in a racing way that afternoon. It rather pleased the Count. But I didn't want any of it. On the newspaperman's advice Mitkiewicz made a fairly liberal bet on the first race and won. I don't remember the names of the horses that ran on that day, except in two instances. Those were 'old Bill' Daly's Count and Florence M. The first, I remember, was at 40 to 1 and the latter at 20 to 1, and both won. Mitkiewicz backed both, still on the tip of his drunken friend. To make a long story short, the Count, trusting implicitly to the advice of his muddled associate, beat every race on the card and two or three horses in some of them, and left the track with $30,000 of the bookmakers' money in his pocket. That's another instance where it paid to follow the advice of a drunken man. I didn't do it, because I was too wise, and I left the track about $500 loser, when I might have made a fortune. Mitkiewicz remembered his newspaper friend by making him a present of $2,500 when the young man got sobered up. With it the writer bought some real estate down Bensonhurst way that now stands him in a good tidy sum. How the reporter with the jag could pick out such good things that afternoon is a mystery I never could solve. But it was just the sort of thing that would catch the fancy of such a fellow as Mitkiewicz. He would have played that Steel and Wire tip to a certainty. But he was the only man I ever knew who would take such chances and win at them."

That St. Valentine's Day is approaching begins to be manifest by the displays in the windows of the little shops on the side streets all over town. Wherever they may be seen to the best advantage dealers show the love tokens with punctured hearts, naked cupids, and maudlin sentiment in bright lettering amid gay colored flowers and bits of lace paper. Children stand about gazing covetously and admiringly at the tokens of affection. Young men and maidens have begun that delicious shopping among these bits of tawdry finery that always precedes the purchase of the one they will finally send to the person the buyer happens to be in love with at the moment. One observant person noted that the forerunner of the mass of these tokens had been displayed even before the call for New Year's cards was yet over. He shrewdly guessed the makers have now combined the New Year's card and the Valentine in one. Most of these combination affairs are of German or Bavarian make, and are imported in large quantities during November. It is to the foreign origin of most of these lace-like affairs that the weird spelling of the love verses is traceable. Your foreign workman as a rule knows little of either English spelling or lettering. He comes as near as he can to the shape of the sentiment. As he knows nothing as to the meaning of the words the result is sometimes very laughable. But that detracts nothing from their merits in the tenement districts where they are chiefly sold, prodding there are enough bleeding hearts, flaming torches, and well-winged Cupids mixed up in the paper lace and sentiment. One of the large dealers in this sort of stuff says they are now very largely sold among the negroes of the South. They are, in fact, the next best customers to the foreign population of the great Northwestern States, where the customs of the old country are ever kept green in the memory of the immigrants.

"Do you know," asked the young lady in the manicure establishment, "that during the run of 'The Gay Lord Quex' we could directly trace business at this establishment to people who had seen the play and there learned for the first time that there were such things as manicure establishments in town? Fact, I assure you. They were not all strangers in New York, either. Many of them were so, visitors at the hotels who had gone to see Mr. Hare, and then came to see us to see if there were any such goings on in these establishments as were represented on the stage. Some men, old enough and gray enough to know better, eyed us as if we were all Sophie Fullgarneys, ready to flirt on the slightest provocation. I had a dozen women customers, if I had one, who looked about the place as if they expected to find a window leading to a corridor and admitting to the room just such another palmist as came to visit Sophie in the story of the stage. One fussy old woman who tried hard to be girlish actually asked me if there was a palmist connected with our parlors. Just imagine! It was really trying, for it brought here a lot of old fellows who wanted to be thought of the Gay Lord Quex type, who tried in their idiotic fashion to be gay with our young ladies. My, but didn't they get a turning down! Some of them got tongue-lashings they will never forget after their smirking and insolent advances. Of course we have a few of the types here every week, people who come to have their nails and hands manicured just to see what it is like. They are all strangers in town. It is plain, however, that they are mere curiosity seekers and not of the type that such plays as 'Lord Quex' brought to the front. As for me, I do hope the play will never be put on at the popular price houses. If it should be there would be an influx of customers that would be simply awful. Imagine turning loose in the manicure parlors all the cheap swells and the giddy romantic girls of the tenement section of town. Horrors!"

TAXES IN BROOKLYN.

President Feitner Makes Known the Assessments Levied on Personal Property.

President Feitner of the Department of Taxes and Assessments made public yesterday the assessments levied in 1901 on personal property owned by many well-known residents of the Borough of Brooklyn. The highest assessment is for $100,000. The highest levied in the Borough of Manhattan was for $5,000,000. The tax officials are making efforts to collect a larger sum in taxes on personal property this year in Brooklyn. The official list follows:

Name.	Amount.	Name.	Amount.
A. Abraham	$100,000	E. F. Luckenbach	5,000
Geo. S. Abbatt	15,000	John McCarty	10,000
H. E. Abell	10,000	H. McLaughlin	20,000
Dean Alvord	5,000	P. H. McCarren	10,000

UPSET COURT'S DIGNITY.

Kloberg Also Tipped Over Witness Chair in Describing a Fight.

A witness in the City Court yesterday not only overturned the witness chair, but also upset the dignity of the Court in his efforts to demonstrate "just how it happened." George Kloberg was the excited and demonstrative witness. He was suing John Von der Born for $2,000 damages for injuries received from an alleged assault which occurred last June. In showing the Court how Von der Born struck him Kloberg succeeded in throwing the witness chair from the stand and incidentally causing Justice Conlan and the jury to smile.

The trouble between Kloberg and Von der Born dates back to December, 1897, when the first assault occurred. The two men occupy the same premises for business purposes at Seventh Avenue and Nineteenth Street.

It was during the cross-examination of Mr. Kloberg that he made the demonstration. He had testified that Von der Born had knocked him down, and when asked to be more specific as to the details arose from the chair, struck himself a blow behind the right ear, kicked over the witness chair, and then fell full length on the floor.

"That was how he did it," cried the witness as he still lay on the floor. Jury, spectators, and even the Justice were laughing at the performance. Kloberg got up and was about to repeat the performance when Justice Conlan restrained him.

During the examination the Justice took exception to several of the questions of counsel, saying, "This is not an action for loss of services."

"No, it is not," interjected Kloberg; "it is a suit for a blow," and as he said this he began to rub his head.

Von der Born in his defense denied the first assault, but as to the trouble which occurred last June he said that Kloberg had started it. A sealed verdict was ordered to be returned this morning.

IS A CAKEWALK A DANCE?

Justices Decide that It Is, and Fine Two "Sacred Concert" Performers.

Actors and actresses of high and low degree, some employed and some not, walked into the Court of General Sessions yesterday to listen to the trial of Edward Marsh and Rose Sartella, two vaudeville artists charged with offending public morals and decency, religious liberty, and conscience by dancing a clog dance and singing a few songs at one of "Ted" Marks's Sunday night sacred concerts at the Grand Opera House on Nov. 18 last. Police Capt. Moynihan, acting under orders from headquarters, had witnessed the "turn" which was in violation, he thought, of the Penal Code.

Representatives of the White Rats of America, the Actors' Church Alliance, the Elks, the Grand Opera House Protective Association, and a delegation of the "Domestic Circle Club," attracted by the bright galaxy of histrionic talent assembled, sat gingerly on the court benches beside hardened hangers-on and "pullers-in" for various lawyers. Capt. Moynihan on the stand stated that Miss Sartella had danced a clog dance with Mr. Marsh, and that both sang songs. The actors denied the allegation relating to the dance.

Munager Springer brought the pedal actions of the pair were not in a clog dance, nor yet quite a cakewalk. It was just a motion of the feet keeping tune with the music, he declared. A cakewalk, in his opinion, had less motion than a dance, and in the latter, he said, the parties thereto swayed and glided more. The Justices looked interested.

"I've always wanted to know," said Justice Jerome as "Ted" Marks took the stand, "if these Sunday concerts really had anything sacred in their composition."

"Why, it was as much a sacred concert as any of the others given in town on Sunday nights," said Mr. Marks, equivocally.

"Were there any sacred songs sung by Miss Sartella?" inquired Justice Jerome.

"Why, yes," returned Mr. Marks. "She sang 'Beyond the Gates of Paradise' and 'Way Down South in Dixie.'" This answer conused the courtroom and "Big Abe," the police-man, rapped in vain for order.

The Justices, after conferring together, decided that a cakewalk was close enough to a dance to warrant them in fining both defendants $10. The fines were paid.

HELENA, ARK., IS VINDICATED.

Jury Says the Town Is Healthy and Mrs. Marshall Loses Her Suit.

Twelve men of New York City have, after due deliberation, decided that Helena, Ark., is a healthy town and that Mrs. Susie A. Marshall is not entitled to $5,000 damages from Simon Seelig of the firm of Seelig, Bruen & Co., because he induced her to go to Helena and take charge of the dress-making department of the store.

The jury did not reach this verdict until it had discussed all the testimony in the case, and even then some of the members of the jury were inclined to award Mrs. Marshall some damages on account of the fact that she testified that she had suffered from malaria as a result of her trip South.

The case has been a most bitterly contested one and the end is not yet. It went to the Appellate Division once on an appeal from the decision of a Justice as to the pleadings and it is probable that it will go to the higher courts again as a result of the verdict which was given before Justice O'Gorman yesterday.

DRESS CAUGHT ON HOOK.

Aged Woman Falls Out of the Window, but Escapes Injury.

BAYONNE, N. J., Jan. 23.—Mrs. Helen Hayes, seventy years of age, of 218 Avenue B, Bayonne, went to a window at 3 o'clock this morning to get fresh air. She leaned out and fell part way out of the window, but her dress caught on a hook. She was discovered by Mrs. Mary Bamon of 222 Avenue B and rescued, being little the worse for her exposure to the night air.

COTTON.—The timidity of the local cotton trade was increased yesterday by an absence of news or business from England, due to the fact that the Liverpool cotton market was closed out of respect to the memory of the dead Queen. There was a sharp bulge in the last half hour on urgent demand from a leading local export house with Philadelphia and Boston connections. At the close the market was steady, with prices net 2 to 9 points higher. Spot cotton closed dull, with quotations unchanged on the basis of 9¾c for middling upland and 10¼c for middling Gulf. Sales, 2,300 bales. BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—The wheat market yesterday was a quiet affair throughout, having only a narrow range of prices, but a steadiness of undertone that resulted in the close being ¼@⅝c higher than the previous night. Except for a little foreign selling at the start, operations were mostly for local account. Sentiment did not appear to have any important tendency one way or the other, waiting on news from the English markets, which adjourned for the day immediately after the opening. Northwest receipts amounted to 254 cars, including 226 cars at Minneapolis. Of the latter 210 cent. was either no grade or rejected wheat. At Spring wheat points arrivals for the day were 397,000 bushels, and at Winter wheat points 156,000 bushels, a total of 553,000 bushels, against a total on the same day last year of 350,000 bushels. Quotations of cash wheat, free on board, afloat basis, were as follows: No. 1 hard, Duluth, 88¾c, nominal; old No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 87¾c; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 86¾c; No. 1 Northern, Chicago, 83¼c; No. 2 red, New York, 79½c, store; No. 2 red, New York, 80¾c, afloat; No. 2 hard, Chicago, 90½c, to arrive; No. 2 hard, New York, 79½c, scarce.

AN ASSURED 7% INVESTMENT
(Interest January and July)
Positive Certainty of Large Additional Dividends.

An exceptional opportunity for safe and unusually profitable investment, in the shares of a Corporation which at present controls prosperous Western properties, and which has extraordinary opportunities for increasing its holdings and earnings, and do so upon an absolutely safe basis.
The investment offered contemplates the purchase of 7 per cent. cumulative preferred stock at par, and with it, full paid and non-assessable common stock, as a part of the same consideration. The payment of the dividends on the preferred stock, when and as stipulated, and commencing with the current year, is fully assured and definitely provided for.
Such Company has the active co-operation and support of one of the most important railway systems of the country, and by recent arrangements is assured of controlling interests in a large number of important dividend earning properties.
The sale of these shares is to enable the Company to acquire the above interests and extend its operations. As the earnings upon industries already under such company's control will provide ample income to pay dividends on the preferred stock, any earnings from these additional properties will go to the common stock, which, it is safe to assert, will commence to earn liberal dividends at a very early day.
A careful investigation will satisfy conservative investors that the Preferred shares offered, afford an absolutely safe investment, and that the common shares promise to, very soon, become very valuable.

Meetings and Elections.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO.
Public notice is hereby given that a special meeting of the stockholders of the Illinois Central Railroad Company will be held at the Company's Office in Chicago, Illinois, on Saturday, January, 26, 1901, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of acting on these five propositions and transacting such other business as may, in connection therewith, come before the meeting.
FIRST—That in order to provide necessary moneys for the purchase of additional cars and locomotive engines needed for the accommodation of the growing traffic on the Company's lines of railway; the construction of additional second tracks, side tracks, and station and terminal facilities; the reduction of grades; the elimination of grade crossings at different places along said railway lines, and other improvements of a permanent character, some of which purchases, additions and improvements have already been undertaken, and for other corporate purposes, the capital stock of the Illinois Central Railroad Company be increased by an issue of 60,000 new shares of $100 each, from 300,000 shares to 660,000 shares of $100 each, thus making the whole capital stock of the Company $66,000,000.
SECOND—That each shareholder shall have the privilege of subscribing at par on or before March 4, 1901, for one share of such new stock, for every ten shares of stock registered in his name on the transfer books of the Company at the close of business on December 29, 1900, and for fractions of shares in like proportion—payment for the new stock to be made in full at the Company's office in the City of New York, on or before Monday, March 4, 1901.
THIRD—That stockholders entitled to subscribe for fractions of shares shall, upon payment therefor, receive scrip convertible into full-paid stock when presented in sums of $100 or multiples thereof, but such scrip shall not draw dividends.
FOURTH—That the shares, or fractions of shares, of the new issue, if any, not subscribed and paid for on or before March 4, 1901, may be disposed of by the Board of Directors at such price, or prices, not less than par, as may be approved by them.
FIFTH—That the new shares shall be entitled to participate in all dividends which may be declared payable after March 4, 1901.
For the purposes of this meeting, the stock transfer books will be closed at 3 P. M. on Thursday, December 20, 1900, and remain closed until the morning of Monday, January 7, 1901.
By order of the Board of Directors.
A. G. HACKSTAFF, Secretary.

BIG FOUR DECLARES DIVIDEND.
Rumors of an Increase Have No Foundation at Present.

The usual semi-annual dividend of 1½ per cent. was declared yesterday by the Board of Directors of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad at a meeting held in the Grand Central Station. There have been some rumors of an increase in the dividend rate. Speaking of these reports M. E. Ingalls, President of the company, said: "There is no probability of any increase in the Big Four dividends at this time, but should the earnings continue in the present volume, something of the kind may be looked for in years to come." Mr. Ingalls also declared that there was no truth in the reports of the absorption of his company by the New York Central or the Lake Shore, as there were legal obstacles in the way of such a plan. A comparative statement of the earnings of the road for the six months ending Dec. 31, 1899, and 1900, shows:

Gross	$9,272,550	$8,076,709
Expenses	6,448,454	5,866,613
Net	$2,824,095	$2,810,096
Fixed charges	1,468,478	1,437,846
Balance	$1,355,617	$1,372,250
Preferred dividend	250,000	250,000
Balance	$1,105,617	$1,122,250

Russian Bonds Exempt from Tax.

It was announced yesterday that the Russian Government had voluntarily exempted the holders of its securities in this country from any income tax charges levied on the basis of the Russian bond holdings. Several million dollars' worth of these securities were placed in the United States recently, of which the New York Life Insurance Company took a large block. The news of the Government's action is confirmed by the New York Life Insurance Company. The arrangements provide that hereafter coupons presented to the National City Bank or to J. P. Morgan & Co., in this city, will be paid without the 5 per cent. deduction for income-tax charges. The provision applies only to American holders and will, it is believed, have an important bearing on future sales of Russian bonds in this country.

Brooklyn Life Insurance Company.

The thirty-seventh annual statement of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company shows that the company during the year has made material increases in its assets and surplus. The former aggregate $1,819,610, and the surplus by New York standard of 4 per cent. is $210,522. The Directorate of the company is made up of men prominent in the business world in Brooklyn, and the conservative character of the company is well known.

Increase in Its Insurance.

The fifty-sixth annual statement of the affairs of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company of Newark, N. J., of which Amzi Dodd is President, sh of four very large boats with a Delaware shipyard holds out the promise of further large tonnage. Among the large structural contracts placed is one of about 8,000 tons for a bridge at Pittsburg. A number of smaller orders have also been taken. Everything points to a very large consumption by the building trade this year. The amount of municipal work, too, is likely to be large. The opinion is expressed in the east-iron pipe trade that this will be the banner year for production.

The leading interest in the wire industry reports that the volume of business is very large and that all the plants are running full.

So far as the exports of iron and steel are concerned, the reports of a number of the large producers indicate that a heavy falling off must be looked forward to. The unsettled financial condition in Great Britain and in Germany has cut off a large number of new enterprises, and inquiries, even for export, have almost disappeared. The letters of leading foreign producers received recently here are very blue as to the outlook.

In the metal trades copper is softening somewhat. What will probably need close watching is the German demand, which developed in such a phenomenal manner in recent years. The nine members of the Anglo-Galena district propose to clear the atmosphere by heroic exports of ore to Europe.

NEW SECURITIES LISTED.

The Committee on Stock List of the New York Stock Exchange yesterday listed the following new securities:

Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg Railway Company—$1,000,000 fifty-year 5 per cent. coupon debenture bonds of 1947, for $1,000 each, No. 1 to 1,000 inclusive.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

A few stocks in the outside market yesterday showed greater activity than was the rule on the earlier days of the week, but the list as a whole did not develop any new life. Further improvement in prices appeared in some parts of the list, a few substantial advances appearing in the final quotations. The day brought very little news to affect prices, which were more influenced by the general advance in the Stock Exchange market than by any other cause.

∴

BRITISH COLUMBIA COPPER again advanced sharply, and at the close showed a net gain of one point. Apparently not much stock was offered for sale, as this advance was made on the purchase of only 300 shares. The highest sale was made at 19⅞, and the stock closed at 19⅝ bid.

∴

UNION COPPER was fairly active and strong. On transactions in over 1,000 shares it sold up to 4¾ and closed at 4¾ bid. A block of stock that was pressing on the market and which caused the recent decline in this stock seemed yesterday to have all been taken, and the stock closed firm at the best price of the day.

∴

DISTILLING OF AMERICA, after declining for several days, yesterday recovered part of the recent loss. The preferred stock closed at 26¼ bid, a gain of 1¼ points over the best bid of Tuesday's close. The common stock was also firmer. Neither issue showed very much activity.

∴

GENERAL CARRIAGE was actively traded in, and on buying by insiders, followed by purchases by traders, advanced to 3½. It closed with a substantial gain at 3¼ bid. In explanation of the company's position with regard to the purchase of its Sixth Avenue property it was said at the office of the company yesterday that the extension of time obtained by the company covers the present year, and that arrangements have already been made to take up the mortgage at the end of that time, if necessary. It is further stated that the General Carriage Company, paid on the property $200,000 in cash, which was one-fifth of the purchase price.

∴

AMERICAN BRIDGE, in common with the rest of the steel stocks, was extremely dull. Neither of the Bridge stocks showed any net change for the day, but one or two of the other issues of this group showed some slight improvement.

∴

CONSOLIDATED EQUIPMENT showed a further slight gain in price, but the trading in the stock was very light. It closed at 11⅜ bid.

∴

ELECTRIC BOAT preferred closed at 50½ bid, a substantial advance over the previous day's price. The common stock was also in better demand, but in neither issue was there much trading.

∴

UNITED RAILWAYS OF ST. LOUIS securities shared in the general dullness, but the bonds and the preferred stock closed with net gains, the former at 80¼ bid and the latter at 71⅞ bid. The only sale of the preferred stock was made at 72.

∴

Closing quotations yesterday compared with those of the previous day were as follows:

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 23.—Boston had a steady market to-day with some increase in interest among the copper shares and a general feeling, noticed everywhere on the street, that the long-hoped-for broadening of activity in coppers was near at hand. The belief is that the Montana troubles in which the Standard Oil is involved are near settlement. Copper shares were firm to-day. Osceola gained 2⅛ to 82, Old Dominion ⅝, to 31½; Quincy, ¼, to 168; Wolverine, 1, to 49; Copper Range, 1, to 38; Isle Royale, 1, to 36. The buying of American Telephone was less pronounced. Erie Telephone trust certificates appeared in the unlisted department at 62. Sugar, Federal Steel, and Tube were much less active than usual, but Chicago, Burlington and Quincy was prominent, as were also Union Pacific and Atchison. Butte eased ½, to 78, and Tri-Mountain, 1, to 20. Mohawk improved 1⅜, to 3⅞, and Parrot 1, to 48¼. Trading was quiet in the afternoon, with unimportant variations in prices.

Money was offered to-day at the Clearing House at 2 per cent., but few loans were made. New York funds sold at par and 5 cents premium.

On call, loans at 3 per cent. are increasing. The strongest borrowers are not paying over 3 per cent. now. There is a good supply at 3½ per cent. Time money is quoted at 3½@4 per cent. for all dates, according to the character of the collateral. Mercantile paper sells from 3½@4 per cent. for the best names.

Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.

At the twentieth annual meeting of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association held yesterday the former Board of Directors and officers were unanimously re-elected. The association ended a prosperous year, and the statement presented showed an increase in assets, income, surplus, and insurance in force.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

Lines Centring at Buffalo Fail to Agree on Exposition Rates.

Representatives of the various railroads which enter Buffalo met yesterday in this city to make rates for the Pan-American Exposition. The object of the meeting was not accomplished, and after a session lasting all day an adjournment was taken until to-day. At the time of the World's Fair at Chicago meetings for the purpose of fixing rates were held every week for nearly four months before an agreement was reached. While at the meetings this year a greater number of rates will have to be considered, it is not believed that the passenger agents will take as much time as they did then.

The passenger agents of lines in the Central Passenger Association came to the meeting yesterday with a schedule of rates already mapped out, but the representatives of the Trunk Line Association were not satisfied with the suggestions. The conference was also attended by James V. Mahoney, Superintendent of the transportation department of the Pan-American Exposition.

On account of the adjournment until to-day the meeting of the Trunk Line Passenger Committee to consider the readjustment of the differentials to Chicago will not be held. At a meeting on Tuesday of the Trunk Line Passenger Committee a rate was adopted of one fare for the round trip to Washington for the inauguration ceremonies on March 4.

The Pennsylvania's New Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 23.—The Directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to-day elected Lewis Nelison Secretary to succeed the late John C. Sims. A. J. County was chosen Assistant Secretary to succeed Mr. Neilson, and Kane S. Green succeeded Mr. County as assistant to the Secretary. Mr. Nelson, the new Secretary, was born in Florence, N. J., in 1860, and has been in the employ of the company since 1881, when he entered the service as a weighing clerk.

Brief Railroad Items.

The Lackawanna Railroad will open a new office on the southwest corner of Broadway and Twenty-eighth Street on May 1. It will be under the general direction of T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent of the company.

At a meeting of the Directors of the Southern Pacific Company held yesterday, John D. Probst was re-elected a Director of the company. Mr. Probst recently resigned to make way for the new President of the company, Charles W. Hays. At a recent meeting of the stockholders an additional Directorship was created, and Mr. Probst was elected to fill it.

A committee of Cincinnati grain merchants has made a report regarding the proposed lease of the Cincinnati Southern. This report advocates the insertion in the lease of a clause requiring the lessees to place and keep the Cincinnati shippers on the same footing with shippers of other Ohio River points. The report also demands a rental of at least 3 per cent. of the cost of the road, and that the offices of the lessee company should be maintained at Cincinnati during the full term of the lease.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Plummer & Shurman have sold for A. Page Smith and others the plot on the south side of Ninetieth Street, 175 feet east of Columbus Avenue, 100 by 100. The buyer is Thomas J. McLaughlin, who will erect an eight-story apartment house on the site.

David Stewart has sold for Jacob D. Butler to Isaac H. Clothier the plot on the west side of West End Avenue, 25.11 feet north of One Hundred and Sixth Street, 125 by 100.

Greene & Taylor have sold for Jeremiah C. Lyons, for $80,000, the new five-story American basement dwelling 44 East Fifteenth Street, 21 by 100.

William Rockefeller is the buyer of the two dwellings 3 and 5 East Fifty-fourth Street. The properties adjoin Mr. Rockefeller's residence at the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street, and it is understood that the purchase has been made to prevent the possibility of undesirable improvement of the two lots.

J. Edgar Leaycraft & Co. have sold for the estate of Henry A. Smith the four-story brownstone-front dwelling 458 and 460 West Forty-fourth Street, on a plot 50 by 100.5. It is reported the purchaser of the property is the Young Women's Christian Association.

William J. Roome has sold for B. A. Hegeman the three-story dwelling 262 West Twenty-fourth Street, 16.8 by 100.

M. L. & C. Ernst have sold, through J. E. Johnson & Co., the two four-story double flats 1,510 and 1,512 Brook Avenue, each 25 by 75 by 100.

Irving I. Kempner has bought from Eliza Amstapp the five-story flat 221 East Forty-sixth Street, 26 by 100.

Tuott & Co. have sold for Louis Lippmann the six-story tenement 406 East Eleventh Street, 25 by 95.

David Stewart has sold for Peter J. McCoy the plot at the northwest corner of Wadsworth Avenue and One Hundred and Eighty-third Street, 50 by 74.

Daniel Birdsall & Co. represented the Thacher estate of Boston in the recent sale of 1,764 to 1,768 Broadway to the Central Realty, Bond & Trust Company.

The General Carriage Company, against which corporation foreclosure proceedings were recently begun affecting the block front on the east side of Sixth Avenue between Forty-third and Forty-fourth Streets, has mortgaged that property to Alexis P. Bartlett in the sum of $35,000, due April 12, 1901.

Results at Auction.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

In the following list "mtg" stands for mortgage and "R S" for revenue stamps. The war revenue law provides that stamps shall be placed on all conveyances at the rate of 50 cents for each $500 of consideration. This "consideration" has been held to mean only the equity above the mortgage, except in the rare cases where the purchaser assumes payment of the mortgage. The amount of the mortgage plus 1,000 times the value of the revenue stamps on the conveyances should therefore show the true consideration:

SAVED VESSEL BECOMES SALVOR.

Court Decision Favors Steamship for Services to Tug That Helped Her.

The very unusual nautical case of a saved vessel becoming salvor was adjudicated by Judge Brown in the United States Circuit Court yesterday when he handed down a decision awarding salvage to the German steamship St. George for services rendered the steam tug I. J. Merritt last October. The St. George ran aground at Daiquiri, Cuba, last September, and a contract was made with the Merritt & Chapman Wrecking Company to get her off for 90 per cent. of the value recovered. The St. George was floated and taken to Santiago for repairs. She was then taken in tow by the Merritt and started for New York.

On the way the Merritt met with an accident, losing her smoke stack and wrecking her boilers. Then the rejuvenated St. George turned salvor and towed the Merritt into Nuevitas. The St. George afterward came to New York by other means and sued for $35,000, the value of the Merritt being about $80,000.

Judge Brown decides that the steamship is entitled to $855 for salvage.

OWNERS OF PROPERTY

Don't wait till the market is over before asking your tenants their intentions. Have it settled with them all the first week of February—or before if you can.

The best business people are early in the field for homes. That's the kind you want for tenants, and will get if you follow my advice.

CALLS WITNESS A SPY

Lawyer in Whitehead Divorce Suit Attacks "Farmer" Scott.

Scores Him for Accepting Mrs. Whitehead's Hospitality and Selling Information.

Mrs. Elizabeth S. Whitehead applied to Justice Truax in the Supreme Court yesterday for $1,500 counsel fees and $150 a week alimony pending the trial of an action for an absolute divorce brought against her by her husband, Lydell Whitehead, President of Whitehead Brothers' Company, a corporation which deals in sand. Counsel for Mrs. Whitehead criticised Mr. Whitehead and his methods of starting the action for divorce.

The couple were married about four years ago. At that time Mr. Whitehead had two children by his first wife and the second Mrs. Whitehead looked after these children. According to the lawyer, the family lived at the rate of $25,000 a year, spending their summers at Saratoga. It was in August last that Mr. Whitehead accused his wife of wrongdoing. She denied the accusation. "Some time later the plaintiff," said the lawyer, "served his wife with a summons and complaint in this suit; and, probably believing that this innocent and unsophisticated woman would act upon his advice, told her it would not be necessary for her to retain a lawyer, intimating that everything would be arranged without her appearance in the action at all."

The lawyer further said that Mrs. Whitehead, accompanied by her stepdaughter, who was nineteen years old, came to New York, and then Mrs. Whitehead went to live with some of her own relatives.

Counsel for Mr. Whitehead declared that the papers in the case had been served regularly, and that ever since the separation Mrs. Whitehead had been receiving $25 a week from her husband. He argued that the papers in the case showed that John Frederick Thomas was the co-respondent, and that the very best of evidence was obtainable to show the wrongdoing of Mrs. Whitehead. He cited as his best witness "Farmer" Scott, who was a campaign orator. Mr. Scott was a friend of the Whitehead family. Mrs. Whitehead's counsel grew angry at the close of the argument of his opponent.

"These cultured people, these charming friends of Mr. and Mrs. Whitehead, are worthy of having their testimony relied upon," he cried. "We have 'Farmer' Scott, the Bryan orator, acting the spy and then, Judaslike, jingling in his pockets the thirty pieces of silver he has obtained for his information. These are the people of charming, refined, and humane instincts who partake of the hospitality of this defendant, associate with her for months after these say they have noticed her wrongdoing, and then come here with their untrue affidavits. Why, they are a disgrace even to the Arabs, for the Arabs will not eat a person's salt and then stab him in the back. I say their affidavits are not to be weighed in the balance with that of this innocent woman, whose character has been so grossly attacked."

The application for the alimony was based on the declaration that Mr. Whitehead's income was $50,000 a year. Justice Truax reserved his decision.

SAYS SHE WAS HYPNOTIZED.

Charles N. Shaw Charged with Alienating the Affections of Richard K. Stewart's Wife.

Charles N. Shaw, employed as a clerk in the office of Controller Robert S. Jordan, at Jersey City, was yesterday arrested by Sheriff Ruempler, at whose office he gave bail bonds in $4,000. Mr. Shaw is defendant in a suit for $10,000 damages brought in the Supreme Court at Trenton by Richard K. Stewart of 16 Rector Street, Newark. Shaw is charged with alienating the affections of Sarah Day Stewart, wife of the complainant. The case was sent to Supreme Court Commissioner Bigelow at Newark, who issued the order of arrest.

In the affidavit supporting the application Stewart alleges that he first became aware of his wife's infatuation for Shaw in April last. He left her at once and began suit for divorce on April 20. A few days later his wife appealed to him, saying that Shaw had exercised over her a hypnotic influence which she could not resist. She promised, however, to be a true wife to him in future. He believed and forgave her, and discontinued his divorce suit.

They lived happily until December last, when he found that his wife was again meeting Shaw. On Dec. 29 his wife left home and he, with his friends, George H. Odell and Alfred Short, followed her. They traced her to a hotel at Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth Street, Manhattan, where she was met by Shaw. They registered as "E. J. Roberts and wife."

Odell and Short corroborated this by affidavits, further alleging that they had great difficulty in preventing Stewart from shooting Shaw at the interview with Mrs. Stewart and Shaw, which followed. Shaw refused to talk of the matter or say what his defense would be.

THE BATHGATE DIVORCE SUIT.

Vice Chancellor Emery Advises that It Shall Be Refused.

It was announced in Jersey City yesterday that Vice Chancellor Emery of Newark, who heard the testimony in the divorce suit brought by James N. Bathgate of Hackensack, a clerk in the Park National Bank, Manhattan, against Grace, his wife, had filed an opinion advising Chancellor Magie to refuse the decree asked for.

The Vice Chancellor vindicates Leland M. Atwood, the alleged co-respondent, from all wrong in the matter. He also holds that the testimony given by Avice Carter, Mrs. Bathgate's companion, should be thrown out. He advises that the custody of the three-year-old daughter of the couple shall be awarded to Mrs. Bathgate, and that Bathgate shall be required to provide for the child's support.

THE WITTHAUS DIVORCE CASE.

Supreme Court Justice Dickey granted to Mrs. Blye F. Witthaus yesterday through her counsel, Howe & Hummel, an order opening the decree of divorce obtained by Mrs. Witthaus from her husband, Prof. Rudolph A. Witthaus, the well-known toxicologist and chemical expert, in 1898, and granting to the lawyers permission to inspect the testimony given at the hearing before the referee and all other papers in the case they may desire to see. Justice Dickey's order was filed with the Clerk of the Supreme Court of Westchester County at White Plains yesterday.

It is granted upon affidavit of Mrs. Witthaus's counsel, who allege that the decree was obtained contrary to their client's expressed instructions to her attorney, and that at the time of the hearing she was under the influence of narcotics and drugs to such an extent that she was not responsible for her actions. Mrs. Witthaus, say Howe & Hummel, is in ignorance of what testimony she gave at the hearing before the Referee, and does not know upon what ground the decree was granted her.

Mrs. Witthaus, it is understood, has instructed her lawyers to apply to the Supreme Court for an order setting aside or modifying the decree of absolute divorce obtained by her April 7, 1898. Mrs. Witthaus is now receiving no alimony from her husband, having accepted from him, after the decree of absolute divorce was granted, two life insurance policies for $5,000 each and $1,000 in cash in full settlement of all claims for alimony. Mrs. Witthaus alleges that at the time she agreed to this arrangement she was incapable of properly understanding the contents or effects of the documents she signed. She expresses her willingness to bring into court the sum she received in case the Court should decide to entertain her proposed motion.

David May of Howe & Hummel, who has Mrs. Witthaus's case in charge, refused to discuss it last night. "I can say nothing at the present time," said he, "and until we read the Justice's order and examine the testimony, I cannot say what line of action we will pursue."

"Were the drugs Mrs. Witthaus says she was suffering from self administered?"

"I can't say whether they were taken upon advice of a physician, at the present time, or not."

The Witthaus domestic troubles began in 1896, when Prof. and Mrs. Witthaus separated. Dec. 8, 1896, Prof. Witthaus brought suit for divorce. His wife brought a counter-suit, and after both were discontinued, at various times brought three other suits, obtaining an absolute decree two years ago.

In 1898 she charged in an affidavit that Prof. Witthaus tried to poison her with medicine, which he said was for malaria, on the occasion of her departure for Europe. Prof. Witthaus pronounced his wife's statement a tissue of lies.

THE BIRLEY DIVORCE SUIT.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 23.—Vice Chancellor Emery heard testimony to-day in the divorce suit brought by Frank J. Birley of Hackensack against his wife Hattie, on statutory grounds. "Ed A." is named in the suit. That is the signature on letters sent from Dobbs Ferry to "M. Hilton," which is alleged to be the fictitious name under which Mrs. Birley hired a mail box.

The Vice Chancellor refused to admit in evidence several letters addressed to M. Hilton, which had been found in the letter box, until they should be shown to belong to the defendant.

"It must be shown," said the Court, "that these letters belong to the defendant before they can be admitted as valid evidence. There is nothing to show that they were intended for Mrs. Birley."

The plaintiff is a son of Edward Birley, a wealthy contractor, who is an officer of the First Methodist Church at Hackensack. The defendant was prominent in church work in Hackensack, and was the editor of the Church Advocate, a publication issued in the interests of the church and church society.

TAKES UP HUSBAND'S PRACTICE.

Mrs. Franklin Pierce Now in Charge of His Private Law Business.

While Franklin Pierce is acting as an assistant under District Attorney Philbin Mr. Pierce's wife is conducting his regular law business at his office, 31 Nassau Street. Mrs. Pierce will not appear in the courts to argue cases, but she will prepare briefs and look after the office practice. This is one of the first cases in the memory of New York lawyers where a man's wife was able to go into his office and look after his legal business.

Mr. and Mrs. Pierce were married some seven years ago, and it was at the suggestion of Mr. Pierce that his wife took up the study of law. Mrs. Pierce was graduated from the New York University Law School in 1897, and took the Post Graduate course and her Master's degree the next year. For two years she was one of the regular lecturers before the Women's Legal Educational Society. Mrs. Pierce has regularly been in her husband's office ever since she was admitted to the bar.

Amherst Alumni Dinner.

The Amherst Association of New York will hold its annual dinner at Sherry's this evening. The college will be represented by its President, George Harris, and there will also be addresses by Thomas B. Reed, the Rev. Dr. E. Winchester Donald of Boston, and others. The Rev. Dr. H. P. Dewey will speak for the Williams College alumni.

Gov. Odell at Dartmouth's Dinner.

Gov. Odell has accepted an invitation to speak at the thirty-seventh annual meeting and dinner of the Dartmouth College Association at Delmonico's to-morrow evening. Other speakers will be Dr. Tucker, President of Dartmouth; Judge Edward W. Hatch, John H. Wright of Harvard, Charles D. Adams of Dartmouth, Representative Samuel W. McCall of Massachusetts, and Representative David J. Foster of Vermont.

ACTION FOR LIBEL FAILS.

Emil Loewenthal Loses His Suit Against The New York Times.

The case of Emil Loewenthal against THE NEW YORK TIMES, in which the plaintiff sought to recover $10,000 damages for the publication of alleged libelous matter, was heard yesterday in Part III. of the Supreme Court before Justice Scott and a jury. The jury after a few minutes' deliberation brought in a verdict for the defendant.

The alleged libelous article appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES of June 10, 1900, and was occasioned by the fact that on June 7 Loewenthal at an auction sale of real estate in the Trinity Building Salesroom made a bid of $103,000 for a piece of property and left the salesroom without paying the 10 per cent. cash required under the terms of sale or taking other steps to complete his purchase.

Peter F. Meyer in commenting upon this and other instances of default by auction bidders said that he thought it might have a wholesome effect upon auction dealings if "a couple of such bidders could be landed in jail." This remark was quoted in THE TIMES, and, while it did not refer specifically to Loewenthal, he complained that it had been made the basis of inferences which had damaged his standing and reputation to the extent of $10,000.

At yesterday's trial Loewenthal endeavored to justify his default by saying that he had been bidding for a client, who had failed to stand by his agreement to take the property. THE NEW YORK TIMES, through its counsel, Wallach & Cook, showed that the published account was an exact statement of what had taken place, and Peter F. Meyer on the witness stand said that he had made the remark attributed to him, and that it represented his views on the subject correctly. Under cross-examination by Mr. Wallach relative to the business standing of the plaintiff, the latter admitted that several judgments had been recorded against him.

MORE OF MURRAY H. HALL.

Mr. Unger Recalls the Time When "He" Served as a Juror.

Murray H. Hall, the Tammany politician, bondsman, and man-about-town, whose recent death revealed the fact that for twenty-five years she had successfully posed as a man, also enjoyed, according to ex-Assistant District Attorney Unger, who knew her well, the unique distinction of serving on a petit jury in General Sessions.

Mr. Unger does not recall the case nor the exact time, but has a distinct recollection that Hall served during one term of court several years ago as a juror. Unless the jury disagreed in the case in which she served, her presence on the jury it is said would invalidate the verdict.

Mr. Unger in cleaning out his desk yesterday brought to light a letter from Hall written to him between 1895 and 1898, in which Hall expresses "his" gratitude for Mr. Unger's kindness for service rendered. Hall also speaks of a time when "he" was drugged and robbed and taken to Mr. Unger's office by the man who made the attack and "made a show of."

Mr. Unger said that the letter referred to either an occasion when Hall had gotten into trouble with a policeman during a "slight jag" when through Mr. Unger's intervention the case was dismissed in the Police Court, or to the arrest of Hall for perjury in 1895. He inclined to the latter idea. Hall had given bail for several persons to the Bail Clerk of General Sessions, pledging property on Van Cortlandt Avenue, near St. George's Crescent. This property was held to stand in "his" wife's name, and Hall was brought before Recorder Goff Nov. 22, 1895, on a charge of perjury. In default of bail, Hall was committed to the Tombs, and remained in prison a week before securing a bondsman.

Recorder Goff recollected the incident and recalled Hall as a wrinkled old man with a notorious reputation for giving straw bail in Police Courts and elsewhere.

LEGAL NOTES.

STEPS TO BASEMENT UNPROTECTED.—Michael Walsh fell to his death, in the night time, down the steps of an entrance to the basement of the premises in this city owned at the time by one Duncan. The latter had leased the store and basement to John H. Hanan, and others, who in turn had leased the basement to Abramson. Johanna Brogan, as administratrix of Walsh, in her suit against Hanan and others for damages for the death of her intestate, complained that the defendants negligently and unlawfully failed to protect the entrance by gates, or by chains, or by "burning light over the steps," as required by a city ordinance. It appeared that these safeguards had never been installed. Judgment rendered in favor of the defendants on the trial was affirmed by the Appellate Division in Brooklyn. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff had released Duncan, under seal, from all liability. The Court of Appeals, by Justice Jenks, that at the time of the accident the basement and store were leased to tenants who, in turn, sublet the basement, the owner and the tenants were joint feasors, and the general release of the owner operated to discharge the tenants from liability, although the releasc in terms assumed to preserve such liability. A covenant by the tenants to repair, contained in the release, even if construed to extend to the defect in question, was held not to inure to the benefit of the injured person.

COLD STORAGE WAREHOUSEMAN.—Isaac P. Sutherland, and another, in the Spring of 1894, without an express contract, temporarily stored 778 crates of eggs in the cold storage warehouse of the Albany Cold Storage and Warehouse Company, in the City of Albany, to be taken out at any time when the market might warrant. The owners had access to the warehouse at all times, and from time to time inspected and handled the eggs, and were aware of the daily temperature of the storage rooms and of the facilities of the plant and its capacities as to temperature. In a suit by Sutherland against the company for damages to the eggs because of the rise in temperature in the storage department, the Referee found that this rise in temperature was solely attributable to natural causes—the melting of the ice. A judgment dismissing the complaint was affirmed by the Appellate Division, in Albany, which held, by Justice Kellogg, that the warehouseman was not liable for damages to the eggs caused by his failure to maintain a uniform or certain degree of temperature in the storage room, where in order to do so, he would be required to refill his ice house with ice during the Summer months.

CIVIL SERVICE EVASIONS

May Result in Charges Against City Department Heads.

Mr. McAneny Makes Public Some Discoveries of the Civil Service Reform Association.

The Civil Service Reform Association has discovered evasions of the civil service laws which are likely to lead to important developments. Secretary McAneny made public yesterday a statement of the abuses which have been discovered in the municipal service. About the only places now exempt from civil service examinations are for laborers. Secretary McAneny asserts that the Tammany officials have been appointing men as "laborers" and then evading the law by "promoting a laborer" to a position of responsibility at a higher salary.

With the monthly pay rolls of each department it is required that the head shall swear that each employe has been engaged wholly in the duties of the position for which he was appointed. It was said yesterday that the irregularities found by the Civil Service Reform Association may lead to serious charges against some heads of departments.

Secretary McAneny's public statement is in part as follows:

Owing to the difficulty in discovering these illegal assignments, and the failure of the Civil Service Commission as yet to provide any adequate remedy when cases have been brought to its attention, this practice, unless soon checked, is likely to spread seriously.

In the Summer of 1900, for instance, it was pointed out to the Municipal Commission that its roster, as well as that published by the Department of Docks and Ferries, showed but two male attendants at the recreation piers who had come in through civil service examination. The rest were evidently borne on the rolls as "cement workers." But beyond docking one laborer's pay for one week, and that of others for a fortnight, the commission in this case did practically nothing. Curiously enough, an investigation shows that this state of affairs in regard to the recreation piers has been brought to the attention of the commission each Summer for the past three years, generally through some person who went to the trouble to pass an examination for the position, and then found that he was never to be called upon because some laborer, appointed for an entirely different purpose, was occupying the place.

A case of assignment in the Department of Public Buildings, Lighting, and Supplies, involving three of the best positions of janitor in the city, has just reached a final conclusion, which shows how slight a restraint is placed on the abuse to-day. A complaint was made to the commission on June 26 last, through the Civil Service Reform Association, that three "foreman laborers," Edward Coppers, Thomas P. McGlynn, and Edward A. Schneer, were acting as janitors of the Criminal Courts Building, the Jefferson Market Court, and the Essex Market Court. Coppers not only received a salary of $1,200, but occupied the janitor's quarters in the Criminal Courts Building. The commission hesitated to use its power to withhold the pay of these three men—its only effective method of enforcing the rules—but referred the complaint to Commissioner Kearnsy, and his reply back to the association, for consideration.

No appointments were made, however, and, presumably, Coppers, McGlynn, and Schneer continue to act as janitors without pay. Much to the surprise of those interested in the case, the commission advertised a new examination for janitors, to be held on Oct. 22, although the existing list still contained some forty names. Coppers and Schneer both made application to enter the examination, and on the resulting list, published Dec. 17, Coppers, as a veteran, stood fourth, and Schneer forty-sixth.

Three janitors, including Coppers, have been appointed from this list at an annual salary of $800 each. Coppers has been assigned to the position he had illegally held in the Criminal Courts Building, and the two others to the Essex and Jefferson Market Courts. But neither McGlynn nor Schneer has, at last reports, been displaced at these courts, each remaining as "foreman;" Schneer receives more salary than the janitor placed over him.

Ohio Society to Have a "Ladies' Night"

Distinguished Ohioans will act as entertainers at an informal "ladies' night" to be held by the Ohio Society of New York at its rooms in the Waldorf-Astoria Monday evening. There will be musical and literary features, and the evening will close with a collation. Among those whose names appear on the programme are Mrs. Ida Eckert Lawrence, the authoress, of Toledo; Mrs. Eliza Archard Conger, formerly of Cincinnati, who has recently returned from extensive travels, and Miss Clara Bernetta, a native of the same city, who has completed a European course of training for the operatic stage.

SENATE TAX REDUCTION BILL

Measure Reported Lowers War Revenue by $40,000,000.

Removes Telegraph and Express Receipt Tax, Retains Stamps on Checks, and Fixes the Charge on Beer at $1.50 per Barrel.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Senator Aldrich, (Rep., R. I.) Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, to-day reported the War Revenue Reduction bill back to the Senate. The committee reports a complete substitute for the bill as it passed the House. Senator Aldrich made a statement explaining the changes, which are as follows:

Stamp Taxes Repealed—Promissory notes, mortgages, bills of lading for export, powers of attorney, protest, charter party, certificates of all kinds, leases, warehouse receipts, telegraphic dispatches, telephone messages, passage tickets costing less than $30, express receipts, freight receipts, bonds, except bonds of indemnity, and legacies to religious, charitable, literary, or educational institutions.

Special Taxes Repealed—Commercial brokers.

The statement says:

"Having always in view the revenue requirements of the Government, the purpose of the committee has been to repeal such of the taxes imposed by the War Revenue act of 1898 as are most annoying and burdensome to taxpayers, to retain such as should be kept as a permanent part of our revenue system, or at least retained until all war taxes can be repealed, and to reduce all others as fairly and equitably as possible by some general plan of reduction. Pursuing this general plan, it has been possible to reduce the taxes affected approximately one-half.

"Taking the estimates of the Treasury Department as a basis, the reduction of revenue effected by the bill will be nearly $40,000,000, a reduction somewhat less than was produced by the bill as it passed the House of Representatives."

The committee's substitute provisions in regard to cigars, tobacco, beer, &c., are as follows:

That on and after July 1, 1901, the internal revenue tax on cigars weighing more than three pounds per 1,000 shall be $3.30 per 1,000.

That on and after July 1, 1901, there shall be allowed a discount of 25 per centum on all sales by collectors to dealers in and manufacturers of tobacco and snuff upon the stamps provided for the payment of internal revenue taxes upon beer and manufactured tobacco and snuff, provided that the discount allowed to brewers upon beer stamps shall be in lieu of the discount of 7½ per centum allowed by the act June 13, 1898. The effect is to reduce the beer tax to $1.50 per barrel, and on snuff and tobacco to 9 cents a pound.

There is a general reduction of the tax on insurance policies and renewals, and it is provided that, in lieu of the present taxes, special taxes shall be imposed to be paid by the insurance companies, as follows: Life insurance companies, 2 cents on the amount insured for each $100 or fraction of every policy. This provision is modified by the following proviso:

That in all policies for life insurance only, issued on the industrial or other weekly or monthly payment plan of insurance, the tax to be paid shall be 2½ per centum of the amount of the first weekly premium, or 5 per centum of the amount of the first monthly premium. And provided further, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to any fraternal, beneficial society, or order, or farmers' purely local cooperative company or association or employes' relief association operated on a lodge system or local co-operative plan, organized and conducted solely by the members thereof for the exclusive benefit of its members and not for profit.

Marine, inland, fire, casualty, fidelity, and guaranty insurance companies, one-fourth of 1 per cent of the gross premium receipts, purely co-operative or mutual fire insurance companies, to be exempted.

All insurance companies are to be required to make annual returns to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the returns required being such as will enable the Commissioner to levy and collect from the companies the taxes required to be paid by them. In case of the non-payment of the special taxes levied against insurance companies, it is provided that the delinquent company shall, besides being liable for the payment of double the amount of such special tax, be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and upon prosecution thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $500. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to examine books and accounts of companies he suspects are making false returns.

The rate on conveyances, including deeds to land, is materially reduced. In the existing law all deeds covering values exceeding $100 are taxed at the rate of 50 cents. The Senate committee removes the tax on all deeds where valuations are below $2,500, and makes the tax rate 25, instead of 50 cents. For each additional $500 above $2,000 the tax is to be 25 cents.

The tax on bankers is fixed at the rate of $1 on each $1,000 of capital and surplus used by them.

Section 29 of the existing law, pertaining to proprietary articles, including drugs, perfumeries, &c., is practically rewritten. The language of the first portion of the section is allowed to stand, except that perfumeries and cosmetics are eliminated. The proviso, as reported, provides:

No stamp tax shall be imposed upon any uncompounded drug or chemical wherein the person making, uttering, or vending the same does not have, or claim to have, an exclusive right to the making or preparing of the same, or does not have, or claim to have any proprietary right in the exclusive or special use of the name or title thereof, or upon any uncompounded drug or chemical not made, uttered, or vended under any letters patent issued in this or any foreign country. And provided, further, that no stamp tax shall be imposed upon any medicine or medicinal preparation compounded according to a formula in the United States Pharmacopoeia or the National Formulary of an edition not earlier than the year eighteen hundred and ninety, when such medicine or preparation is designated on the package or inclosure thereof by its true and correct name or title as denomination and page of such Pharmacopoeia or National Formulary as aforesaid, and when the edition and page or such Pharmacopoeia or Formulary containing the formula of such preparation or medicine is conspicuously given on the package thereof.

Nor shall any stamp tax be imposed upon any medicine or medicinal preparation which bears conspicuously upon the package or label thereof proprietors as a remedy or specific for any disease or ailment.

Further provision is made that no taxes shall be imposed on physicians' prescriptions for individuals.

In the rates of taxation on proprietary articles, as fixed in Schedule B of the existing law, there are material reductions, and various other changes, including the elimination from the tax list of all perfumeries and cosmetics, chewing gum and substitutes therefor, and sparkling or other bottled wines. On patent medicines the tax is reduced to one-tenth of 1 cent on articles the retail price of which does not exceed 10 cents. An additional tax of one-twentieth of 1 cent is fixed on each additional 5 cents' value or fractional part thereof.

A separate section exempts bequests or legacies for uses of religious, literary, charitable, or educational purposes from taxation under this law, and it makes the provision retroactive on all such legacies on which the tax has not been collected.

The discount of 1 percentum on sales of adhesive stamps, authorized by Section 25 of the present law, is made applicable to imprinted stamps on bank checks, drafts, or other instruments.

Most of the articles upon which the existing tax is repealed were included in the House list, the difference being that the Senate committee's list is not so long or numerous as that of the House. Among the taxes which the House removed entirely, but upon which the Senate committee did not act, and which therefore remain, are the following:

Custom House brokers, proprietors of theatres, circuses, and other places of amusement, bank checks, drafts or bills of exchange, both inland and foreign, money orders, brokers' contracts, and manifests for Custom House entry. All these taxes are left as in the existing law. The Senate provision in regard to steamship passage tickets leaves the existing tax upon all tickets costing more than $30. The House repealed the entire tax. The House removed all proprietary medicines and other proprietary articles, including perfumery, cosmetics, and chewing gum, from the taxable list. The Senate modified this action with reference to medicines only.

RUIN THREATENS A TOWN.

Parsons (Penn.) Stands Over a Mine Which Is Caving In.

Special to The New York Times.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., Jan. 24.—The town of Parsons, near here, is in danger of suffering severe damage as well as having its chief industry destroyed. It has been discovered that the Laurel Run Mine, over the workings of which is the business part of the town, is going to cave in soon, and there is apparently no way of preventing it. The officials made the discovery a few days ago, and are now getting out the cars, the rails, and everything they can that is of value. The affected portion of the mine is in its central part, and it is believed to be impossible to prevent it caving by even the most elaborate propping.

The mine is now squeezing so vigorously that the cave-in is feared at any time. It is a very old working, and some years ago was abandoned by its owners. Then it was leased by the Laurel Run Company and a lot of coal has been mined. This has weakened the pillars and has resulted in the danger of the cave-in. The veins are near the surface, and if the cave occurs the surface will doubtless go down also, and if it does it is feared there will be great damage to property. The mine will probably be abandoned, and most of the residents of the town will be without work.

VENEZUELA STATES HER CASE.

Officially Says the Asphalt Dispute Is an Issue Solely Between the Rival Companies.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Senor Don Augusto F. Pulido, the Venezuelan Chargé d'Affaires, was asked to-day as to the reported impending arrival in Washington of Fabricio Conde, stated in the press dispatches to be an accredited official envoy from the Venezuelan Government, bearing representations relative to the asphalt dispute, to be presented to the State Department. He said he had not been advised officially as to the fact of Mr. Conde's mission. Naturally, if such an envoy makes his appearance in this city, he will be presented to Secretary Hay by Mr. Pulido, but as yet the latter has had no word as to Mr. Conde's reported mission to the United States.

The steamship La Caracas, which arrived in this country Tuesday from La Guayra, brought official communications from Dr. E. Blanco, the Venezuelan Minister of Foreign Affairs, to Charge Pulido. They make strong representations as to the strict neutrality which the Venezuelan Government has observed all through the asphalt controversy, which is set forth as being solely an issue between the rival companies themselves, and not one involving the Government.

Dr. Blanco's letters also comment upon the appearance of the American warships at La Guayra, and while expressing surprise at this threatening attitude of the United States Government, presume that the action was brought about by the too vigorous statements of the asphalt companies, and, as he believed, a misrepresentation of the facts.

Mr. Pulido to-day received a letter from the Venezuelan Consul General at New York, saying that the latest reports from Venezuela indicate a very peaceful condition throughout the entire country.

A brief cablegram from Commander Sargent of the gunboat Scorpion, announces that he sailed yesterday from La Guayra for Curacao. It is his purpose to take on a supply of coal at the latter port, and it is probable that he will return to La Guayra The Commander makes no reference to the existence of any trouble at La Guayra, hence it is inferred that conditions in Venezuela are quieter.

DECISION IN ICE TRUST CASE.

Appellate Division Grants Application of Attorney General for Review by the Court of Appeals.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—The Appellate Division has handed down a decision in the matter of the application of Attorney General Davies to have the Court of Appeals review the decision of the lower court in the Ice Trust matter. It decides that the Attorney General can go to the upper court and appeal from the adverse decision given in the lower court.

The Court of Appeals will decide whether the proceedings instituted against the American Ice Company for alleged violations of the anti-trust laws of the State shall be continued, and will decide incidentally whether or not the Donnelly anti-trust law is constitutional.

The proceedings were instituted against the American Ice Company in May, 1900, when Justice Chase of the Third Judicial District, on the application of Mr. Davies, issued an order appointing Mr. Nusshaum as referee to examine Charles W. Morse and other officials of the American Ice Company for the purpose of obtaining testimony as to whether the company is an illegal trust in restraint of trade.

The first question submitted to the Court of Appeals relates to that act. The Attorney General has held that the act of Justice Chase was one of judicial discretion, while the attorneys for the trust maintained that it was ministerial, thus claiming that it was a non-judicial duty, and that the provisions of the Donnelly anti-trust law which authorized it were unconstitutional. The Appellate Division, when the case was before that tribunal, decided that the law was unconstitutional for that reason.

Attorney General Davies will take the case to the Court of Appeals at once, but it is probable that it will not be argued before that tribunal until the March Term.

MRS. THOMAS C. PLATT ILL.

Mrs. Thomas C. Platt, wife of the Senator, is quite ill at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and her condition causes much anxiety. Mrs. Platt suffers from heart trouble, and was very seriously ill some months ago.

Senator Platt arrived from Washington last night. He declined to talk with reporters, excusing himself on the ground that he was very much fatigued.

When a message was sent to his rooms later inquiring as to the condition of Mrs. Platt he returned the missive with the message, "No answer."

Harry B. Platt said over the telephone that he had not seen his mother during the day, but expected her to be about in a few days.

CALLS SHAMROCK II. A SURE WINNER

Mr. Barrie, Fresh from England, Asserts Sir Thomas's Belief.

WORK ON THE CHALLENGER

Secrecy Maintained as to Her Progress —Kaiser Wilhelm May Be Here to See the Cup Races.

That Shamrock II. will recapture the America's Cup, that there is a possibility of the Kaiser coming over to view the races, and that Sir Thomas Lipton is leaving no stone unturned in his efforts to get a boat that will carry back across the Atlantic the coveted trophy of American yachting supremacy were a few of the things that David Barrie, Sir Thomas's American representative, discussed when he landed from the White Star liner Oceanic yesterday morning. Mr. Barrie sailed from New York the day after Christmas in answer to a request from Sir Thomas to come over for a consultation in reference to matters that are at present, and will so remain for a few months to come, uppermost in that popular sportsman's mind.

When Mr. Barrie landed yesterday he lost no time in informing his many friends who greeted him at the pier that this time the America's Cup will return to England, after so many years of defeat.

"Well, I guess Sir Thomas thinks he has got a mortgage on the cup this time, sure," suggested a friend to Mr. Barrie soon after he landed from the Oceanic.

"Well, I suppose he has some very strong presentiments in that line, as this little message to his friend on this side will indicate." And, reaching into his pocket, Mr. Barrie produced the following telegram that had been handed him at Queenstown when the Oceanic touched at that port en route. The message read:

Wish you bon voyage, pleasant company, and safe return to America's hospitable shores. Remember me kindly to all my friends and say that I will be over later for that little piece of family plate.

Referring to the work on the new challenger, which has been reported as being somewhat behind, he said that he was not at liberty to talk on that subject, adding:

"I may say, though, that Ratsey has the sails all finished, but I am not privileged to talk as to how far the construction of Shamrock II. has progressed. I did not see the racer, and I may add that Sir Thomas has not had a view of her himself so far as I know

GREAT SECRECY MAINTAINED.

"Naturally the greatest secrecy is being maintained by Mr. Watson, her designer, and no one is permitted within the inclosure where she is building without the highest credentials. Watson has learned some lessons through past experiences, and he is in consequence proceeding with great caution. As for the spars of the new boat they will, of course, be built of steel plates. Saturday a week ago I went to Glasgow to represent Sir Thomas at a dinner. At that time I met Mr. Watson and Capt. Sycamore, who is to command her. Mr. Watson said that the boat was getting along all right, and that he considered that she had a good chance to win. The interests of Shamrock II. on this side will be looked after by Mr. William Jamison. This fact is positively settled."

In answer to the question as to whom he considered the superior designer, Watson or Fife, Mr. Barrie replied:

"That is a pretty broad question, and one that I do not care to decide. Sir Thomas seems to think very highly of Watson, though, for he substituted him for Fife."

Referring to the crew which will man the challenger, Mr. Barrie said that it will practically be an entirely different one from the crew that manned the first challenger, although a few of the old men may possibly be retained.

"There was no dissatisfaction with the old crew," he said, "but it was selected by Hogarth, and, as he is not to be in any way identified with the new Shamrock, Capt. Sycamore, his successor, will probably select his own men. The number of men in the crew will be fifty-five, and they will be picked principally from England and Scotland, with a few Irishmen added. The men will be housed on this side in a steamboat that I am going to charter, and which will be larger than the one used the last time."

"Will the new Shamrock be tested before she is brought over?" Mr. Barrie was asked.

"She most assuredly will be," he replied. "Not only will she be tried over there, but she will be thoroughly tested on her arrival here, as well. The other Shamrock was not thoroughly tested on either side, but that mistake will not be made this time. When the new boat sails, we expect to know all about her, and the old Shamrock will probably be brought over to use in the trials that will be made prior to the races. This is as yet unsettled, however. I am going to charter a forty-foot launch this week to act as a tender and dispatch boat, which will be in addition to the regular fleet of tugs and tenders that I have been commissioned to charter."

When Mr. Barrie was told it had been reported that the work on Shamrock II. was being done at night, he said that the report was untrue.

"While the work, as I have said, is being done in secret," he replied, "it is not carried to such an extent as that. You may rest assured that she is being built in the daytime. No, there is nothing in that rumor."

SIR THOMAS IS SURE THIS TIME.

"When is Sir Thomas coming over, and does he believe he will be able to win the cup this time?" was another question which Mr. Barrie was asked to answer.

"Those who are in a position to know are pretty certain that the cup is going back across the water this time," he said, "and the most confident of all in respect to this belief is Sir Thomas Lipton. As to when Sir Thomas will come over, he has not yet decided when he will leave England. When he does come, though, it will be on one of the transatlantic liners, and among those who will accompany him will be Lord Charles Beresford, Mr. and Mrs. Pirrie of Belfast, and William Gibson. There was a chance of the Prince of Wales coming over, but now that he has ascended the throne there is, of course, no such probability. But there is a very strong probability that Kaiser Wilhelm will come over. He is being urged to make the trip, and those who should know would not be surprised if he should decide to come.

"The Kaiser is an enthusiastic yachtsman, and this, coupled with the fact that he wishes to see this country, may induce him to take the trip. He has loaned Sir Thomas his yacht, the Meteor, as a trial boat against Shamrock II., and is among those who hope to see the boat win."

The Erin will convoy the challenger over and will tow her more or less all the way, Mr. Barrie said. The Erin, he added, will not be discarded in favor of a new boat, as has been reported, as she is now being entirely overhauled, especial attention being paid to embellishing her already beautiful interior.

Finally Mr. Barrie said he was glad to learn the idea of building a centreboard yacht in Boston had been abandoned.

"The centreboard yacht, so far as defending the cup is concerned," said he, "is played out. A craft of that type cannot defeat the Columbia, and, of course, could not win from Shamrock II. She could not carry sails enough to successfully defend the cup."

Once more speaking for his chief, and reasserting that sportsman's belief of at last winning the cup that for so many years has remained on this side of the Atlantic, Mr. Barrie said that, as he had so much business in reference to the lifting of that trophy this year, he would have to forego any further talk on the new Shamrock for the time being. He then left the pier.

WOMAN'S MUNICIPAL LEAGUE MASS MEETING

Question of City Government Discussed at Cooper Union.

Criticism of Mayor's Action in Not Lowering City Hall Flag Gives Rise to an Incident.

The Woman's Municipal League held a mass meeting at Cooper Union last evening to discuss the recommendations of the Charter Revision Commission. Several speakers addressed the meeting, among others being Controller Bird S. Coler, James L. Wells, Edward M. Shepard, and Prof. Frank J. Goodnow. James McKeen, a member of the commission, presided.

An unlooked-for incident occurred during the speech of Mr. Wells, who remarked that had he been Mayor he would have lowered the City Hall flag out of respect to the memory of Queen Victoria. This sentiment seemed to please everybody in the hall except one man near the platform, who began hissing vigorously. The rest of the audience at once drowned the hiss with applause, but the solitary objector was not discouraged. He continued to hiss for several moments, interrupting the proceedings. Finally, after another round of applause appeared to have crushed him for good, Mr. Wells remarked from the platform, looking in the direction of the disturber:

"Only snakes and geese hiss. The man who would hiss at any suggestion to honor the memory of a good woman who lies dead is surely unfit to come here and take part in this movement for municipal reform."

This remark was greeted with laughter and applause.

Controller Coler said that if a city of 3,500,000 of not only the most wealthy, but the most intelligent, people in the world was not able to govern itself, then civilization itself was a failure. The only practical way to secure good city government was to go ahead and secure home rule in our own affairs.

Referring to the reform movement the Controller said:

"Now is the time for citizens to exercise sober judgment. There is tremendous excitement going on regarding the city, and if this takes people's attention away from the legislation regarding the charter at Albany. It is surely better to wait until revision is secured before taking up other matters. New York is not the worst city in the world. I do not believe in reform on the 'Jim' Fisk principle of smashing everything. Let us fight every corrupt individual, but do not let us defame the fairest of cities while trying to make it better. Crowd out all the bad and vicious in the city and put in its place something better. Let people who want good government in New York get to work and turn out the other fellows."

Edward M. Shepard said that the press, when trying to illustrate any evil in the city Government, always represented Father Knickerbocker aghast at the modern conditions, but he would point out that the average conditions in New York to-day were far better than in the Knickerbocker days. The city had grown better by the organized efforts of its citizens, and this reform must go on in the direction of home rule. The test of a good charter was a test of good Government, whether National, State, or municipal.

"We shall never have good government," said Mr. Shepard, "until the Mayor has the same powers of removal as the President. If anything goes wrong in the Federal Government they go after the responsible man. The present city system, however, induces and protects stupidity, incompetency, and dishonor, for the man who holds office knows he is independent of the Mayor. How can the Mayor hold himself responsible for wrongdoing if he is unable to remedy it by removing the wrongdoer? We shall have no good government until we can go and say: 'Thou art the man. You in the City Hall are responsible, because you have the power to remove that man.'"

Mr. Wells, referring to remarks on the City Aldermen by Controller Coler, said there were good Aldermen as well as bad Aldermen. He was afraid Mr. Coler had met only the bad Aldermen. They must not forget that Felix Cooper, who had presented the city with the institution in which they were seated, was an Alderman. Who, asked Mr. Wells, had brought about the condition that had made the name Alderman a byword? It was the people, because they had deprived the Aldermen of their power.

The followed resolution was adopted by the meeting:

Resolved, That the citizens of New York, assembled in mass meeting on Jan. 24, 1901, request their representatives in the Legislature to adopt the report of the Charter Revision Commission as presented, with the understanding that such amendments as are deemed desirable shall be subsequently considered.

Resolved, That the following citizens are requested to act as delegates of this meeting on the Committee of Two Hundred and Fifty, to further the adoption of the charter revision: Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, Manhattan; William F. Ogden, Brooklyn; Matthew Anderson, Esq., the Bronx; W. F. Wyckoff, Queens, and Arthur Hallock, Richmond.

Resolved, That the Chairman be authorized to fill any vacancies which may occur in the above delegation.

MRS. NATION HORSEWHIPPED.

ENTERPRISE, Kan., Jan. 24.—A street fight occurred here to-day between women, led on one side by Mrs. Carrie Nation, the saloon wrecker, and on the other by Mrs. John Schilling, wife of the manager of the saloon wrecked yesterday. Mrs. Schilling was backed by a dozen female friends. As a result of the fight, Mrs. Nation swore out warrants against Mrs. Schilling and her husband and Mrs. William Bittner, charging them with assault, and Mayor Hoffman swore out a warrant against Mrs. Nation, charging her with disturbing the peace. All were arrested and taken before Judge Nolt. The case was concluded promptly. Mrs. Nation was found not guilty of disturbing the peace and was released. The cases of those arrested on complaint of Mrs. Nation were continued until to-morrow. Mrs. Nation returned to the home of Mrs. Hoffman to doctor her wounds, and, as she declared, "prepare for to-morrow."

Much excitement prevailed over the affair, and business practically was suspended this afternoon.

Before the fight, Mrs. Nation, in company with Mrs. Hoffman and other members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, entered a store near William Shook's saloon. Mrs. Nation, apparently to give him warning that she would attack his place, sent for Shook. He replied to the summons in person, and while talking to Mrs. Nation she was assaulted by a crowd of women organized since last night's raid, and who had been awaiting to-day's threatened destruction of saloon property.

A general fight between the women ensued, during which a woman, heavily veiled, rained blow after blow upon Mrs. Nation with a horsewhip. Male spectators offered no aid to either side, and quiet was restored only when the police interfered. Mrs. Nation was badly bruised.

It is asserted that while the attack on Mrs. Nation was made there were cries of "Kill her! Kill her!"

Mrs. Nation left Enterprise to-night for Hope, Kan., where she will hold a meeting of the temperance women to-morrow afternoon. From there she will go to Kansas City, Kan., Saturday and will begin the usual operations there. There are two saloons in Hope, a small village twenty miles south of Enterprise, and the liquor people there are terror-stricken at the knowledge of her coming.

Mrs. Nation has had Mrs. Schilling, the woman who assaulted her to-day, arrested on a county warrant. She told Mrs. Schilling she would forgive her if she begged her pardon. The latter refused, whereupon Mrs. Nation said she would send her to the penitentiary. Mrs. Nation has sent for County Attorney Smith to bring criminal proceedings against Mrs. Schilling, and says she will prosecute her to the utmost.

"I am receiving many invitations to visit towns," said Mrs. Nation to-night, "and I am much encouraged. The work must go on in every State, and I am confident that we can do it that way.

LIVELY RIOT ON BROADWAY.

A little after midnight this morning there was a free fight at Twenty-ninth Street and Broadway which kept all the policemen in the neighborhood working hard for over half an hour before order was restored. A long line of cabs are generally drawn up along Twenty-ninth Street, and it was near one of these that the fight started.

Four men were observed arguing together, and they were soon surrounded by a crowd of curious people. A moment later the four men began to fight. They finally struggled over toward the cab, and one of them fell inside it. Several bystanders had commenced to take sides in the fight by this time, and in a few moments it became general.

By the time the policeman on post appeared on the scene there was a crowd of over 500 people, most of them fighting and shouting as loudly as they could. The policemen in front of Daly's Theatre hurried around the corner to join in the affray, and those cabmen who had not been taking an active part up to this time saw a good opportunity to get in a few blows at their enemies, the police, and did not neglect it.

After several other policemen and detectives had arrived on the scene, the crowd was finally scattered, and the four men who had started the disturbance were dragged off to the West Thirtieth Street Police Station.

They described themselves as James McKenna, a cab driver, of 60 East Houston Street; John Donin, a blacksmith, of 135 McDougal Street; Joseph P. Kelly, a porter, of 59 East Nineteenth Street, and William Barry of 920 Park Avenue.

Barry says he is a day laborer, but is believed by the police to be a traveling salesman for a jewelry firm. According to his story, he had been robbed of a scarf pin by the other three men after leaving the Cairo, which is on Twenty-ninth Street, near Broadway. He remonstrated with them, he said, and they attacked him and tried to hustle him into McKenna's cab, which was standing in front of the Cairo.

The other three prisoners denied this story and said that Barry had attacked them without any provocation. All four were locked up on charges of disorderly conduct.

BANISHED FROM MANILA.

Gen. MacArthur Orders the Deportation of an American Editor.

MANILA, Jan. 24.—Gen. MacArthur has ordered the deportation to the United States of George T. Rice, editor of The Daily Bulletin, a marine journal. Rice will sail on the Pennsylvania next Monday. The order characterizes him as a "dangerous incendiary and a menace to the military situation."

Rice's offense was the publication of allegations that Lieut. Commander William Braunersreuther, Captain of the Port, had charged excessive pilotage and moorage fees, a percentage of which he had kept for himself.

The report of Major Mills, Inspector General, who investigated the allegations, completely exonerated the Captain of the Port and indicted the editor and the merchants who had given him information, and who had been misled by figuring the rates upon the net instead of the gross tonnage, the latter being specified under the Spanish law.

Rice was summoned to the office of the Governor General's Military Secretary and was called upon to promise that he would publish no more such articles. He declined to give such a pledge, but insisted that the article was truthful and assumed a defiant attitude when threatened with deportation.

The deportation order was then issued, and Rice is now awaiting the departure of the Pennsylvania. When seen in jail to-day he reiterated his statement that the charges were true and declared that, in any event, the severity of the sentence was unmerited.

INDIANS THREATEN A TOWN.

Armed Creeks Numbering 600 May Attack Bristow, I. T.—Indians Prohibit Leases to Whites.

Special to The New York Times.

MUSKOGEE, Indian Territory, Jan. 24.—Marshal Bennet has just received a telegram from Bristow, Indian Territory, announcing that 1,000 armed Creeks, stationed two miles from there, are preparing to attack the town, and pleading for protection. Marshal Bennet and Agent Shoffet are swearing in large numbers of deputies, whom they are forwarding to the scene of the trouble. It is now feared they will reach the town too late, and the Mayor of Bristow has been instructed to swear in all the men necessary to protect the town. The Snake band is within three miles of Bristow.

Troop A of the Eighth Cavalry of the United States Army will arrive at Henrietta or Wetumka to-night from Fort Reno, proceeding under orders from Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, commanding the Department of Missouri. The soldiers will be joined by the United States Marshal and his deputies and Indian Agent Shoffet and his police from this place later, and will proceed against the Snake band of Indians now on the warpath.

Eastman Polk and Joseph Starfey, the two Creek light horsemen or Sheriffs, who were arrested at Checotah yesterday by the United States Marshals, were remanded to jail here to-day after examination, and will be held. They stated they were posting the notices under the direction of the Secretary, John Timothy, and also Latah Micco, principal chief of the Snake band of Creeks. The towns of Checotah and Eufaula have established pickets and have armed citizens, and are ready for an onslaught of the full-bloods, should they swoop down on those places.

All white families are leaving the disturbed districts rapidly. Three hundred warriors held a general meeting at Eufaula yesterday, and held another meeting at Hickory Town to-day, where they whipped six men. One man received 100 lashes and the others 50 lashes each for employing white labor. Notices are now being posted that he who employs white labor or rents to white men shall be fined $100 and receive fifty lashes on his bare back, and he who leases land to white men shall be fined $250 and receive 100 lashes.

One man who was whipped a few days ago is at the point of death, and no physician is allowed to treat him except the medicine men of the Snakes. Members of the regular Creek Council are affiliating with the Snake bands and sitting in their councils of war.

The Dawes Commission is fearful for the safety of its party of appraisers, headed by Representative Hackbust of Leavenworth, Kan., who are in the Wetumka district. Nothing has been heard from them for two days.

United States Marshal Bennett has issued, through ex-Chief McIntosh, a proclamation declaring the depredators are in open rebellion against the constituted authorities, and are thereby violating the laws of this country. He notifies them that "The time has now come when force will be used against force, and the warrants I now have and may receive for members of this band will be served, no matter what the cost to them."

NEW YORK'S NEW POST OFFICE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to-day reported favorably through Senator Fairbanks a bill appropriating $2,500,000 for the erection of a Post Office building in New York City.

The committee says the inadequate conditions there threaten the service, and the clerks have to work twenty-five feet under ground.

It is proposed in the new building to provide for one sub-station, the pension agency, and the internal revenue office, saving in rentals to the Government $46,350 per year.

ENGLAND'S NEW KING PROCLAIMED IN LONDON

Gorgeous Ceremony, According to the Ancient Precedent.

Heralds Met at the Site of Old Temple Bar by the City Officials—Crowds Sing "God Save the King."

LONDON, Jan. 25.—London yesterday witnessed a sight the like of which only a very few people now living had ever seen before. King Edward VII. was proclaimed at various points of the metropolis with ceremonies exactly following ancient precedence.

The officials purposely arranged the function an hour ahead of the time given in the published announcement, and the inhabitants, when they awoke, were surprised to find the entire way between St. James's Palace and the city lined with troops. About 10,000 soldiers, Life Guards, Horse Guards, Foot Guards, and other cavalry and infantry regiments, had been brought from Aldershot and London barracks after midnight. All the officers had crape on their arms, and the drums and brass instruments were shrouded with crape. The troops in themselves made an imposing sight, but they were entirely eclipsed by the strange spectacle presented by the officials of the College of Arms.

The ceremony began at St. James's Palace, where, at 9 o'clock, Edward VII. was proclaimed King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and Emperor of India. The proclamation, which was read by William Henry Weldon, Norroy King of Arms, was as follows:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to call to His mercy our late Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria of blessed and glorious memory, by whose decease the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland is solely and rightfully come to the high and mighty Prince Albert Edward,

We, therefore, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal of this Realm, being here assisted with these of her late Majesty's Privy Council, with numbers of other principal gentlemen of quality, with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and citizens of London, do now, hereby, with one voice and consent of tongue and heart, publish and proclaim that the high and mighty Prince Albert Edward is now become our only lawful and rightful liege lord, Edward VII., by the Grace of God, King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, to whom we do acknowledge all faith and constant obedience with all hearty and humble affection; beseeching God, by whom all Kings and Queens do reign, to bless the Royal Prince Edward VII. with long and happy years to reign over us.

The King was not present. The members of his household witnessed the ceremony from Marlborough House. On the balcony overlooking Friary Court, from which the proclamation was read, were the Duke of Norfolk and other officers of State. The balcony was draped in crimson cloth. Beside the officials were the State trumpeters in resplendent uniforms.

In the yard of Marlborough House and Friary Court were stationed a large number of police, soldiers, and Foot Guards. The Foot Guards acted as a guard of honor, and they were posted immediately beneath the balcony. The spectators began to assemble at an early hour. The troops arrived at 8 o'clock, and shortly before 9 o'clock a brilliant cavalcade passed down the Mall and entered Friary Court. It consisted of the headquarters' staff, headed by Earl Roberts, the Commander in Chief, in full uniform, and carrying a Marshal's baton, and Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood, the Adjutant General.

At 9 o'clock the Court dignitaries, headed by the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl Marshal, appeared on the balcony. Then the heralds blew a fanfare and the Norroy King of Arms, in the midst of dead silence, read the proclamation. All heads were bared. As the reading was concluded, Norroy King of Arms, raising his "three-cornered hat, cried loudly, "God save the King!" The crowd took up the cry, while the cheers, the fanfares of the trumpets, and the band playing a national anthem made a curious medley. Mr. Weldon read the proclamation in clear tones, which were distinctly heard at a great distance. A third fanfare of trumpets ended the ceremony.

A PICTURESQUE PROCESSION.

The officials then marched in procession through the palace to Ambassadors' Court, where a number of royal carriages had been placed by the direction of the King of the disposal of the Earl Marshal. These took the officials to the city, escorted by a detachment of Horse Guards, forming a picturesque and gorgeous procession.

The contingent from the College of Arms was composed of three Kings of Arms, four Heralds, and eight Pursuivants. The costumes of the twelve latter were gorgeous beyond compare. They wore tabards, a garment resembling the costume of Kings as depicted on playing cards. These tabards were beautifully and heavily embroidered with gold lions, the royal coat of arms, and flowers in bewildering confusion.

A blare of trumpets announced the progress of the cavalcade as it proceeded through Trafalgar Square and the Strand.

The chief interest of the morning centred in the entrance of the procession into the City at Temple Bar. The gray minarets of the Law Courts and the tall spires of the Strand churches loomed, phantomlike, out of the fog, while a long, double line of overcoated troops stood, chilled and motionless, along the half-deserted streets. The clocks of the Law Courts and St. Dunstan's tolled out mournfully the quarter hours till 9:15, when, out of the gray mist, from within the City boundary, appeared a procession of carriages containing the Lord Mayor and his entourage.

It was here that the two processions were to merge in kaleidoscopic grandeur. The Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, Aldermen, and Mace Bearers, in scarlet, fur-trimmed robes, cocked hats, ruffled shirts, silk knee breeches, and low, buckled shoes, peered out from the Cinderella-like coaches. Overhead, in the midst of the pageant, the great griffin which marks the City boundary spread its wide, fantastic wings, like some great Hindu god. In their gold liveries the white-wigged coachmen of the Lord Mayor looked down contemptuously upon soldier, Herald, and peer.

In the olden days a veritable bar, or gate, separated the City from without. To-day ten strong policemen stretched a red silken rope across the thoroughfare, as a mark of the City's ancient privileges.

SCENE AT THE CITY "BAR."

As the clock struck the time the officer in command of the troops cried "Attention!" The rifle stocks came down with a click upon the asphalt pavement, and two gold-laced trumpeters appeared at the griffin's side. The Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, Mace Bearers, Chaplain, Remembrancer, and the white-wigged Judges of the City courts left their carriages and grouped themselves together between the lines of drawn-up troops. Then the City Marshal, who was on horseback, wearing a uniform of scarlet, gold laced, with scarlet plumes, rode up to the barrier, and Norroy King of Arms, whose green and gold tabard outshone those of his colleagues, appeared at the imaginary bar. His trumpeter blew a shrill blast, which the Lord Mayor's trumpeters answered, and then the City Marshal rode up to the barrier and demanded:

"Who goes there?"

Norroy King replied:

"The King's Herald to read the proclamation."

"Enter, Herald," said the Marshal, and conducted him to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, who were still grouped in the street.

"The Herald read the proclamation, to which the Mayor and Aldermen replied:

The trumpeters blew a blast while the wondering crowd stood bareheaded and silenced, not knowing what to do, till a military band in the procession struck up "God Save the King." This familiar air has still but one meaning in England, and the crowd took up the words feebly, with "God Save the King" on the tongue, but with "God Save the Queen" in mind.

AT THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.

A few streets further on the proclamation was again read, and the procession then advanced to the Royal Exchange. The final proclamation was made in front of the Exchange. The square before the Exchange, with the prisonlike walls of the Bank of England on one side and the massive official residence of the Lord Mayor on the other, was a stage-setting of an age and solidity befitting the ceremony. There were no decorations except flags, all half-masted, save the city's red cross on a white field over the Mansion House. The royal standard hung above the Exchange, and over the surrounding building hung the union jack.

Soldiers and policemen formed an almost solid lane down Cheapside, where the pageant passed. The people behind them, crowding for a sight over their shoulders, were of all classes, from prosperous brokers to East water-color sketch of the dead Queen yesterday afternoon at the King's desire.

Several officials arrived from Windsor yesterday, bringing the state regalia. It was carried in a baize bag.

The elaborate decorations necessary in turning the dining room in Osborne House into a Chapelle Ardente occupied so much time that, although the royal household waited hour after hour for the first private service, it was found impossible to hold this yesterday. All being well, however, the solemn function will be performed this morning by the Bishop of Winchester, in the presence of King Edward, Emperor William, and almost every other member of the royal family.

THE CHAPELLE ARDENTE.

The dining room is now hung with deep red purple. The dais is wreathed with the royal standard, and on each side are great candles. Madonnas by famous painters hang from the draped walls. In one corner magnificent wreaths from all parts of the world crush their blossoms one against the other. Among these the most beautiful are from Emperor William and Empress Augusta Victoria. Around the coffin chairs are arranged for the royal mourners.

The new Queen moved ceaselessly around yesterday seeing that everything should be done in good order. She refused to allow herself to be called Queen. "Your Majesty," said one of the entourage. "'Your Royal Highness' you mean," was the immediate interruption.

It was chiefly due to Queen Alexandra's desire to carefully design the minutest detail of the death chapel that the first funeral service was not held yesterday.

A statement attributed to the Deputy Governor of the island, that the body of the Queen would be viewed yesterday, drew a great crowd of people from all parts of the island to the gates of Osborne House, but they were told that admission was out of the question.

An official announcement that there will be no public lying in state causes great disappointment, especially as some privileged persons, including a squad of gold badge men from the royal yachts, have received permission to view the body. A large number of people have already arrived in the island, hoping to get a last glimpse of the Queen.

THE KING ARRIVES AT COWES.

An expectant crowd lined Trinity Pier here yesterday afternoon as the royal yacht Alberta, with King Edward on board, turned the point and the first gun of the royal salute thundered from the British warship Australia. All the flags hitherto half-masted were hauled down, marking the suspension of mourning till the King had landed. The depressing surroundings were somewhat lightened by the presence of the naval and military staffs in brilliant uniforms.

The King landed at 2:15 P. M. In acknowledgment of the silent greetings of the people he frequently raised his hat. He came ashore with the Duke of Connaught and drove to Osborne House, where Emperor William met him at the gates and warmly greeted him.

Immediately after the King landed the flags were again half-masted.

His Majesty looked rather careworn, but otherwise appeared to be in excellent health. During the crossing he was busily engaged in reading State dispatches and telegrams of sympathy and in dictating replies.

Yesterday King Edward replied to thousands of messages he has received. To those from rulers and great personages he replied personally. To those from other dignitaries he commanded his Equerry to return thanks. A particularly grateful message went to President McKinley.

Considerable restriction is now being placed upon the public's access to the landing place here, owing to attempts to kodak Emperor William.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—It is understood that the body of Queen Victoria will arrive in London on the morning of Feb. 2, and be taken across the metropolis to Paddington. Troops will line the streets. The coffin will be placed on a gun carriage and draped with flags. On arriving at Paddington station it will be transferred to a train for Windsor, finally reaching St. George's Chapel about noon, where a magnificent funeral service will take place.

It is stated that the progress of the body of the Queen through London will be an imposing military pageant, and that members of the Houses of Lords and Commons will be invited to follow the procession. At the same time there seems to be some apprehension lest a change of decision should omit the London portion of the programme.

The Daily Telegraph editorially claims for London a right to share in the obsequies, and declares that nothing but Queen Victoria's own wishes, if she ever expressed them, should prevent this.

The burial has been delayed to enable all the foreign representatives to arrive at Windsor in time for it.

It is announced that Grand Duke Sergius and the Grand Duchess will come from Russia to be present at the ceremony.

The Duc de Chartres arrived last evening from Paris, and will remain to attend the funeral. Prince Henri d'Orleans is expected.

The following Princes from Germany will attend the funeral: Prince and Princess Henry of Prussia, Prince Arnulf of Bavaria, the Grand Duke of Hesse, the Prince of Saxe-Meiningen, and the Prince of Hohenzollern.

MADRID, Jan. 24.—The Spanish Cabinet has appointed the Duke de Mandas, the Spanish Ambassador at London, and Rear Admiral Cervera to be the delegates of Spain at the funeral of Queen Victoria.

Admiral Cervera's reported illness is, apparently, proved to have been not serious.

COURT TO MOURN A YEAR.

Public Expected to Wear Black—Duke of York's New Title.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The Court will go into mourning for one year.

"It is expected that all persons upon the present occasion, the death of her Majesty of blessed and glorious memory, will put themselves into deepest mourning."

Another order in council substitutes "King" for "Queen" and "Edward" for "Victoria" in the Prayer Book. It also inserts "Our Gracious Queen, Alexandra; George, Duke of Cornwall and York, and the Duchess of Cornwall and York."

The fact that the Court goes into mourning for a year and the further fact that the public is enjoined to go into the "deepest" mourning lead to the supposition that the coronation will not take place until 1902.

Cardinal Vaughan sends word that he will bring from Rome a special message from the Pope to the King.

The announcement regarding the new title of the Duke of York bears out the statement made in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Jan. 23. Although the succession to the British Crown is automatic, this is not the case with the transference of the title of Prince of Wales, which is conferred by royal letters patent. However, there is said to be not the slightest doubt that the title will be conferred upon the King's eldest son in a very short time.

Meanwhile, the Duke of York becomes the Duke of Cornwall, which latter title descends automatically to the eldest son of the sovereign. It carries with it the income from the Duchy, which amounts to about £50,000 a year.

NO CHANGE OF PREMIERS.

Rumor that Lord Salisbury Is to Resign Declared Unfounded.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—"There is no truth in the rumor that a change in the Premiership is contemplated," says The Daily Mail. "Mr. Balfour's presence at Osborne House is due to the King's kindly desire to spare Lord Salisbury fatigue and trouble."

When Parliament meets next month it will be necessary to grant a new royal civil list, the old list expiring with the death of the Queen. Probably the Radicals will endeavor to reduce the amount, but the general feeling leans toward an increase, in view of the increased value of the surrendered royal estates.

Renewed allowances will also have to be made for the Duke of Cornwall and York.

SOME PERSONAL REMINISCENCES

Mrs. George Cornwallis-West's Tribute to Queen Victoria.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Mrs. George Cornwallis-West, (who was Lady Randolph Churchill and, previous to her marriage, Miss Jennie Jerome, of New York City,) who had several unusual opportunities of meeting Queen Victoria, has written the following:

"I have been asked to give my personal reminiscenses of Queen Victoria. So much has been written about Her Majesty—such a hymn of praise has burst forth from the whole civilized world—that even out of the fullness of one's heart, and had I one of the most eloquent of pens, it would be difficult to be anything but an echo. Still, it may be interesting to my countrymen to hear even my small note joining in this harmonious paean to her goodness—a goodness that was felt by all her people, as her greatness was apparent to all nations. To the American, whose pulse beats quickly, and whose brain works in unison, the fulfillment of a high ideal, a noble life, must appeal with irresistible force. I am sure it is no exaggeration to say that the American people have placed Queen Victoria on as high a pedestal of virtue as their imagination can build.

"It is not for me to dilate on the qualities of her unique greatness. These will be immortalized by history. Still, I cannot refrain from saying that the great theme of all was her knowledge of and sympathy with human nature. When Col. Towse recently went to Windsor to receive the Victoria Cross for a valorous deed by which he lost his eyesight, those present have since told me that as he advanced, led by his wife, toward the Queen, tears poured down her aged cheeks, and it was in a broken voice that she spoke to him. Few at eighty-one could forget their own dim and failing eyes for the blind ones of others.

"The Queen may be counted as one of the victims of the war. Every defeat, every unsuccessful skirmish, the loss or wounding of any brave soldier, was personal to her. When I had the honor of seeing Her Majesty at Windsor, in December, 1899, before leaving for South Africa in the American hospital ship Maine, she evinced the greatest interest in all the details and fittings of the ship, and particularly as to the history of the hospital staff, doctors, and nurses, whom she had received a few days previously. Several times she repeated to me:

"'It is very good of the American people to subscribe for this ship, and I am most grateful to them for coming over and helping to take care of my sick and wounded.'

"I had not seen her for some years, and the melody of her wonderful voice and the fascination of her marvelous smile again came as a revelation to me. The most commanding presence and regal beauty could not have had a more thrilling effect upon one than this small figure bowed down with sorrow and age.

"Some years ago I was bidden to Windsor to receive from the Queen the Order of the Crown of India. It was a memorable day. The Queen, with one of the Princesses and a lady in waiting, received me in a small room. She addressed a few kind words to me, to which, in my embarrassment, I made some inaudible answer, and then she proceeded to pin the order on my left shoulder. I remember that, my dress being thickly embroidered with jet, the pin could find no hold, and at last she stuck it straight into me. I could not hide what I felt, and the Queen was much concerned. But eventually the pin was put right, and I courtesied myself out. As I reached the door, she called out: 'You have forgotten the case,' and held it out to me. I afterward said to the lady in waiting that I was afraid I had not comported myself properly, and she answered:

"'You need not be troubled. I know the Queen felt more shy than you did.'

"'At the opening of the Imperial Institute, about ten years ago, the Queen sat on a throne in the middle of the huge hall, filled to overflowing, with a look of intense anxiety on her face; she had to make a speech. But when she did so her voice, soft and gentle as it was, never wavered, and it could be heard by all. Only great moral courage and capacity could have carried her through this ordeal.

"'Once again I remember the Queen, at her first jubilee, sitting alone in the middle of the great nave in Westminster Abbey, a small, pathetic figure, surrounded by a vast assembly, their gaze riveted on her, while silent tears dropped one by one on her folded hands. What must have been the weight of her memory!

"'High and low, rich and poor, the whole English-speaking race realize that they have lost in the Queen Victoria the greatest of their sovereigns and the best of friends.

"JENNIE CORNWALLIS-WEST."

LUNATIC CAUSES EXCITEMENT.

He Tried to Hand a Letter to the King at Victoria Station.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—King Edward, escorted by a squadron of the Horse Guards and accompanied by the Duke of Cornwall and York, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and others, left Marlborough House at 11 o'clock yesterday morning to take the train for Osborne.

The crowds thronged the streets through which his Majesty passed, and the great cheering was in strong contrast with the silence which greeted his arrival in London.

The vagaries of an apparently harmless lunatic occasioned some excitement at Victoria Station. While the King was entering the train a well-dressed individual, bearing a letter addressed to his Majesty, was permitted to pass the barriers. He hurried to an equerry and said he wished to present the letter to the King personally. The man was handed over to the police.

The envelope contained a telegraph form, on which were the words: "I wish to see my beloved Queen."

BURGHERS SUGGEST AMNESTY.

Think It Would Greatly Hasten the Return of Peace.

PRETORIA, Jan. 24.—Signs of sorrow over the death of the Queen are everywhere visible. Even the burghers show a respectful sympathy.

It has been suggested by influential burghers that an amnesty proposal would have the effect of greatly hastening the return of peace.

Sultan Wires Condolences.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 24.—The Sultan, who is much affected by the death of Queen Victoria, has wired to King Edward VII. expressions of sympathy at his loss and felicitations on his accession. Signs of mourning are general here. The heads of the various faiths have telegraphed condolences to the Archbishop of Canterbury, notably the Armenian Patriarch, who wired that the Queen's name was immortal. The newspapers deplore her Majesty's death as that of a sincere friend of Turkey.

Memorial Service at Craig-y-Nos.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—At the suggestion of Mme. Adelina Patti, (Baroness Rolf Cederstrom,) a memorial service in honor of Queen Victoria, conducted by Father Bernard Vaughan, took place last evening at Craig-y-Nos Castle, Wales. The music was arranged by Mme. Patti, and was extremely beautiful. She and the tenor Santley sang.

Empress Frederick No Worse.

HOMBURG, Jan. 24.—The condition of the Dowager Empress Frederick continues satisfactory. Lately she has not suffered any pain, but this does not imply improvement. However, her Majesty's sorrow and personal loss owing to the death of Queen Victoria have been borne with comparative fortitude.

Czar Starts for St. Petersburg.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 24.—The Czar left Livadia yesterday on the royal yacht, taking a train for Sebastopol, whence he started in the evening for St. Petersburg. The Court goes into mourning for Queen Victoria on its arrival here.

SYRACUSE GETS NEW LIBRARY.

Mayor J. K. McGuire of Syracuse had an interview with Andrew Carnegie yesterday relative to the latter's proposition to erect a library in the Salt City. At the Hoffman House last night Mayor McGuire said:

"Syracuse has long needed a new library building, but lacked the funds to build one. The site at Onondaga, Montgomery, and Jefferson Streets, owned by the city, is worth $75,000, and Mr. Carnegie has kindly consented to provide $200,000 for a building. Work will be begun at once.

"I called to-day upon Mr. Carnegie, by invitation, and found about fifty other professional beggars like myself there. I finally saw Mr. Carnegie and stated my case. His reply was: 'Go ahead and build your library and draw on me in installments of $50,000 as you need it. I will go as far as $200,000. Good morning.'

"Then I left him. Now I am going to look for some philanthropist who will aid us in the erection of a new art gallery."

FIRE ON LOWER BROADWAY.

The twelve-story building at 648 Broadway, occupied by the Trautmann Importing Company, dealers in millinery and feathers, was damaged by fire and water last night to the extent of $15,000.

The fire was discovered by a member of the firm and two employes who were at work in the basement. They ran to the street and gave the alarm. The firemen had much difficulty in getting a stream of water on the blaze, which was in the cellar. The cause of the fire is unknown.

The damaged building is situated next to the Manhattan Savings Institution, corner of Bleecker Street and Broadway.

GRIEF AT QUEEN'S DEATH VOICED IN THIS CITY

Mr. Carnegie's Tribute at St. Andrew's Society Gathering.

Memorial Services to be Held in Trinity Church and Metropolitan Opera House—Messages of Condolence.

Grief over the death of Queen Victoria was voiced at several meetings of societies of this city held yesterday afternoon, and eloquent tributes were paid to the virtues of the dead sovereign. The British residents have sent a cablegram to King Edward VII. expressing their loyalty and patriotism, and it has been decided to hold memorial services on the day of the Queen's funeral.

One of the most important meetings was that of the St. Andrew's Society, which was held in the banquet hall of the Equitable Life Assurance Building. Andrew Carnegie, President of the society, was the Chairman of the meeting, which was attended by many men prominent in social and business life. Among those present were Sir Percy Sanderson, Consul General of Great Britain; J. Kennedy Tod, John S. Kennedy, George Austin Morrison, John A. Stewart, William Lyall, the Rev. Donald Sage Mackay, George Thomson Wilson, Charles K. Morrison, A. M. Stewart, George Davies, George Morrison, Jr., the Rev. David Wylie, and David Ogilvie.

Mr. Carnegie, his voice trembling with emotion, said:

"Too well you know the cause of this summons. We meet here to-day to contribute our share to the universal grief that is agitating not only the English people, but people all over the world. The great Queen, the great woman, who has just passed away is more deeply mourned than any other human being that has appeared in this world. I can think of no words to express what I am sure you will feel.

"Queen Victoria had occupied a position never before occupied by any ruler, or, I may say, by any individual. Nor was she great only as a ruler. Among rulers she occupied a foremost position, but as a woman, wife, mother, grandmother, counselor, I know of no name equal to hers. She stood for everything a woman ought to stand for. First of all, she stood for that greatest of all womanly virtues—purity. Secondly, she stood for honesty. I have been told that it was utterly impossible for her to deceive anybody. She also stood for peace. On no occasion did she counsel war. On the other hand, she often advocated peace.

"We have reason to remember this and be thankful for the conduct of this great, this good, Queen during one of our own National crises. When this Republic was in hard straits a warlike Secretary had already prepared a message that would have meant war between us and the mother land, but she tore that dispatch with her own hands and thus averted such a calamity. Standing, as we almost can be said to stand, at her bier, we should take the lesson of her life, and, as her successor has announced he will, strive to follow in her footsteps. Let us resolve at this hour that her great example will not go for naught. Let us resolve to lead better lives. Let us resolve to stand always as she did, for purity, honesty, and peace."

Others who made speeches were the Rev. Donald Sage Mackay, the Rev. David Wylie, Chaplain of the society, and David Ogilvie.

The President was authorized to appoint a committee to prepare suitable resolutions on the death of the Queen. These resolutions will be engrossed and forwarded to King Edward VII. when he is crowned.

On a motion by Sir Percy Sanderson, the President was authorized to dispatch the following cablegram to the Marquis of Lansdowne, Secretary for Foreign Affairs:

The oldest society of New York, the Saint Andrew's, composed of Scotsmen and their descendants, in meeting assembled, desires to express its deep sympathy with his Majesty King Edward the Seventh in his great loss and sorrow through the death of his revered mother, Queen Victoria, a loss and a sorrow shared by the people of all lands to a degree never before equaled upon the passing away of any individual who has appeared upon the earth, but by none more keenly than by those dwelling in this Republic who are of the land of her heart, her own beloved Scotland.

The society also desires to express its earnest hope that following in his mother's footsteps according to his announced intention, a continuance of the blessings which her reign brought to her people may be vouchsafed to his own.

ANDREW CARNEGIE, President.
GEORGE AUSTIN MORRISON, Secretary.

Sir Percy Sanderson later presided at the mass meeting of British subjects, held at the Downtown Club. The meeting was attended by about 400 men and women from all walks of life. Among the societies represented at the meeting were the St. Andrew's Society, the Sons of St. George, St. David's Society, St. George's Society, the Canadian and Australian Societies, and several Irish societies.

It was decided to hold special memorial services in Trinity Church at 3 o'clock on the day of the funeral of the Queen. As all the British residents of this city cannot attend these services, a public meeting will be held in the evening, and Sir Percy Sanderson was authorized to appoint a committee to make arrangements for holding such a meeting at the Metropolitan Opera House or some other suitable place. It was resolved to cable an expression of loyalty to King Edward VII., and Sir Percy Sanderson was authorized to send the following:

The British community of New York desire, with myself, to give expression to their loyal and patriotic feelings on the occasion of the accession of his Majesty King Edward VII. to the throne.

It was also resolved to send an address to King Edward VII. The following resolution, introduced by Dr. J. A. Irwin, was unanimously passed:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed by the Chairman to draft a suitable address to his Majesty King Edward VII., the number of such committee to be at the discretion of the Chair.

During the meeting a man proposed that those present join in singing "God Save the King." This proposition somewhat disconcerted Sir Percy Sanderson, and he bent over and consulted with those nearest to the chair. As a result of the conference Sir Percy arose and said:

"In spite of all our loyalty, this occasion is one that demands silence, and I do not think that we should sing."

It is likely that another mass meeting of British residents will be held to complete arrangements for the memorial services. All applications for seats at the official services in Trinity Church must be made to Sir Percy Sanderson. The services will be conducted in a manner approximating as nearly as possible the services in London.

Among the cablegrams of condolence sent to King Edward VII. yesterday was the following:

St. David's Society of the State of New York has instructed me to express its deep sorrow, and to tender to the King and the royal family its profound sympathy at the loss to the King and the family, to the nation, and to the world, in the death of the well-beloved Queen.

JULIEN T. DAVIES, President.

The Actors' Church Alliance has passed the following resolution on the death of the Queen:

Resolved, That the members of the Actors' Church Alliance assembled for their monthly reception desire to express their deep sympathy with His Royal and Imperial Majesty, Edward VII., the Queen Consort, the royal family, and the whole British Nation in the irreparable loss that has fallen upon them in the death of the beloved sovereign, Queen Victoria, a kindly patron of the drama.

The resolution will be forwarded by the British Consul General.

The American Society of Civil Engineers, which was entertained by the Queen at Windsor last Summer, has sent the following to the Institute of Civil Engineers of London:

The American Society of Civil Engineers desires to express its grief and sympathy at the death of her Majesty the Queen.

CROSS, President.
HUNT, Secretary.

The London Stock Exchange has replied to the cable of condolence sent by the New York Stock Exchange as follows:

To the President of the New York Stock Exchange:

On behalf of the members of the Stock Exchange I beg to thank you for your most kind message of sympathy on the death of our beloved Queen.

J. K. K. HICHENS, Chairman.

The answer to the message of condolence sent by the New York Chamber of Commerce to the London Chamber of Commerce has been received and reads:

London Chamber of Commerce greatly appreciates kind and sympathetic message of your country to British people in loss of their Queen so much beloved in both countries.

ALBERT G. SANDEMAN, President.

The New York Produce Exchange has received replies to its messages of condolence from the London and Liverpool Corn Trade Associations as follows:

The London Corn Trade Association returns sincere thanks to the members of the New York Produce Exchange for their kind sympathy in the bereavement which the British Empire has sustained by the death of its beloved Queen.

The members of the Liverpool Corn Trade Association warmly appreciate the expression of sympathy sent by fellow traders in New York. In this time of great national sorrow we are consoled by the veneration and affection shown toward the great Queen by other countries, and especially by your kinsmen, the people of the United States.

It is thought that a petition will be presented to the Governing Committee of the New York Stock Exchange requesting that business be suspended for the entire day on the day of the Queen's funeral, as it has been announced that the Queen will be buried on Saturday, Feb. 2. The members of the Cotton Exchange have petitioned the Board of Managers to close the Exchange on that day. The New Orleans, Houston, and Liverpool Exchanges will be closed on the day of the funeral.

The flag on the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court Building has been flying from the top of the flagpole since the death of Queen Victoria. Presiding Justice Van Brunt has not given any orders to fly the flag at half-mast.

WOULD NOT LOWER THE FLAG.

Mayor McGuire Agrees with Van Wyck on the Subject—Not Here on Political Mission.

Mayor James K. McGuire of Syracuse visited the City Hall yesterday and called upon Mayor Van Wyck. Mayor McGuire declared that his visit had no political significance, and that he was not at all interested in New York City politics.

"Let the people of New York City take care of their own politics," said Mayor McGuire to a NEW YORK TIMES reporter. "The people above the Harlem River should be allowed to attend to their political matters, and the people of New York are perfectly capable in political matters to look out for themselves."

This denial was made by Mayor McGuire because statements have been circulated that an opportunity has been given him to move to New York and take an active part in the coming mayoralty campaign. When asked as to whether the flag on the Syracuse City Hall was at half-mast as a tribute to Queen Victoria, Mayor McGuire said:

"No; the flag on the Syracuse City Hall will not be lowered on account of the death of any potentate, foreign ruler, or any member of a royal family."

Mayor McGuire will stay in New York a few days on private business.

THE FLAG AND THE MAYOR.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of this date appeared an editorial under the caption "The Mayor and the City Hall Flag," in the course of which you say: "The Mayor of New York has the unique distinction of being the one person among the countless millions of sons of English-speaking mothers who refuses to see that the case is one, not for following precedents, but for making them."

In view of the fact that I think the Mayor did right in the matter referred to, and as you say that he is the only "person" who thinks so "among the countless millions of sons of English-speaking mothers," I presume your statement debars me from personality, and compels me to speak as one of those microscopical "mites" with which your hysterical correspondent, Mr. H. Phillips, compares Mayor Van Wyck.

It seems to me that the question at issue is not one of personal preference at all, but one of custom, and it is the desire of the people of this city to have the flag officially put at half mast upon the occasion of the death of a foreign ruler, let it be so enacted, and such custom will be followed by every responsible official. Up to this time, however, you admit that the custom has been wholly the other way, and Mayor Van Wyck simply did right in acting as he did. If every President and every Mayor is to be permitted to determine when such action shall be taken and when not, there will be a constant turmoil over the matter.

Your statement that the President "safeguarded" his action in setting aside all precedent in the case begs the question, as future Presidents will be guided by what he did rather than what he said. From my standpoint it is quite refreshing, in these days, to find an official who has the desire and the courage, even once in a while, to keep strictly within the reasonable limitations of his official position. I have no partisan bias in the matter, but am interested in it solely as an official act.

A British Subject's Views.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

To me as a British subject, and to most Englishmen to whom I have spoken on the subject, it seems the height of folly to give Mayor Van Wyck the "bold advertisement" of which for the sake of the faction he represents he is so ardently enamored. That he intended to insult England and slight the memory of the late Queen there can be no doubt. But, then, that is the dirty work expected of him by the gang who foisted him upon the City of New York (through its own fault) for its sins, and if the man does not do something to earn his keep he will soon lose caste in the eyes of those whose hireling he is. Englishmen, however, both in this country and at home, know precisely how to take Mayor Van Wyck's conduct. He has already been so thoroughly exploited as a cad, the significance of which word few but Britishers understand and appreciate, that the exhibition of a little more or less caddishness on his part hardly concerns them at all. He is known as one who makes it his business to insult nine out of every ten deputations that wait upon him, and his treatment of the Captain of the Spanish warship, who before the war with Spain had broken out was courteous enough to come up all the way to the City Hall to pay his respects to him as the municipal head of the metropolis of the Western world, while it stirred up no little talk in Europe, was looked upon simply as a piece of Van Wyckian boorishness, and not as typical of the American Nation. In the same way the universal sympathy spontaneously shown Great Britain and Ireland and the whole British Empire in its present sorrow, and its objective display at Washington and in New York City, are sufficient proofs of the gentler manners and the finer feelings of the American Nation—proofs so strong that we, as Englishmen, can well afford to look upon Mayor Van Wyck's conduct as a mere outpouring of personal spite against a people which has taught and is teaching his racial affinities the Boers that they also must march with the times and fall in with the civilization of the age. The only regret we feel is that it was the National flag, not that of the city which was employed by Mayor Van Wyck as his instrument in his cowardly attempt to insult a dead woman, and over her dead body a friendly nation. It is the first time in the history of "Old Glory" that it has ever been so abused by one of those who profess to love and honor it. But neither the flag nor the American people are to blame for Mayor Van Wyck's ebullition of spleen.

The Mayor Criticised.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have been exceedingly consoled by letters in your paper from citizens of New York protesting against the action of the Mayor, who became such through no fault of its worthy citizens, but through the good fortune of his personal acquaintance with Dick Croker.

If ever there was any positive and direct evidence of a politician catering for the votes of a lower element it is Van Wyck. The citizens of New York must needs feel disgraced at the action of this puppet, or as he has been more properly termed, "The Pepper Box," in his direct insult not so much to the people of England, but to the people of this community.

Queen Victoria has passed away, and in the words of Shakespeare:

Death lies on her life an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.

The people of England should know that the citizens of New York do not sanction the action of the Mayor. They heartily disapprove of the same, and the best evidence is the exhibition of the flags in the City of New York, all of which are at half-mast except those under the supervision of the Mayor, whose proper sphere and surroundings are at French balls.

Emerson very truthfully said: "Honor and fortune exist for him who always recognizes the neighborhood of the great, always feels himself in the presence of high causes."

Approves of the Mayor's Course.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Allow me to express my opinion also in regard to the controversy of raising or not raising the flag on the City Hall at half-mast. I am a plain citizen here, and I would like to know for what we should raise our flag half-mast on account of a foreign potentate?

Why, in the world's name, didn't they lower the flag at the time when the good Queen of Austria got murdered in Switzerland? Or when King Humbert died? Or when the German Emperor died? Not one even thought of this, and now they come and make such a big fuss about Queen Victoria's death. I give credit to our Mayor for not listening to this talk at all and leave the flag where it belongs.

It is a real shame that the free Americans should make so much fuss over a foreign King or Queen. What have we got to do with it?

A. BROWN.

New York, Jan. 24, 1901.

Thinks the Action Was Caddish.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am one among the many millions of people who feel some sympathy for our cousins across the water at this sad time. I regret to see a report of the refusal of the Mayor to place our glorious flag at half-mast as a token of sympathy and respect to a woman who was admired the world through for her long and peaceful reign.

I blush to think that the people should elect a man who is evidently without a gentlemanly instinct. I am sure there are many who will accord with me that the action and stand he took was a "cad's" way of crawling out of it. His so-called friend, Joubert, if alive, would scorn to have such as him for a friend.

COMMITTED SUICIDE IN PARIS.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—The body of a young man of refined features, which has been in the Morgue since Jan. 12, when it was found floating in the Seine, has been identified as that of a man who called himself Langrel Harys, an artist, well known in the American colony. The United States Consulate officials are attempting to locate his relatives. His father is supposed to be Henry Harys of Kansas City. He had not lived with his parents for some time, an aunt having adopted him.

Harys lived here at the Hotel de France and at Choiseul. He was only able to make a precarious living by the brush, and debts began to annoy him. Recently he had been asking assistance from friends. He owed a bill of 1,000 francs, which was pressed for payment. It is believed discouragement and financial distress were the motives for his suicide. He was last seen alive at midnight Jan. 11.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 24.—Thomas Langrel Harris, the young artist whose name appears as Langrel Harys in the dispatches from Paris, was the son of Harry Harris, manager of the Laning-Harris Nail and Grain Company. Mr. Harris received a letter from his son from Paris a month ago, and at that time the boy was well. Thomas Harris was twenty-four years old, and had been in Paris for a year and a half. He created rather a sensation among Americans in London by his bold bids for fame and fortune, and his extraordinary ability to meet noted persons in the literary and artistic world.

Young Harris left Kansas City about 1898, and went first to Canada. In Kansas City he worked as an illustrator. In Canada he taught portrait painting. Next he was heard of in London as a painter of miniature portraits for persons of fashion. How he continued to live as he did was a marvel to those who knew he had no fortune.

SUPPOSED DEAD MAN ALIVE.

His Wife Has Collected $7,000 Insurance Money—He Is a Car Conductor in St. Louis.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 24.—Albert C. Johnson, who was supposed to be dead in a lonely Brazilian grave, remote from civilization, is a very sturdy conductor on a St. Louis "owl" car. After a long search Johnson has located his wife at Belding, Mich., and to-night the long-distance telephone convinced her that he was still alive, despite the fact that she has collected $7,000 life insurance money.

Johnson was married to Jennie J. Lounsburg in Batavia, N. Y., in 1896. Two years later, with $10,000 in his pockets, he went to Joplin, Mo., to invest in zinc mines, contrary to his wife's wishes. From there he went to Brazil with Jasper Harrey, an acquaintance. Far in the interior he caught brain fever and his companion gave him up for dead, and wrote to his wife that he had died. His companion then left the country. On recovering, six months later, Johnson learned in a letter from his mother that he was supposed to be dead.

Johnson came to Port Arthur, then to St. Louis at the time of the street railway strike, and, while attempting to locate his wife, acted as conductor. He finally got trace of her at Belding, Mich., and the telephone conversation, the first in three years, occurred to-night.

$2,100 FOR A CONSCIENCE FUND.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 24.—Gazzam Gano, who was President of the Amazon Insurance Company, which wound up its business in 1893, received a mysterious letter as he sat at his desk in the Central Trust Office, 115 East Fourth Street, this morning. The missave was postmarked Kansas City, and is as follows:

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 22.

Amazon Insurance Company, Cincinnati:

Dear Sirs: I send to-day, Pacific express, $2,100 to reimburse you for a loss which, perhaps, you should not have paid. Please acknowledge receipt, care General Delivery, this city.

Yours.

Mr. Gano withholds the name. The letter was written on Baltimore Hotel paper. The recipient thought little more of the missive and laid it aside on his desk, but at noon an express wagon halted at the door and a messenger brought in a package containing one $1,000 gold bond, two $500 United States bonds, and a $100 bank note. All was done in a businesslike manner, and Mr. Gano believes the records will show up the loss when they are hauled out of their vault and examined. The money will go into the conscience fund to the credit of the stockholders of the old company.

AMHERST FUND COMPLETED.

Donations of $25,000 and $10,000 Announced at the Annual Dinner of the Association.

The Amherst Association of New York held its annual dinner last night at Sherry's with 100 graduates of Amherst College present. William R. Mead presided. The President of Amherst College, George Harris, spoke. Others on the list of speakers were Thomas B. Reed, Dr. Truman J. Backus, Franklin Pierce, and W. H. Lewis of Boston.

President Harris evoked great enthusiasm by announcing that he had just secured the final subscription which insured the receipt of a special endowment fund of $100,000, which will be used in increasing the salaries of the members of the Faculty, so that full professors will get $3,000 each.

D. Willis James offered $50,000, on condition that an equal amount be raised for the fund. A gentleman who had been prominent in the athletic field had offered $25,000, and yesterday the last subscription needed was announced. Dr. Harris did not give the names of these subscribers, but it was generally said, among the diners, that it was C. M. Pratt who gave the $25,000. The last subscription was for $10,000, and it was said that the subscriber was J. W. Simpson of Mr. Reed's law firm.

Dr. Backus, the first speaker, said the day has gone by for colleges "which teach only Greek, Latin, and self-conceit," that men of different education and type were needed to-day.

Thomas B. Reed then made an address. He spoke in defense of the small colleges, declaring that it is general education, the education of the world, that is wanted to-day. The education of the few amounts to very little.

Franklin Pierce also spoke for the small college. He declared that there is, if anything, too much of the utilitarian spirit abroad, and he did not favor having the colleges yield any more to it than is necessary.

LEGAL AID SOCIETY REPORT.

President Arthur von Briesen of the Legal Aid Society yesterday read his annual report during the Directors' meeting of the organization, which was held at 220 Broadway. It showed that during the year 14,365 cases have been adjusted by the society, which is an increase of 5,000 over 1899, and nearly three times as many as were attended to in 1898.

The annual meeting of the society will be held in the United Charities Building, on Feb. 19, at 8 P. M. At this meeting new Directors will be elected. The annual banquet of the society will take place at the Waldorf-Astoria on March 23.

THE CHURCH CLUB DINNER

Bishop Potter Talks on the Subject of Municipal Reform.

Americans Should Develop the Habit of Noticing and Organizing—Silent Toast to Victoria.

The means by which municipal reform might be accomplished were touched upon by Bishop Potter in a speech at the fourteenth annual banquet of the Church Club at Sherry's last evening. George Maeculloch Miller presided, and at the guests' table were the Rev. Charles T. Olmstead, vicar of St. Agnes Chapel; the Rev. William Grosvenor, rector of the Church of the Incarnation; Gen. Francis Vinton Greene, Capt. Stockton, United States Navy; Burton Mansfield, Charles M. Curtis, Dr. Francis H. Miller, and Bishop Potter. Before introducing Bishop Potter, Mr. Miller requested that the guests raise their glasses to their lips in a silent toast to Queen Victoria. A toast to King Edward the Seventh was then drunk.

"It is especially gratifying to have our Bishop here," said Mr. Miller. "We were afraid that his duties with the east side might cause him to forget us—his poor little lambs of the Tenderloin."

Bishop Potter, on rising, proposed a toast to the President, which was drunk standing. He then said:

"I desire to emphasize to-night the great and undeveloped power for good along educational and reformatory lines of an organization like the Church Club. It might be made a school of education in the higher politics of the world. This era is the most portentous in the history of Christendom, if not the world. What has happened in China, what happened in India, long ago, is typical of what is happening all over the world. The question of the conditions of civilization in the Far East and of our relations to the rest of the world seems to me important for discussion by such a club. My friends of the clergy might well take a lesson from the apostle on Mars Hill, where he saw the altar dedicated to the unknown God, and apply it to the missionary situation of the day.

"I wonder if you have read the agreement being made by the commission in the Philippines in regard to education. Those are questions concerning which you ought to have opinions, and in which you and I must help form public opinion. Then, again, there are reform movements and the relation of the individual here at home. Until we have recognized our responsibility to observe infractions of municipal law—until you get into the life of the individual citizen that which makes him note wrong and report it—you will not do much for reform.

"When a man suffers a wrong in England, he writes a letter to The Times. The result is that it makes the official sensible to the fact that he is under the public eye. Until you get out of the habit of the American—who in his haste and greed lets all business go but his own—you will not make much progress.

"It isn't likely that if Mr. Miller complains, because a lot of building material has been dumped on his sidewalk he is going to be suspected of having made the complaint because he couldn't make a deal."

Bishop Potter told a story of a Jerseyman who brought some greens to the city at Christmas time. He placed them on the sidewalk and the policeman told him that he would have to pay $25 if he allowed them to remain there. The man said that he had the permission of the owner of the store in front of whose place the greens were, but the policeman made him remove them.

"What is the tragedy of such an incident?" asked Bishop Potter. "It is that nothing is done about it. The police force, that ought to be representative of law and order, has been described by somebody as a 'brass-buttoned banditti.' Vigilance is needed. The laity of this city have a great opportunity, and it is my prayer day and night that we will rise to the height of the responsibility."

Gen. Greene said:

"The great question of the coming century is going to be how our civilization will affect the civilization of the East. The end of the century in England marked the end of the Victorian era; with us it marked the end of our devotion exclusively to internal development and the date at which we take our place among the nations of the earth."

Speaking of Gen. MacArthur's reports, he said that in the records of 420 stations in the Philippines he found, identified with them, the names of men that the American people have never heard of before. Our army carries with it civilization. "Your army is in the Philippines, and there it will stay for years to come, the advance guard of civilization."

Capt. Stockton said that the charge that the clergy incited a spirit of imperialism and war is baseless. War, he said, is created by the people.

Other speakers were the Rev. Charles T. Olstead, the Rev. William M. Grosvenor, and Dr. Francis H

BILLS TO TAX BANKS AND TRUST COMPANIES

Two Additional Tax Measures Introduced at Albany.

THE RATE FIXED IS 1 PER CENT.

Banks Are to Collect that Charge on Value of Shares as Determined Annually by the Controller.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Two additional tax bills, which, it is understood, have the approval of the Governor, were introduced to-day by Mr. Lewis of Monroe. One covers the proposed tax of one per cent. on trust companies and the other applies to shares of stock in banks, which are made to pay one per cent. on their value.

It has been computed by experts on taxation that an exaction of this kind upon the capital of banks and trust companies will bring into the State Treasury between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000. The total amount of the capitalization, undivided profits, and surplus of banks amounts to $385,133,329, of which about $55,000,000 is in real estate, leaving about $330,000,000 in personal property in such capital and surplus. The text of the Trust Company Tax bill is as follows:

Every trust company incorporated, organized, or formed under, by, or pursuant to a law of this State, shall pay to the State annually for the privilege of exercising its corporate franchise or carrying on its business in such corporate or organized capacity, an annual tax which shall be equal to 1 per centum on the amount of its capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits.

Every trust company liable to pay a tax under Section 187 A of this chapter shall, on or before Aug. 1 in each year, make a written report to the Controller of its condition at the close of business on June 30 preceding, separately stating the amount of its capital stock, the amount of its surplus, and the amount of its undivided profits, and containing such other data, information, or matter as the Controller may require.

A tax imposed by Sections 182 of this chapter shall be due and payable into the State Treasury on or before the 15th day of January in each year. A tax imposed by Section 184 of this chapter on a transportation or transmission corporation, or by Section 185, on elevated railroads or surface railroads not operated by steam, or Section 187 of this chapter, on an insurance corporation, shall be due and payable into the State Treasury on or before the 1st day of August in each year. A tax imposed by Sections 187 A, 187 B, or 187 C, shall be due and payable into the State Treasury on or before the 1st day of September in each year. A tax imposed by Section 188 of this chapter, on a foreign banker, shall be due and payable into the State Treasury on or before Feb. 1 in each year; if such tax in any case is not paid within thirty days after the same becomes due, or if the report of any such corporation is not made within the time required by this article, the corporation, association, joint stock company, person, or partnership liable to pay the tax shall pay into the State Treasury, in addition to the amount of such tax, a sum equal to 5 per centum thereof, and 1 per centum additional for each month the tax remains unpaid, which sum shall be added to the tax and paid or collected therewith.

Every corporation, association, joint stock company, person or partnership failing to make the annual report required by this article, or failing to make any special report required by the Controller, within any reasonable time to be specified by him, shall forfeit to the people of the State the sum of $100 for every such failure, and the additional sum of $10 for each day that such failure continues. Such tax shall be a lien upon and bind all the real and personal property of the corporation, joint stock company, or association liable to pay the same from the time when it is payable until the same is paid in full.

The Banking Tax bill provides:

An annual tax for the use of the State of 1 per centum of the actual value of the shares of stock of every bank and banking association having capital stock and authorized to do business in this State and incorporated, organized, or formed under, by or pursuant to a law of this State or of the United States is hereby imposed upon such shares in the city or town where the principal place of business of such bank or banking association is located. The actual value of each share of stock of each such bank or banking association shall be ascertained and fixed by the Controller as of the 1st day of July in each year, by adding together the capital, surplus, and undivided profits of such bank or banking association, and dividing the result by the number of outstanding shares thereof. No deduction shall be made for indebtedness of any shareholder.

Every bank and banking association the shares of which are subject to a tax under Section 187 C of this chapter, shall, between the 1st and 5th days of July in each year make a written report to the Controller of its condition at the close of business on June 30 preceding, separately stating the amount of its capital, surplus, and undivided profits and the number of its shares issued and outstanding, together with such other data, information, or matter as the Controller may require.

On or before July 20 in each year the Controller shall make a provisional estimate of the capital, surplus, undivided profits, number of shares issued, and the value of each share as provided by Section 187 C of this chapter, as the same existed on the 1st day of July preceding, of each bank and banking association, and shall mail a copy of such estimate to each such bank and banking association, which shall give notice thereof to its shareholders by posting the same conspicuously at its principal place of business, and by mailing to each of them whose Post Office address is known a notice that such estimate has been so posted.

Such estimate of the Controller shall also specify a day not less than fifteen days after the mailing thereof, when he will give an oral public hearing of any objections thereto. The Controller shall consider any objections to such estimate filed in his office on any day prior to the day specified in the estimate for the public hearing, and on such day shall hear any objections that may be made thereto. On or before the 15th day of August in each year the Controller shall finally fix and determine the gross amount of tax due from the owners of the shares of stock of each bank and banking association, and shall mail a notice thereof to such bank or banking association and to the State Treasurer.

Each bank and banking association, the shares of which are assessed as provided by this article, shall collect the amount of the taxes so fixed and determined from the several owners of its shares of stock and pay the same to the Treasurer of the State on or before the 1st day of September in each year, and any bank or banking association failing so to do, or failing in any other duty required by this article, shall be personally liable by way of penalty, to the State for the gross amount of the taxes due from all the owners of its shares of stock, and for the additional amount of $100 for every day of delay. Every bank and banking association paying to the State, on or before the 1st day of September in each year, the taxes due upon the shares of its stock, shall have a lien on the shares of stock and on all property of the several share owners in its hands, or which may at any time come into its hands for reimbursement of the taxes so paid on account of the several shareholders, with legal interest.

The personal property of every corporation, company, association, or partnership taxable under this article, other than for an organization tax, shall be exempt from assessment and taxation upon its personal property for State purposes, if all taxes due and payable under this article have been paid thereby, and the owners of the shares of stock of bank and banking associations liable to a tax under Section 187 C of this chapter, shall not be liable to taxation for State purposes in the tax district in which such bank or banking association is located, but shall in no other respect be relieved from assessment and taxation by reason of the provisions of this article.

The personal property of a private or individual banker, actually employed in his business as such banker, shall be exempt from taxation for State purposes, if such private or individual banker shall have paid all taxes due and payable under this article. Such corporation and private or individual banker shall in no other respect be relieved from assessment and taxation by reason of the provisions of this article.

LEGISLATURE'S PROCEEDINGS.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—In the Senate this morning Senator Wilcox of the Committee on Penal Institutions reported favorably on the bill for the appointment of a State Commissioner of Prisons and abolishing the State Prison Commission. It fixes the term of office of the Commissioner at four years instead of three.

Senator Raines of the Committee on Railroads reported favorably on the bill giving further jurisdiction to the Buffalo Grade Crossing Commissioner relative to grade crossings. It was ordered to a third reading.

In Committee of the Whole Senator Grady attacked the Wilcox bill legalizing the action of the Board of Supervisors, which is Republican, in changing the time of holding town meetings from Spring to Fall. He said there was no way to stop the bill, but there was a way to proclaim to the people its unfairness. Seneca County is Democratic, but by chance, and with the aid of "hoodle" a Republican Board of Supervisors has been elected. Now the Republican leaders are endeavoring to change its political complexion. A mean political advantage is being sought for and above the wishes of the people.

Senator Wilcox declared the bill was simply an economical measure, designed to save the expenses of too many elections.

Senator Raines repelled the insinuation that "the sinews of war" had anything to do with the influencing of voters in Seneca County. It was nothing unusual to seek such relief as the Supervisors of Seneca County were doing. If Tammany Hall had asked to legalize the votes of its female workers and voters (laughter) there might be a reasonable objection made, but the people of Seneca County desired the enactment of this bill because it would save the expenses of Spring elections. The bill was advanced to third reading.

Senator Stranahan of the Cities Committee reported favorably on the bills for the acquisition of certain lands in Syracuse for park purposes; and authorizing the Elmira Common Council to award damages for the changing of Walnut Street grading.

These bills were passed: Senator Snyder's, authorizing the City of Kingston to issue bonds in aid of the Wallkill Valley Railroad, falling due Feb. 1, 1901; Assemblyman Cooley's, to limit the territory of Hastings-on-the-Hudson, by exempting from village limits property required for State highways.

To-day's calendar in the Assembly consisted of sixteen bills on the order of second reading.

Mr. Remsen's Bedford Avenue Improvement bill, for Brooklyn, was recommitted for a hearing.

Mr. H. Wilson of Brooklyn endeavored to have his bill, ceding certain lands under water at Governors Island to the United States Government, reported by the Revision Committee, advanced to a third reading. Messrs. Van Name of Richmond and Harburger of New York objected. The bill will take the usual course.

REMSEN'S NEW CANAL BILL.

Introduces a Measure Conforming to Gov. Odell's Wishes—Governor Likely to Support It.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Assemblyman Remsen to-day introduced the canal bill which was drawn up at the suggestion of Gov. Odell and Superintendent of Public Works Partridge. He will substitute it for his own bill, to which Gov. Odell and Superintendent Partridge took exception. The bill which Mr. Remsen put in to-day is the same as the existing law except that it removes the $50,000 capitalization limit upon corporations formed to do business upon the canals. It differs from the bill which he introduced a week ago in that it contains the provision that "no railroad corporation shall have, own, or hold any stock in any such corporation," meaning canal corporations.

The action of the Governor in having Mr. Remsen change his original bill is indicative of his strong purpose to improve the commerce of the canals if it is possible to do so by removing what Superintendent Partridge has repeatedly urged is the barrier in the way of an increased volume of business upon the State's waterways. In view of the circumstances connected with the introduction of Mr. Remsen's second canal bill it may be taken for granted that the influence of the Administration will be exerted to pass the measure at this session. The passage of the bill will mean without doubt the formation of a company with a large capitalization to do business upon the canals. If the results which Gov. Odell and Superintendent Partridge so confidently expect to follow the operation of such a company are realized, sentiment in favor of the further improvement of the canals is sure to grow. A powerful argument will have been created for additional expenditure to make the State's waterways all that it was contemplated they should be.

The incident in connection with the Remsen bill has confirmed in the minds of canal improvement advocates the impression which they received from the Governor's message that his faith in benefits to flow from the improvement of the canals was strong. They are now entertaining high hopes of seeing the canals brought to such a stage of development under Gov. Odell's administration as to furnish the competition with railroad transportation for which they were designed.

POLICE AND ELECTION BILLS.

Both Advanced in the Senate—To be Discussed Next Week—No Delay in the Assembly.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—The New York City Police bill and Bureau of Elections bill were both advanced a legislative notch to-day. In the Senate Chairman Stranahan of the Committee on Cities, not having received any word from New York respecting a hearing upon the bill, decided to push it along without further delay. He moved that the bill be taken up by the Senate.

Senator Grady asked that the bill be laid aside until next Tuesday. The purpose of his request, he said, was to secure time to frame and place on record all of the amendments to the bill which his party favored. Most important of these amendments were those which vest the sole power of removal in the Mayor and prevent the removal of the Commissioner except upon charges which have been sustained upon a hearing. When these two amendments and any others which he may have are submitted by Senator Grady next Tuesday the bill will then be discussed by the Senate.

The time to be allowed for debate upon the bill has not yet been agreed upon. The probability seems to be that Senator Grady will be given such time as he desires in opposition to the bill. Chairman Stranahan will make the principal argument in its favor. Senator Grady said to-day he had no hope of defeating the bill or of securing its amendment in any material way.

As soon as the bill is passed by the Senate it will go over to the Assembly, and there is every prospect that its consideration by the Assembly will be speedy. The bill as originally introduced in the Assembly and reported by the Assembly Committee on Cities has been laid aside in order that the amended Senate bill might be acted upon and time saved. Unless good reason develops why the Assembly Committee on Cities should hold it for a while, it is likely to be reported back to the Assembly favorably at once and a vote demanded.

In the Assembly to-day Chairman Kelsey of the Committee on Cities called up the Bureau of Elections bill, which is the same as the measure introduced in the Senate by Chairman Stranahan. Mr. Kelsey asked that the bill have its third reading. This leads to the conclusion that the party programme is to shelve the Raines Bureau of Elections bill. When Mr. Kelsey made his motion for the third reading of the bill Assemblyman McKeown of Brooklyn said he had understood that the bill was to be temporarily laid aside. Mr. Kelsey said he had no such understanding. Mr. McKeown said he had a number of amendments which he desired to introduce. Speaker Nixon informed Mr. McKeown that he would have a chance to present amendments desired when the bill came up on its final passage.

BILLS TO FIX HALF FARES.

One Measure for Workmen, Another for School Children.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Assemblyman Dempsey to-day introduced a blanket bill with regard to charges upon street railways, elevated railways, and ferries of New York City during what he designates as "workers' hours." Mr. Dempsey's bill provides as follows:

On all street railways, both surface and elevated, operating in the City of New York between the hours of 5:30 A. M. and 7:30 A. M., hereby designated "workers' hours," there shall be given to each passenger on payment of one fare a return or excursion ticket, good only for the day on which it is issued; and to be used between the hours of 5 P. M. and 6:30 P. M.

On all ferries operating between different parts of the City of New York and all ferries operating between the City of New York and New Jersey, (excepting all ferries that now charge half-rate fares during working hours,) between the hours of 5:30 A. M. and 7:30 A. M., hereby designated as "workers' hours," there shall be given to each passenger on payment of one fare, a return excursion ticket, good only for the day on which it is issued, and to be used between the hours of 5 P. M. and 6 p. m.

This act shall in no way curtail or abridge the existing system of transfers. This act shall be operative every day in the year, except Sundays and legal holidays.

Assemblyman Juengst of Kings introduced a bill which provides for a five-cent fare for round trips for school children on street, surface, and elevated railroads in cities of the first-class between the hours of 8 and 9 in the morning, 12 noon, and 1 in the afternoon and 3 and 4 in the afternoon. Coupon tickets are to be issued by the companies, and the teachers and Principals are to issue them to the pupils. Any Principal or teacher who shall furnish the tickets to others than pupils, or who shall attempt to use such tickets, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

FIFTY-NINTH STREET CIRCLE.

Senator Elsberg Withdraws His Extension Bill.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Senator Elsberg to-day stated that he had withdrawn the Fifty-ninth Street circle extension bill because he had been misinformed by the person for whom he had introduced the measure. He said:

"A gentleman came to me with a letter of introduction written by a personal friend of mine, and requested me to introduce the circle extension bill. He told me that the property owners in the neighborhood, including the Paulist Fathers, desired the bill because it would wipe out a hotel which had not borne a very good reputation.

"Subsequent to the introduction of the bill I was informed that the bill was the outgrowth of a scheme on the part of property owners to sell their property. I at once wrote to the Paulist Fathers and they officially informed me that they had never heard of the bill and had no interest in it. I saw that I had been deceived by the gentleman for whom I had introduced the measure, and I have done the only proper thing I could do—withdraw it."

BUFFALO FAIR LIQUOR BILL.

Exposition Management Takes No Part in Fight for a Wide-Open Town.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—The Pan-American Exposition management is keeping hands off in the fight for a wide-open town during the period of the Exposition. The saloonkeepers now have a bill before the Legislature allowing them to keep open at all times except between the hours of midnight Saturday and 1 P. M. Sunday. For this privilege they are willing to pay $25 additional license. The liberal element in Buffalo is backing the bill, but the church-going element is against it.

The Exposition management does not want to offend either one of the elements, and has announced that it will take no action one way or the other, as regards the proposed legislation. Petitions upon both sides of the question are pouring in upon Speaker Nixon. He received one to-day from church people, in which it was said: "The bill is an outrage on civilization, and its passage will be followed by swift retribution."

Tax on Street Car Advertising.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Assemblyman Juengst to-day introduced a bill the purpose of which is to derive revenue from corporations or persons who use public conveyances for the display of advertising. The bill provides that any corporation or person operating for revenue any steam railroad, street surface railway, or other public conveyance the motive power of which is steam, electricity, horse power, or compressed air, shall pay yearly to the State Treasurer an annual tax of $10 for each and every car or vehicle in or upon which a business advertisement is displayed. Mr. Juengst has no figures upon the amount of revenue which his bill would yield the State, but he says the returns would be very large, especially from New York City.

Separate Trade Schools for Girls.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Senator William Willets Cocks of Old Westbury this morning introduced a bill, which authorizes the Boards of Education of first and second class cities to establish and maintain separate schools of instruction for girls in trades and industries, and for giving systematic industrial training in all branches of domestic science, whenever the authorities of such cities authorized by law to raise money for school purposes by taxation shall make provisions for the establishment and maintenance of such schools.

Special Juries in Criminal Cases.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—The Kelsey bill, providing for abolishing special juries in criminal cases and a special jury Commissioner in New York City, which embodies one of the many recommendations suggested by Gov. Odell in his first annual message, will be reported favorably to-morrow by the Cities Committee of the Assembly. The Senate Cities Committee will give a hearing on the bill which was introduced by Senator Elsberg on Tuesday of next week.

To Regulate Barbers' Shops.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—The bill fostered by the State Barbers' Association providing for the sanitary inspection of barbers' shops and the registration of barbers, introduced last year by Assemblyman Brennan of Kings, was reintroduced to-day by Assemblyman Ruehl of Erie. The bill provides for the creation of a State Board of Examiners.

To Close Butchers' Shops on Sundays.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—By request of the State Retail Butchers' Association and some 15,000 journeymen butchers, Assemblyman O'Connell of New York City to-day introduced a bill to compel the closing of butchers' shops throughout the State on Sundays. Mr. O'Connell feels assured that his bill will become a law.

MISCELLANEOUS BILLS.

Senator WHITE—Amending the labor law, increasing the salary of Mining Inspectors from $1,200 to $1,800; prohibiting the working of two or more mines in the same vein, within ten feet of boundary lines between such mines.

Senator COCKS—Providing for the establishing of a public park in Edgemere, Queens County.

Senator MARSHALL—Amending Chapter 583 of the Laws of 1888, relating to parks in Brooklyn; permitting the erection of churches or schools near the park at Union and Degraw Streets.

Senator AHEARN—Requiring the written approval of the New York Fire Commissioner before any claims are paid to volunteer fire companies.

Senator McKINNEY—Making trespassing on private parks a misdemeanor.

Senator AMBLER—Prohibiting the use of name or initials of any milk dealer by other dealers in milk and removing the requirement that cans are to be branded with the name of the county.

Senator FOLEY—Adding a new section to the "domestic relations law," requiring that persons to be joined in marriage shall obtain a license from the County Clerk in the county where said marriage is to be solemnized, a fee of $1 is to be charged for issuing the license.

These bills were introduced in the Assembly to-day:

Mr. GALBRAITH—Amending the election law so as to provide for an additional ballot box for "town propositions."

Mr. REMSEN—Requiring New York City to pay assessments for the grading and paving of Seabreeze Avenue, in Gravesend.

Mr. PRINCE—Authorizing the Regents to admit to practice physicians heretofore admitted by State examining boards in other States of the United States.

Mr. PRINCE—Amending the Civil Code by providing that in actions brought by the Municipal Court of New York City by wage earners to recover for services rendered, if the plaintiff recovers a judgment not exceeding $50, exclusive of costs and the action shall have been brought within three months after the cause of action accrued, no property of the defendant is exempt from levy and sale by virtue of an execution against property issued thereupon.

Mr. HAMMOND—Amending the election law by providing that County Boards of Canvassers of a county containing a city of the second class shall be the City Board of Canvassers of such city.

Mr. PLATT—Appropriating $90,600 for the completion, construction, and improvements to grounds and repair of certain buildings of the New York State Soldiers and Sailors' Home at Bath.

Mr. BRYAN—Providing that the punishment for murder in the first degree shall be death or imprisonment for life, and for murder in the second degree imprisonment for life or a term of thirty years. The choice of penalty is to be left to the jury trying the case.

135th Street Improvement.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Ex-Senator Ford appeared before the Assembly Cities Committee this afternoon in advocacy of the bill to widen and improve One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street, west of St. Nicholas Avenue, New York City. The total estimated cost of such improvement is $225,000. Mr. Ford contended that the city had not the power to make the improvement because the street had been closed by legislative enactment, and the only remedy was through the Legislature.

Hearing in Eighth District Contest.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—The Committee on Privileges and Election of the Assembly will sit in New York City to-morrow at the Hotel Cadillac to take testimony in the matter of the contest of Isidor Cohn for the seat of Assemblyman Charles S. Adler, representing the Eighth Assembly District. The contestant alleges an irregular count of the ballots. Assemblyman Adler's interests will be looked after by Frank Platt and Otto A. Rosalsky. G. A. Rogers will appear for Mr. Cohn.

John E. Kraft Takes Office.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—John E. Kraft of Kingston, the newly appointed State Civil Service Commissioner, to-day filed with the Secretary of State his oath of office. The State Civil Service Commission will meet on Thursday of next week and reorganize by electing a President in place of Silas W. Burt, who has retired from membership on the board.

Major Washington Content Retired.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Gov. Odell has retired Major Washington Content of the Twelfth Regiment of New York City. Major Content has served nineteen years, and is retired at his own request.

State Senator Parsons Very Ill.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—It is announced here that Senator Parsons of Rochester is very low at his home, and is not expected to recover. Little could be learned of the nature of his illness here this evening. It is known, however, that Senator Parsons has for the past year suffered considerably from stomach trouble, which lately has become chronic.

Clarence King Ill in London.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Clarence King, the geologist, is ill. He is widely known in this country, as well as in the United States, as an author and as the first Director of the United States Geological Survey, in 1878.

TO FIGHT CHARITIES PLAN.

Bishop Potter, Archbishop Corrigan, and Others Protest—State Board of Health to Fight Also.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—A protest against the bill to abolish the State Board of Charities and substitute therefor a single Commissioner, signed by Bishop H. C. Potter, Dr. Huntington of Grace Church, Archbishop Corrigan, Bishop Farley, Father Lavelle, the Rev. Lyman Abbott, and others will reach Gov. Odell to-morrow. The protest is said to be a vigorous criticism of the Governor's recommendation for the abolishment of the existing board. The signers of the protest are said to make it clear to the Governor that, in their view, the proposed change would work great harm to the State's charitable institutions.

At the hearing on the bill now before the Senate and Assembly some interesting figures will be presented to show that the administration of State charities under the existing system has been most economical as compared with the expenditure made in other States. The total expenditure for the New York State Board last year was $80,000. Massachusetts expended $600,000 last year for its administration of State charities. Those who have asked for the hearing are also prepared to show the committees having charge of the bill that in nearly every State where State charity work is being done on progressive lines a commission has been found to give the best administration.

It is understood to-day that the influential friends of members of the present State Board of Charities and State Board of Health will pool issues and do all in their power to defeat both bills. As in the case of the State Board of Charities, the State Board of Health is composed of one member from each of the eight judicial districts in the State. With the appointment of a single-headed Commissioner all these men are legislated out of office. The Secretaryship, held by Dr. Baxter L. Smelzer, is also abolished, and the high-salaried office is that of Commissioner, who must be a man of ten years' experience as a medical practitioner.

To-day the Senate Committee on Public Health held a meeting, Senator Audett presiding. Dr. Smelzer appeared and made formal application for a hearing on the single-headed Health Commission bill. He said that a number of friends of the present board wanted to be heard on the subject. The committee decided to hold a hearing next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

LEGISLATURE IS SLOW.

Opposition to Some of the Governor's Plans May Be the Cause—Gov. Odell Satisfied.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—The Legislature is not making that advance in its work which was expected at the opening of the session. Speaker Nixon has already warned the Assembly committees that they were not showing proper diligence in reporting bills. He said an early adjournment would be impossible unless more haste was made. There are some who see in the Legislature's slowness the manifestation of a disposition to break away from the programme of work set for the Legislature by the Governor. It is asserted in some quarters that the unpopularity of some of the measures advocated by the Governor is responsible for the Legislature's failure to proceed with the big burst of speed which it gave promise of at the start.

It can be stated authoritatively that the Governor is quite satisfied with the progress being made. If there is any decided antagonism within his party to any of his important recommendations, he is unaware of it. He regards the progress which has thus far been made by the Legislature as normal. Already four of the bills embodying his recommendations for single-headed commissions have come back from the committees without encountering opposition, but a hard fight is expected on the bill for the abolishment of the State Board of Charities.

The biggest fights of the session will come on the tax bills. The Governor can do all in his power to have these bills passed, but he realizes thoroughly the opposition which must be overcome, and is none too sanguine of the results.

HOME RULE FOR QUEENS.

Citizens Object to Men Who Live in Manhattan and Go Over to Queens Every Morning to Work.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Assemblyman Keenan said to-day, in discussing his bill providing for "the submission of the question of the separation of certain territory in the City of Greater New York under a single municipal administration to be known as the City of Queens, to a vote of the people":

"The people of Queens are tired of the existing arrangement. They want to have a government of their own. Under the existing system Queens is nothing more than an appanage to Greater New York, and is subjected to the rule of New Yorkers. Fully two-thirds of the officeholders in Queens are residents of Manhattan. They come over on the ferries to Queens every morning and go back every evening. The citizens of Queens are tired of the sight of Manhattanites coming over to Queens every day and running its affairs. They want home rule.

"Another cause of complaint is that Queens does not receive its just apportionment of funds under the present system. Last year we received but $75,000, while the Bronx got $200,000. I think those are the figures. We think we ought to have as much, or at least, nearly as much, as the Bronx."

DINNER TO WALTER S. CARTER.

A dinner was given at the University Club last night to Walter S. Carter by his former and present associates, in testimony of his long and continued interest in the younger members of the bar. Sixty covers were laid. Paul D. Cravath presided and delivered an address. William R. Hornblower responded to the toast, "The Guest of the Evening," and his remarks were mainly a personal tribute to Mr. Carter.

The latter, in responding, dealt largely in reminiscences. Sixty lawyers now in practice graduated from his office, and in twenty-five years he has assisted in the graduation of about a thousand young lawyers from Columbia University and the University of New York.

Remarks were also made by Louis Vandies of Boston, John E. Searles of Brooklyn, Col. Robert Grier Monroe, Assistant District Attorney George W. Schurman, Prof. Keener of the Columbia Law School, and others.

Letters regretting their inability to attend were received from President Eliot of Harvard College, Prof. Schurman of Cornell, Lloyd W. Bowers of Chicago, United States Judge Brewer, Justice Vann, ex-Chief Justice Andrews, and others.

Lindsay Russell, Louis D. Bright, and George O. Redington comprised the Committee of Arrangements.

HAD DRUGGIST ARRESTED.

Mrs. Ellison Received a Bad Check in a Drug Store Transaction, She Says.

Ichabod C. Bryant, a druggist, employed at 152 Broadway, was arrested yesterday afternoon on a warrant sworn out by Mrs. Laura Leake Ellison of 645 Madison Avenue, and was later arraigned in the Centre Street Police Court on a charge of grand larceny.

Mrs. Ellison, in her complaint, says that on or about Dec. 12, 1900, she sold to Bryant the stock and fixtures of a drug store owned by her at 649 Madison Avenue, for $4,000. She accepted promissory notes in payment. These notes were indorsed by a person whose name is being withheld by the police at present, but who, it is said, will be arrested in connection with the case. This person was represented to her as being the owner of considerable real estate. Believing the representations to be true, Mrs. Ellison accepted the notes without question and surrendered the store to Bryant and the alleged accomplice.

Twelve days after the transfer, Mrs. Ellison swears, Bryant disposed of about $200 worth of the contents of the store, and a day or two later he informed her that the promissory notes given her were not worth the paper they were written on, as the indorser had no real or personal property whatever. She was asked to return the notes, which she did, receiving a check on the First National Bank of Bound Brook, N. J., for $233.33 in settlement of all claims. This check turned out to be worthless. Mrs. Ellison, to whom the drug store reverted after Bryant had vacated, has since been trying to collect the amount of this check.

At the hearing yesterday Magistrate Pool, at the suggestion of counsel on both sides, adjourned the case to Jan. 28 and admitted Bryant to $1,500 bail. It is expected that the alleged accomplice will be arrested before the date of the examination.

GUILFOYLE CALLS MR. CUTTING

Tenement Commission President Asked to Explain Alleged Violations of Law in His Own Buildings.

W. Bayard Cutting, President of the Tenement House Commission, was yesterday summoned before Deputy Commissioner of Buildings John Guilfoyle in Brooklyn, and asked to explain several alleged violations of the law discovered in the tenement buildings owned by the Cutting estate on Thirty-ninth Street, between Second and Third Avenues, Brooklyn.

Some time ago Mr. Cutting decided to alter the interior of the tenements, thirty-three in number, so that each house would accommodate three families. It is alleged that the work was done without the consent of the Department of Buildings.

When an application to put in plumbing in the houses was made later, the Department of Buildings, it is asserted, found that the buildings had not been constructed so as to permit of each of them being occupied by three families, according to the provisions of the tenement house law. Permits were then granted for the putting in of only two sinks, for two families, instead of three sinks for three families, in each of the houses. A third sink, however, it is alleged, was put in each of the tenements without a permit from the Department of Buildings.

At the hearing yesterday the Building Inspector of the district and a plumber who reported the alleged violations of the law, testified. Mr. Cutting will probably be heard in the matter next Thursday, when the hearing will be resumed.

FIRE IN TIFFANY'S CELLAR.

A curious sort of a fire bothered Tiffany & Co. during the greatest portion of yesterday. It was a fire which started among the anthracite coal which the firm had placed in its coal vaults under the Fifteenth Street side of the Tiffany building. When a hole was finally dug into the asphalt pavement to get at the seat of the trouble it was found to be in a spot perhaps thirty feet removed from the Union Square front of the building.

There were 102 tons of coal in the vaults. The fire was discovered some time between 7:30 and 8 o'clock. It made itself known to the Tiffany employes by a strong odor of coal gas, which was more plainly discernible on the sidewalk in front of the building than in the interior. Engineer Charles Knight soon satisfied himself that the coal in the bunkers was ablaze.

An alarm of fire was sent in. The firemen found, on delving among the coal vaults filled with gas, a trying task, and several of them were overcome by the fumes, but were quickly resuscitated when they reached the sidewalk.

There was much speculation as to the cause of the blaze until Chief Croker arrived. He discovered a gas pipe running horizontally against the northern wall of the vault. He was impressed with the belief that somebody had allowed the gas from that gas jet to burn, or that coal had been piled up around it near enough to set it on fire.

CUBANS BURN CANE FIELDS.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Jan. 24.—Fifteen hundred acres of sugarcane were burned yesterday, as the result of political friction, on Joseph Rigney's plantation, Celtahueca, near Manzanillo, the richest plantation in this province. During the war against Spain Mr. Rigney refused to pay tribute to the Cubans. For two years he supported a Spanish garrison, but ultimately the Cubans destroyed the property, with the exception of the mill, valued at $1,000,000. This year the plantation was fully equipped to produce sugar to the full capacity of the mill.

WANTS HER BODY EXHUMED.

District Attorney Philbin yesterday received from Lawyer David Newburger a letter requesting the exhumation of the body of Mabel Charlotte Kreizer, sixteen years old, who died Nov. 19 last in the House of the Good Shepherd ostensibly of pneumonia, and is buried in New Calvary Cemetery.

Mr. Newburger states that Mrs. Letitia Kreizer, the girl's mother, has made affidavit that, in her belief, her daughter's death was caused by violence or poison.

Mr. Philbin assigned one of his staff to investigate Mr. Newburger's statements. Permission will be granted to exhume the body if the District Attorney is satisfied a crime was committed.

The Wanamaker Store

Here's a Hurried Good-bye to Odd Lots of GLOVES

THIS radical clean-up sale is the safety valve of this very particular Glove Store. The chiefest virtue of a kid glove is its freshness—the soft elasticity of the new kidskin. No other store in America gets new supplies so frequently as we do. Our manufacturer over in Grenoble, France, is working for us all the time; and new supplies of Princess May, Royale and Victoria gloves are coming as fast as he gets enough made up for a shipment. Now comes clean-up time. We want the whole stock fresh and new. We have gone through the stocks and culled out those that have been here too long, as well as odd lots, less popular colorings, or styles to be discontinued. Then we have brought out the gloves that have been tried on, or exchanged. Everything but the newest, latest-comers is brought out for prompt selling to-day; so that men and women who come next week can't find in this store anything but the freshest and most immaculate gloves. That's why the present loss pays us.

It pays you because all sizes, and 'most all colorings of Men's, Women's and Children's Gloves in a large variety of sorts are to-day marked at

from $1, $1.50 and $1.85

There are Women's Clasp, Button, Pique and Suede Gloves, and Mousquetaire Gloves, in opera shades, that were $1 to $1.85

Men's Clasp, Castor, Suede, Pique and P. X. M. Gloves, that were $1 to $2 Children's Button, Clasp, Pique and Suede Gloves, that were $1 to $1.50

It is an occasion not to be met again in a twelve-month, and thrifty men and women will pick the gloves out by the dozen or half-dozen. Counters will be arranged by glove sizes so that selection will be convenient. The selling occupies the Main Aisle and other parts of the Main floor.

Progress of the Sale of UNDER-MUSLINS

This has been a most trying week in the stocks, ample though they were. There are indications now that certain lots will not last through to-day. These corset covers, for instance. That is, the 25c and 35c grades. There are fifteen styles at these two prices, but hardly any one is complete in sizes. Hence a new price to-day—

Eighteen Cents for Choice

All sizes in one style or another.

Then there's been a very noticeable shrinkage in White Petticoats—the $1 and $1.25 kinds. They're all made with deep ruffles and trimmed with dainty laces and embroideries. Only four styles, and not all sizes in either, but yours is here in one of the pretty styles.

Choice Seventy-five Cents

Still good supply of all other kinds. All highest-grade muslin underwear—all very moderately priced. Second floor, Cross Aisle.

HOUSE GOWNS

Women's warm wrappers of flannelette. Cozy, attractive—both in making and pricing. There are two popular styles. One with the newest dress sleeves, the other with the very effective Kimono sleeve. Of prettily striped flannelette, with solid colored border.

Values in the two groups up to $2.25. None is less than a good $1.50 house-gown. All at one price now,

One Dollar Each

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Dressing Sacques

Choice of two neat and excellent kinds, at a price considerably lower than the regular moderate marking. One lot is of ribbon-trimmed, solid colored eiderdowns. The other, of braid-trimmed, neatly striped flannelette. Both made in full front, fitted back styles. Were good values at 85c each.

Choose at Fifty Cents

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

A NEW CANDY

"Nougatine Butter Crisp"—one-inch squares made of pure sugar, best butter and ground nuts. A very good candy, fully qualified to become a member of our list of invented candies. Twenty cents a pound. Basement.

Under-price Store

There's an unusually comprehensive collection of goods here now, all priced very much under value. These are the new groups:

Sterling Silver Toilet Ware—

Perfect goods. Desirable designs. These reduced prices tell all the rest: Handled Mirrors, $4.25, were $5.75; Hair Brushes, $2, were $3; $2.75, were $3.75; Military Brushes, $1.75, were $2.50; Cloth Brushes, $1.75, were $2.50; Combs, 50c, were 75c; Hooks, Files, etc., 50c, were 75c to $1.25; Puff Boxes, $1, were $1.65; $1.55, were $2; Salve Jars, 50c, were 75c to $1.50.

Extracts and Toilet Waters—

Various high-grade perfumes by the ounce, and priced less that way than if bought in regular bottles. All the Queen Mary Extracts at 25c an ounce—regularly about 40c. The Queen Mary Toilet Waters at 5c instead of 10c. All of the well-known Paris extracts, at 10c to 20c an ounce cheaper than regularly when sold in bottles put up by the makers. We furnish bottles.

Upholstery Remnants and Squares—

Cretonnes, denims, tapestries, damasks, velours—prices a third to a half less than they were for goods off the piece. There is a wide variety of them. Particularly of the plain and figured velours, tapestries and armures. These are in 1 to 6-yard lengths, and the prices range from 50c to $2.25. They were 75c to $3.50.

Eureka Suit Hangers—

These are very clever contrivances for keeping in shape either men's or women's clothing. About 700 of these are now priced at 10c each. Regularly 15c.

Children's Lawn Aprons—

Four lots, for children 2 to 12 years of age. All trimmed with lace or embroidery. Mostly perfect goods—a few a bit soiled. 50c for the 75c kind, 65c for the $1.10, 75c for $1.35, and $1 for $1.85 quality.

Fancy Corded GINGHAMS
At Half Price

These are crisp, bright ginghams, made up for this coming season; and will be sold in good stores all over the land at double to-day's price. But the manufacturers are about through selling to jobbers now, and, finding a surplus on their hands, they sought an opportunity for distribution where the selling would not hurt regular trade.

Naturally the ginghams were offered to Wanamaker's.

The lot includes more than sixty entirely new designs, in attractive corded patterns in combinations of light and dark blue, red, pink, heliotrope and black, each with white, in handsome stripes and plaids. Sixty thousand yards are ready this morning at

12½c a yard, instead of 25c

Special Counters in the Rotunda.

Two Offerings of Men's TROUSERS

This store has a broad reputation for the trousers it sells every day in the year. Quality and prices are unmatched in every regular line. Of course we never sell any but absolutely pure wool fabrics—don't compete with cotton-mixed goods; but to-day's news tells of a price on pure wool trousers that will scarcely be matched by even cotton-mixtures.

Odds and ends of stock—but every pair good, stylishly cut and substantially made—of blue, black and fancy cheviots; and some neat worsteds. Two hundred and sixty pairs, to-day at

$2.50 EACH, Worth $3.50 to $5

All sizes, too—though not in every style.

Then here's another lot—

Five hundred pure worsted trousers—new, tasteful patterns, all—at $5. They are excellent $7.50 values. Second floor, Fourth avenue.

BOOK Bargains

The big yearly event is drawing to a close. Yet many splendid offerings remain for to-day—perhaps for a few days more. Especially rich choosing among the sets. And here also is a partial list of always-wanted single volumes. Prices are a half to two-thirds regular:

Sets of Books—

Charles Dickens' Works; 15 vols., $2.60

Bulwer Lytton's Novels, 13 vols. $2.25

Lew Wallace's Fair God, illustrated edition, 2 vols., $3.25

House of the Seven Gables, illustrated edition. Nathaniel Hawthorne. 2 vols., $1.35

Encyclopedia Britannica, with supplements. 25 vols., cloth $28.50; half morocco, $40

Shakespeare's Works. 12 vols., handy volume edition, $1.50

Harry Lorrequer. Charles Lever. 2 vols., 60c

Charles O'Malley. Charles Lever. 2 vols., 60c

The Barrys. Shan F. Bullock. 20c

A lot of absolutely perfect books are marked 15c each, though fully as good as our regular 35c kinds. This little price, merely because a change in the binding has been determined on by their publishers. Some of the titles:

Sign of the Four. A. Conan Doyle
Tillyloss Scandal. J. M. Barrie
Twice Told Tales. Nathaniel Hawthorne
Vicar of Wakefield. Oliver Goldsmith
White Company. A. Conan Doyle
Wing and Wing
Abraham Lincoln, Life of. Barrett
Alice. Bulwer Lytton. Byron's Poems.

Makers of Venice. Mrs. Oliphant

Book Store, Ninth street.

ANIMAL RUGS

This term means Rugs mounted in animal shapes—the real skins with heads set in very life-like appearance, and mostly with claws and tails. Every skin in this collection was selected with exceeding care. They are of the best quality. All have been specially treated so as to render them moth-proof.

Grizzly Bear, open jaw, $200 to $130.
Grizzly Bear, closed jaw, $150 to $100.
Mongolian Tiger, $100 to $65.
Snow Leopard, $75 to $50.
Black Wolves, $50 to $33.
Red Foxes, $12.50 to $8.
Wild Cats, $6 to $4.

Third floor.

Reliable SHOES, $3

A new standard of values in shoes for women, was marked by the advent of The Reliable. No shoes previously sold at $3 or $3.50 approached such a standard of merit. None to come in the near future will equal them, though the giants of shoe selling have realized that they must give you better shoes for your money since The Reliable appeared.

Made in all popular styles. Among those in most frequent demand are these: High cut box calf skating shoes, stout kidskin shoes for walking, patent leather shoes for calling or evening wear. Shoes for every occasion in the best shapes.

Three Dollars a Pair

Fourth avenue and Ninth street.

Boys' CLOTHING

One hundred suits of all-wool cheviots, with single or double-breasted coats, sizes 8 to 16 years, that were already low-priced at $7 to $10,

Choice at Five Dollars

Reefers of kersey and cheviots, sizes 3 to 10 years, values up to $10. Price, $5.

Raglans and other overcoats of excellent cheviots, in various shades, values $12 to $15. Price, $9. Second floor, Fourth Avenue.

Children's HATS

Every style of every-day headwear for every sort of weather. A particularly wide assortment of boys' hats—though you'll hardly find fault with the variety shown for girls.

Some are reduced in price. Odd sizes of Alpines and Golf Caps. Regularly 50c to $1.50—now 10c for golf caps and 35c for the Alpines. Other styles at regular moderate prices:

All Around the Store

Electric House Lamps and Candles. These convenient, portable lamps are always ready for emergencies, with a bright light turned on by simply moving a switch. The dry battery will furnish current for 8 hours' continuous use, or a thousand "contacts." Prices, house lamps, in oak or ebony finish, $3.50; candlesticks, dull black, $3.50, silver-plated, $5; dark room lamp, amber glass, $3.50. Extra batteries, 25c each.

Renaissance Linens and Lace Scarfs, 20x54 in., in an assortment of very handsome designs, are newly priced at $3.50 each, whereas they formerly were $5 to $7.50. An excellent opportunity to secure these decorative pieces at much less than usual.

Table Linen Reduced. A splendid quality of half-bleached table-linen, which has the wearing qualities of fully bleached linen at 75c a yard, is priced at 45c, instead of 60c, as usually. A few washings make it white as snow.

Fancy Stationery Reduced. There is a rich collection of these pretty papers, in a broad variety of designs, on which the price has been sharply reduced. Papers which were recently priced at $1 and $1.50 a box are now marked 75c a box.

Drinking Glasses, securely and attractively protected by a wicker case resembling a miniature hamper, are 25c each. Small bottles, with patent stopper, wicker covered, are 25c and 35c.

Chickering Grand Pianos. Lovers of beautiful woods will be interested in the specimens of Branch Mahogany shown in the veneering of some Chickering Grands, just received. The richness and warmth of this beautifully grained wood makes it a fitting case for the nobility of tone of the instrument it contains.

Chinchilla Reefers. The recent Arctic blasts that swept the city admonished many a mother of shortcomings in her little boy's wardrobe. Seems a good time to suggest reefers. These are warmly lined with red flannel; have velvet collar; button to neck. Sizes 4 to 12 years. $6 each.

The Furnished Apartment. Safe to say that no ten-room flat in New York city is so admirably arranged, or so brimful of suggestion. Complete in every detail, lavishly, yet suitably furnished, it is a veritable delight to the lover of the newest and most beautiful in art as applied to house decoration.

Toilet Requisites. Imported puff-boxes, handsomely and strongly made of nickel, are 75c each. Rough handling, and the wear and tear of travel will not dent them.

Curious Weapons. Our Oriental expert has picked up some odd swords and scimetars of Persian and Afghan origin. Some have hilts decorated with gold and silver of elaborate design, and curiously shaped blades. Others, less expensive, are suitable for wall ornaments. Battle axes, maces and spears, reproductions of old weapons, are also included in the collection.

Framing. Carefully and well done, of course, in the Picture Store. Equally important is the price. You'll find that extremely moderate. Expert advice is freely given as to how to obtain best effects.

Powder Puffs. A dainty combination of fluffy powder-puff, to which is attached, by a ribbon, a pretty pin-cushion, is priced at $1 a set.

Comfortables at $1.75. They're filled with clean white cotton, covered with attractive printed cambric, and tied with ribbon. They were formerly sold at $2.25 each.

NAVAL BILL IN THE HOUSE

Consideration of the Measure Practically Completed.

Proposed Appropriations Make Total for the "New Navy" $310,000,000— Time to Stop, Cannon Says.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The House today continued consideration of the Naval Appropriation bill, and practically completed it before adjournment. One small matter went over until to-morrow. The debate upon the present bill has lacked the interesting and sensational features of recent years. The fight which the appropriation committee waged against hydrographic surveys under the auspices of the navy was abandoned this year by the committee, and several other questions, including armor plate, which usually entail much discussion, occasioned no comment whatever.

The provision for the increase of the navy was made the occasion of an interesting debate upon the length to which the building up of the navy was to go, and drew from Mr. Cannon, (Rep., Ill.,) Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, a notable statement to the effect that when ships now authorized and to be authorized had been completed, $320,000,000 would have been spent upon the new navy, and that, in his opinion, the time to stop will then have arrived. An amendment offered by Mr. Rixey, (Dem., Va.,) a member of the Naval Committee, to strike out the provision in the bill for two battleships and two cruisers, was defeated, 46 to 90.

Mr. Rixey, in opposing the provision in the bill for the increase of the navy, on the ground that the recent contracts let would for the present absorb the capabilities of our shipyards, became involved in a sharp dispute with Mr. Wheeler (Dem., Ky.,) who announced yesterday that he was in favor of the biggest navy in the world.

"I am not only in favor of my country," said Mr. Rixey, "when it is right, but I am in favor of it right or wrong."

"I am not in favor of following my country," replied Mr. Wheeler, "where to follow it means to indorse the subjection of a people and the crushing of their liberties."

Mr. Rixey said that if the building of the navy was rushed along at an inordinate rate, in a few years new inventions might make many of our new ships obsolete. He was in favor of going slower. Mr. Wheeler, in replying to Mr. Rixey, again contended, as on yesterday, that the Democratic Party always had been in favor of a strong navy.

"Is the gentleman aware," interposed Mr. Foss, (Rep., Ill.,) "that William J. Bryan, on the floor of this House in 1890, opposed the further construction of ships?"

"William Jennings Bryan," retorted Mr. Wheeler, "is a great, pure, and able Democrat, but he is not the Democratic Party." (Republican laughter and cries of "We thought he was.")

"That statement excites merriment on the Republican side of the House," continued Mr. Wheeler, "because men who recognize as their party shibboleth and mainspring of action the will of one man, Marcus Aurelius Hanna, cannot understand how Democrats can recognize a great and distinguished citizen and leader and at the same time differ from him on questions of policy."

Mr. Rixey offered an amendment to strike out the entire provision for the increase of the navy. Mr. Dayton (Rep., West Va.,) vigorously opposed the amendment, contending that if the Government abandoned the naval programme it would disappoint the generous sentiment manifested by the country toward the building up of the new navy.

Mr. Cannon, speaking to the amendment, said that in considering the amendment it was necessary to ascertain "where we were at." He was for a sufficient navy. But when it was sufficient, he was in favor of stopping. Since 1883, when the new navy began to be built, $227,000,000 had been appropriated for ships, (including the provision in the bill,) but not including $83,000,000 still due on contracts. To Mr. Wheeler, who interrupted him to inquire to whom the credit for the inauguration of the new navy was due, Mr. Cannon replied rather impatiently that the country at large did not care "three hurrahs in a hot place to whom the credit belonged." It was interested in results.

Mr. Cannon said he did not think Congress had appropriated too much for the navy, but he wanted the House to proceed with a full knowledge of what had been done. He did not think the United States needed the largest navy in the world. We would not be called upon to fight England. Her American possessions along our northern border constituted a bond of peace. But we needed a strong navy. We had the Philippines, and we were going to keep them. We could not get rid of them if we desired to. But we did not want a larger navy than was needed. "Since we have entered this bill," said he, "we will have gone as far as we should go, and should stop.

"With $753,000,000 of appropriations, including provision for the sinking fund, now in sight for the coming fiscal year," said he, in conclusion, "and as we are to reduce taxation, we should inquire diligently into all these matters, and not go beyond that which is necessary for the protection, glory, and honor of the country."

Mr. Foss defended the action of the committee, pointing out the various recommendations of the bureau chiefs and the Secretary of the Navy, ranging from thirty-two vessels by one of the former to eleven vessels by the Secretary. Under these circumstances, Mr. Foss submitted, the action of the committee, recommending the authorization of four was both moderate and conservative. The Rixey amendment was lost on a rising vote—49 to 90.

Mr. Vandiver (Dem., Mo.,) moved to strike out the provision for the construction of the two armored cruisers. This amendment also was lost. Mr. Fitzgerald offered an amendment providing the ships might be built in the Government navy yards. The motion was lost. After completing the bill, with the exception of a single paragraph, the House adjourned.

VEST AND THE SHIPPING BILL.

Wants to Pass It Because of the Harm It Would Do Republicans—Depew to Speak To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Senator Vest's prediction that the Ship Subsidy bill will be passed by the Senate was discussed to-day at the Capitol with some astonishment by those who have held the opinion that the bill was to be talked to death by Democrats and Populists. But it was ascertained that Mr. Vest and other Democrats in the Senate and the House desire that the bill shall be passed, not because they approve of it and want to see it imposed on the taxpayers of the country, but for reasons diametrically opposite to those entertained by the Republicans. Mr. Vest believes that if it is enacted into law it will result in a scandal as great as that following the Pacific Mail corruption of years ago, and that it will contribute much in the public estimation to a renewal of that confidence in the Democratic Party which has been so studiously withheld since it went into partnership with Populism.

Mr. Vest scarcely conceals his wish that the bill shall pass. Senator Jones is said to share his opinion about the load of trouble that it carries for the Republicans. But Mr. Frye and Mr. Hanna regard this as mere "bluffing," and try to understand why it is, if the Democrats are so anxious the Republicans shall do themselves political harm, they do not keep off the speaking lists, which now carry at least a dozen names of Democrats who intend to be heard against the Subsidy bill.

More than all the other opponents of the bill together, Mr. Pettigrew bothers the promoters of subsidies, and he is willing to be pacified. "If they will amend the bill," he says, "by limiting the subsidy to ships making not more than fifteen knots an hour, and say that the subsidy rates shall be paid on actual cargoes carried, my opposition will be pretty nearly done away with." But if those amendments were adopted about all that the promoters of the bill were contending for would be abandoned. When it was suggested that Mr. Pettigrew was preparing to abandon his opposition, he simply answered, "Wait and see."

Senator Depew gave notice to-day that to-morrow he would address the Senate on the Ship Subsidy bill. Mr. Frye, in charge of the bill, said he recognized the necessity of early action upon appropriation bills, and, while he was intensely interested in the shipping bill, he desired no delay of the appropriation measures. He said that if the Indian Appropriation bill was not disposed of by 2 o'clock to-morrow he would ask that it be laid aside until Mr. Depew could deliver his address upon the shipping bill. After that he would again yield to the Appropriation bill.

PROVISIONS OF NEW ARMY BILL.

The Measure as It Comes from the Hands of the Conferrees.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Chairman Hull of the House Military Committee sums up the essential points of the agreement on the Army Reorganization bill, reached yesterday by the conferrees of the two houses:

The Artillery Corps organization is adopted, with a Chief of Artillery, who will serve on the staff of the General commanding the army. The battery becomes the unit of artillery organization. The strength of the Staff Corps is left as the two houses provided, except the Quartermaster's Department, in which a compromise is made by adding two Majors and six Captains, and providing for retaining twenty-five volunteer Quartermasters as long as their services are needed. In the Nurses' Corps provision is made that the head shall be a graduate of a hospital training school of two years' service.

The Senate provision on veterinary surgeons is retained. The Pay Corps is left as provided by the Senate, with the exception that the number of Majors is to be twenty instead of nine, as provided by the Senate. The Signal Corps is finally fixed to include one Colonel, one Lieutenant Colonel, four Majors, fourteen Captains, and fourteen First Lieutenants, with authority to retain five First and five Second Lieutenants of Volunteers as long as required.

The detail system of the staff is accepted, with provision that all appointments to original vacancies created by this act shall form part of the permanent staff, and not be subject to detail. All details to the staff are to be for four years, the words "unless sooner removed" being struck out. Instead of the present system of Chiefs of Staffs they are to be appointed by the President and be confirmed by the Senate for a term of four years, and as long as the permanent staffs remain the chiefs shall be chosen from the staffs. Lieutenants appointed to the line are to be chosen from First and Second Lieutenants under forty years old, and enlisted men of the regulars or volunteers may be appointed subject to the laws now in force, except that one year's service qualifies instead of two, as now required.

The advance and retirement of Gens. Shafter, Lee, and Wilson is assured by the retention of the provision for two Brigadier Generals, retired, and one Major General.

Mr. Hull expects to get the conference agreement before the House at once.

CRITICISES INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Senator Butler Says Many of the Pupils Are White.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—To-day's session of the Senate was devoted to the Indian Appropriation bill. During the consideration of the appropriation for Indian schools Mr. Butler (Pop., N. C.,) said he had visited such schools, and observed that there were present taking advantage of the benefits children who were not Indians, and he asked what proportion of Indian blood was necessary to secure admission to such schools.

Mr. Thurston (Rep., Neb.,) answered that no children are received unless they are regarded as Indians by the tribes, no matter how slight the admixture of Indian blood. He had, he said, seen in a tepee with a woman, evidently an Indian squaw, children of her own who had red hair. It was impossible, he said, to exclude children from the schools merely because they might have red hair or a light skin.

Mr. Butler insisted that many of the children who were attending Indian schools were white, and that the abuse of the Indian school appropriation was flagrant and notorious.

Mr. Teller (Sil. Rep., Col.,) said he was satisfied Mr. Butler was mistaken. He knew personally, he said, that children were not admitted to the Indian schools whose parents did not maintain their tribal relations.

Mr. Pettigrew (Sil., S. D.,) made a vigorous attack upon the Dawes Indian Commission, asserting that there was no more corrupt or extravagant body in the service of the United States than that commission. He believed the work done by the appraisers of the Indian lands could be done for 10 per cent. of what the Government was paying for it. Mr. Jones (Dem., Ark.,) maintained that the criticism by Mr. Pettigrew of the Dawes Commission was not well founded in any respect. Its work, Mr. Jones said, was being done economically and thoroughly.

Mr. Pettigrew offered an amendment providing that the commission should file an itemized statement of its expenditures to Jan. 1, 1901, and annually thereafter. The amendment was accepted. The bill had not been disposed of when the Senate adjourned.

INVITE THE PRESIDENT.

California Templars Send Him a "Card" Made of Gold—Y. M. C. A. Desires His Presence at Boston.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Among the callers at the White House to-day was Capt. O. J. Humphrey of San Francisco, who was presented to the President by Senator Perkins. Capt. Humphrey visited the Executive Mansion as the special envoy of California Commandery No. 1, Knights Templars, of San Francisco, to personally present to President McKinley an invitation from the commandery to meet with it upon his visit to the Pacific Coast the coming Spring.

The card of invitation which he handed to Sir Knight McKinley perhaps rivals in splendor anything of the kind that was ever presented to a President. It is a solid gold plate 3½ by 5½ inches and about one-eighth of an inch in thickness. In the upper right-hand corner is an enameled Maltese cross, with the usual insignia of the order, having in the centre a fine diamond of about one karat in weight. The "card" is beautifully engraved with the following inscription:

Sir William McKinley.

Dear Sir and Frater: California Commandery No. 1, Knights Templars, requests the honor of your presence at a stated assembly of our commandery, Friday evening, May 17, 1901. Yours fraternally, W. H. FRANK TITUS, Eminent Commander.

HIRAM T. GRAVES, Recorder.

It is probable that the President will accept the invitation, and he may hold a reception in the commandery asylum.

Another caller was John J. McCook of New York, who on behalf of the National Young Men's Christian Association, invited the President to attend the grand jubilee celebration commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the organization, which will be held in Boston June 11 to 14, 1901. The President said that if he returned from his California trip in time he would be very glad to attend the celebration.

The resignation by Capt. Alexander M. Davis, Commissary of Subsistence, of his commission as First Lieutenant of Cavalry has been accepted, to take effect Jan. 14.

First Lieut. Matthew E. Saville, Tenth Infantry, upon the completion of his examination for promotion, will report to Major Thomas F. Davis, Twelfth Infantry, recruiting officer at St. Louis, for recruiting duty.

First Lieut. Frank D. Ely, Second Infantry, will report to Lieut. Col. William P. Hall, Assistant Adjutant General, President of the examining board appointed to meet at Fort Sheridan, for examination as to his fitness for promotion.

First Lieut. Clarence C. Williams, Ordnance Department, will proceed to New York City and take charge of the office of Inspector of Powder in that city during the absence, on account of sickness, of Capt. Orin B. Mitcham, Ordnance Department.

Capt. James K. Thompson, Fifteenth Infantry, is detailed as a member of the board of officers appointed to meet at the United States Military Academy, to examine officers for promotion, vice Lieut. Col. Otto L. Hein, hereby relieved.

A board of officers, to consist of Col. Alfred A. Woodhull, (Assistant Surgeon General;) Major John Van R. Hoff, (Surgeon,) and Major Louis A. La Garde, (Surgeon,) is appointed to meet at the Army Medical Museum Building, Washington, at the earliest date practicable, for the examination of such officers of the Medical Department as may be ordered before it, to determine their fitness for promotion. The following-named officers of the Medical Department will report to Col. Woodhull, President of the board, for examination as to their fitness for promotion: Capts. (Assistant Surgeons) Charles M. Gandy, Jefferson R. Kean, Henry I. Raymond, Edward F. Morris, Leonard Wood, Jefferson D. Poindexter, and Charles E. Woodruff.

Capt. Harry B. Chamberlin, Assistant Quartermaster, United States Volunteers, upon his arrival in New York City, will proceed at once to San Francisco, and report, not later than Jan. 31, to the general superintendent of the army transport service for assignment to duty as Quartermaster and Acting Commissary of Subsistence on the transport Lawton.

Movements of Naval Vessels.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The training ships Hartford and Monadnock arrived at Barbados to-day.

The Vicksburg has sailed from Singapore for Manila.

The Lancaster has arrived at St. Vincent.

The Essex has arrived at New London.

The Wheeling went out of commission yesterday, and the Mohican was commissioned to replace her.

THE NEW CURRENCY BILL

House Committee Will Report Measure to Maintain Parity.

If Passed It Will Practically Abolish the Silver Dollar—Mr. Overstreet Discusses His Bill.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—As indicated last night, when the House Coinage Committee issued its hasty call for a meeting of the committee to-day, the promised extension of debate in that committee was suddenly brought to a stop to-day by the order for a favorable report of the bill introduced by Representative Hill of Connecticut, which practically abolishes the silver dollar as a coin by providing that it shall be no longer coined, and that the silver dollars now in existence shall, from time to time, be recoined into fractional coins at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The vote of the committee in favor of the Hill bill was 9 to 6, the negative votes being cast by Democrats.

This action of the committee was taken after the committee had refused to defer action on the pending bills to permit the minority members of the committee to be heard, and a communication from William J. Bryan to be received. This, however, was without purpose to exclude Mr. Bryan's communication, which will be received and printed as a part of the hearings.

In voting on the bills the Hill measure was substituted for that of Representative Levy, 12 to 3. The bill as agreed upon and reported is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements, and thereafter as public necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin, and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding and as much of any act as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars is hereby repealed.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to maintain at all times at parity with gold the legal tender silver dollars remaining outstanding, and to that end he is hereby directed to exchange gold for legal tender silver dollars when presented to the Treasury in the sum of $5 or any multiple thereof, and all provisions of law for the use or maintenance of the reserve fund in the Treasury relating to the United States notes are in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury hereby made applicable to the exchange of legal-tender silver dollars.

The impression had been created by members of the Coinage Committee that prompt action on either the Hill or the Levy bill would in some way render unnecessary the passage of the bill in the Banking Committee, proposed by Mr. Overstreet, and that a race had been made in which the Coinage Committee was determined to win the advantage to be derived from making the earliest report. Mr. Overstreet said to-night that he did not desire to have that idea attributed to him.

"My bill," he said, "is a broad, general measure, making all money good for gold when presented at the Treasury. We tried to get that into the law and failed, and now we believe it can be done. It has been suggested that the Hill bill presents a question that may cause prolonged controversy and not command agreement after all the discussion is over. I do not say that it will create an endless chain, but it has struck me that it does not check the silver dollars as they go into the Treasury or prevent their reissue for gold. If the bill which I introduced is made law, it will make the silver dollars good for gold at the Treasury, but also good as gold when they are to be taken out.

"I have not yet quite come to believe that the way to get rid of the silver dollars is to convert them into fractional coins, and I am not sure that the whole country is educated up to that idea.

"The Banking Committee will not hurry in consequence of this report of the Hill bill. It will meet on Saturday and consider my bill, and if it is ordered reported, we will take the first chance to bring it to the consideration and favor of the House."

BOOZ TESTIMONY ALL IN.

Last Witness in Washington Describes Hazing at West Point as Nothing Short of Exquisite Torture.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The committee which is investigating the hazing of Cadet Booz had before it to-day the last witness who will be called on to testify. He was F. H. Cunningham, a teacher at the Hamilton Institute, New York City, who formerly was a cadet at West Point. He was the tent-mate of Cadet MacArthur, a son of Gen. MacArthur, who was severely hazed, according to the testimony adduced at West Point. In the course of his testimony his attention was directed to a statement by Gen. Ludlow that "college hazing and West Point hazing" were the same. The witness said:

"I refute that statement. I went through college before I went to West Point, and I know there is nothing in the colleges like the hazing at West Point." He described hazing as nothing short of torture, exquisite torture. He gave a graphic account of the agony suffered in certain forms of hazing, which fairly sent a shudder through the listeners. Men were hung on bars, their feet up, so that when they dropped from exhaustion the knees struck on the wooden floor several feet below. The fainting man was again hoisted up, and again repeatedly dropped from exhaustion, striking on his knees. He gave in detail the horrors of the sweatbath, and related the sufferings of MacArthur from this form of torture.

Mr. Cunningham said the object of "calling out" was to place a trained upper class man against an untrained lower class man. The result was inevitable. In conducting a fight the purpose was to cut up the face of the lower class man before knocking him out. An upper class man had said to the witness that a certain fight was not correct because the lower class man's face was not cut up sufficiently. He was told also of a lower class man being in hospital for a week after a fight, and then his face was said to be a "sight to see."

The witness said cadets from foreign countries, admitted by act of Congress, were "initiated" and "bothered" in the same way. He mentioned Cadet Iglesias, related to President Iglesias of Costa Rica, as an instance, and also a Venezuelan cadet. Cunningham said he wrote to the papers concerning hazing, in part because he expected remuneration for the articles. When the witness said he had not narrated the facts through indignation, Mr. Wanger said:

"Then you are to be congratulated on maintaining a serenity of mind while narrating facts which cannot fail to arouse the indignation of any one who hears them."

Cunningham's testimony appeared to produce a deep impression.

To Investigate Hazing at Annapolis.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Representative Sherman of New York to-day introduced a resolution which was referred to the Naval Committee, providing for the appointment of a select committee of five members of the House to investigate hazing at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. The resolution sets forth that the published accounts of the investigation of hazing at West Point have aroused universal indignation at the widespread prevalence of hazing, and that it is believed similar practices are in vogue at Annapolis. The committee is to make a report to Congress as soon as practicable.

SMALLPOX AT BELLEVUE.

Patient at First Believed to Have Grip—Two New Cases in Brooklyn.

There have been several suspected cases of smallpox in Bellevue Hospital since the outbreak of the epidemic in this city, but the first genuine case of the disease was discovered there yesterday morning. The patient is Frank Arose, a stonecutter, twenty years old, of 327 East One Hundred and Twelfth Street. He was received in the hospital about 5 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, his case being diagnosed at the time as grip. Yesterday morning the case was diagnosed as smallpox, and the patient was transferred with all speed to North Brother Island. Assistant Sanitary Inspector Dillingham of the Board of Health said he thought there was no danger of the disease spreading in the hospital.

Two new cases of smallpox were reported yesterday. They are both from Brooklyn—William W. Reynolds of 489 Third Street and James McElroy, four years old, of 23 State Street.

ALLEGED POOLROOM RAIDED.

Proprietress of the Hotel Holborn, Astonished at Police Action, Says She Will Seek Redress.

Inspector Thompson's men, Heinatz and Friede, acting under instructions from "higher up," descended upon an alleged poolroom at 43 West Twenty-fourth Street late yesterday afternoon, within a stone's throw of the reputed location of one of the largest betting establishments in the city, capturing one half-sick woman, the alleged proprietress of the place, and three large white placards with the New Orleans entries printed thereon. The place is known as the Hotel Holborn.

The detectives, according to the story of the clerk of the house, crept up the front steps about dinner time, pushed open the front door leading into the dining room, and ignoring two obsequious waiters, proffering seats at tables, said:

"You've got a poolroom here. We know it. There's no use in making a row now, see! We're dead next. It's on the top floor. You'd best submit without a struggle."

The clerk, thinking the two were footpads, demanded that they show their shields. Several men dining in the rear part of the restaurant on the first floor, looked up in astonishment.

The clerk permitted the detectives to go to the top floor and to poke into all the corners of the rooms and under the beds on each floor, but no poolroom could be discovered.

"I guess we've made a mistake," finally admitted one sleuth in a crestfallen manner to the clerk. "Somebody's blundered."

"Ha," suddenly cried his side partner, catching sight of the white placards with names of horses printed on them. "'Tis it. Very incriminating evidence, very. Gentlemen, you are under arrest"—this to the open-eyed diners over whose heads this damaging evidence hung.

"Where's the proprietor?" he continued. "Produce her."

"Here I am," broke in Mrs. Philomena Schultz, who owns the place. "What do you want with me?"

"You're under arrest for keeping a poolroom," said both men simultaneously, gathering up the percentage cards.

Mrs. Schultz, protesting her innocence, was taken to the station house and subsequently released in $1,000 bail by Magistrate Meade. The men were not detained.

Mrs. Schultz, when seen, was highly indignant at her arrest.

"Poolroom, indeed," said she. "I don't know what one is. Those cards have been in that restaurant every day for thirteen years just as they have in any other restaurant. The gentlemen in the room when the detectives came were dining here. I'm under a doctor's care now, half sick, and I don't know what I was arrested for, but I'll see if lawyers can't find out."

The West Thirtieth Street Station police knew nothing of the raid until Mrs. Schultz was brought in. She will be arraigned in Jefferson Market Court to-day.

RESCUED GIRL BY FORCE.

In General Sessions, before Judge Foster, yesterday the premises 140 Chrystie Street were declared by two witnesses under oath to be a place of ill-repute. Seventeen-year-old Rachel Mutchnick swore that she was detained in this house for weeks against her will, her clothes taken away from her, and that she was rescued after many days and with much difficulty by her brother-in-law, the husband of her sister, Mrs. Sarah Jagendorf, and his friends.

The testimony was given during the trial of Abraham Magid of 114 Allen Street, who is under four indictments, charging him, among other offenses, with abducting the girl Rachel.

Samuel Walkoff of 61 Rivington Street swore that he had seen Rachel in the place, clad in a gaudy wrapper, entreating Magid, who had taken her there under promise of employment, to permit her to return to her sister's house. The girl was in tears. Magid replied to her entreaties, says Walkoff, with threats that he would kill her if she attempted to communicate with her relatives and that she would have to stay in the resort as long as he chose. Benjamin Levy of Fourteenth Street and Sixth Avenue and Israel Lerner learned of the girl's plight, and, with Jagendorf, managed to effect an entrance to the place, form a flying wedge, and forcibly rescue Rachel, who was overjoyed at her escape.

The girl testified similarly. The proprietor of the place, she said, stood at the door and gave out tickets to all comers. He was a short, fat, pudgy man, she said, who could be found at the house named at any time.

Judge Foster was intensely interested in the testimony.

"Can you tell me his name?" he asked, reaching for a pile of blank warrants.

"No, but you can find him any time," replied the girl.

The matter will be brought to the attention of the District Attorney.

The case of the State against Magid ended with the girl's testimony. The trial will be continued to-day.

REPLY TO MAYOR'S CRITICISM.

The New East River Bridge Commission met behind closed doors yesterday. A reply to Mayor Van Wyck's criticism of the dilatory action of the commission in acquiring lands for the new bridge was the matter considered.

The reply given out after the meeting contained an elaborate defense of the commission's work. Mayor Van Wyck had said that if the Commissioners would stop running around trying to buy small pieces of property the bridge would be completed "some time." The reply said in effect that condemnation proceedings are slow and expensive, and the Bridge Commissioners sought to purchase property promptly at private sale.

The Bridge Commissioners assert that on July 10 the Board of Estimate approved the commencement of condemnation proceedings, and it was Oct. 16 before the Corporation Counsel applied to the courts for the appointment of Commissioners in the Borough of Manhattan. The last paragraph of the reply is as follows:

"This commission desires it to be distinctly understood that from Jan. 13, 1898, when the original commission as constituted by his Honor the Mayor took office, until the present moment no delay of any kind in the construction of the bridge or in preparing for its construction has happened through any of its acts either of omission or commission."

Controller Coler said yesterday that the trouble between the Board of Estimate and the Bridge Commissioners was a "tempest in a teapot." He said:

"Under the law the Controller, as the financial officer of the city, has to pay out the warrants for property taken for bridge purposes. It might be advisable if a poor woman or a widow wanted to sell her property needed for bridge purposes at a fair price for the Bridge Commissioners to decide to take the land without action of the courts in condemnation. When the matter comes to my office the responsibility as to whether the price paid for the property is a fair one is placed on me. I do not think it would be right for me to take this responsibility. The matter should be settled by the courts, and there need be no delay. It would not expedite matters to take a few pieces of property provided you had to condemn other plots. Besides the prices paid under agreement with the commission could be used to get higher prices from the city for land taken by condemnation. I think now that as the matter is fully understood there will be no delay. The differences arose entirely over the question of the price to be paid for property, and I refused to give my consent to proposed purchases."

BOY CHLOROFORMS HIMSELF.

NORWICH, Conn., Jan. 24.—A young, well-dressed boy was found seated outside the Central Vermont railroad station about 9 o'clock to-night apparently asleep, and beside him was a large piece of absorbent cotton saturated with chloroform. The lad was awakened by an officer and taken to the police station, where he gave his name as Samuel Kingsford Goodman, the son of Assistant Traffic Manager Goodman of the New York Central Railroad.

Young Goodman said that he had left New York at 1 o'clock to-day to visit relatives in Pomfret, and while on the train had been seized with a violent toothache. At Willimantic, the boy said, he had left the train and purchased some chloroform which he applied to the tooth, this act being the last that he remembered until awakened at the Norwich station.

On his person were found several cards and letters bearing the name that he gave to the local authorities, as well as passes over the New York Central Road, all of which tend to confirm his story as to his identity. He had no money when found, although he said that he was well supplied with funds when he left New York. It is supposed that Goodman became dazed by the anaesthetic and took the wrong train at Willimantic, leaving it at Norwich. His parents will be notified to-morrow.

CAMPAIGN TO OUST CROKER

Organization Forming to Depose Him in Tammany Hall.

John C. Sheehan a Leader of the Movement—Belief that Croker Mayoralty Candidate Would Be Defeated.

There is an organization now forming to fight the leadership of Richard Croker in Tammany Hall. One of the leaders of the new movement is John C. Sheehan, who was leader of Tammany Hall after the abdication of Richard Croker, several years ago. When Mr. Croker came back to this country Mr. Sheehan was ousted from the leadership, and he has been making a fight to keep control of the Nluth Assembly District organization since.

It was said yesterday that John C. Sheehan purposed to make his fight against Croker inside of Tammany Hall and that, as several Tammany leaders were of the opinion that the Democratic candidate for Mayor, if named by Richard Croker, would be defeated, it would be well to be "outside the breastworks" this year. Bridge Commissioner James W. Boyle is likely to take a hand in the new organization.

The plans of the organizers have only been partly developed. In about two weeks a meeting will be held and a round-up of the men interested will show what force the organization can muster. John C. Sheehan said last evening:

"Whether the fight against the present leadership of Tammany Hall will be made inside or outside of the organization has not been decided as yet. In the Ninth District, with the police and every effort of the organization against me, I honestly won out in the last primaries. There were 400 repeaters at least who voted in the primaries under police protection, and yet my friends were only defeated by less than eighty votes. If the primary election had been conducted honestly I would have won.

"I have my own opinions as to how the fight should be carried on this Fall. I am not at liberty to go into particulars now, but in short time the men in this movement will be ready to discuss it. There are many districts in which successful fights could be carried on and we are organizing quietly for the contests."

The friends of Mr Sheehan in the Pequod Club claim that if Richard Croker attempts to dominate the Mayoralty convention this Fall the anti-Tammany ticket will win at the municipal election.

PLATT FAVORS CRIMMINS.

Senator Thomas C. Platt, who arrived from Washington last night, regards with much favor the proposition to make John D. Crimmins the anti-Tammany nominee for Mayor.

Mr. Crimmins, when questioned about the matter, did not commit himself with regard to accepting a nomination if tendered him. He spoke very highly of Seth Low and George L. Rives in connection with the place, and expressed the opinion that a business man should be chosen Mayor of New York.

Delaware Dead-lock Continues.

DOVER, Del., Jan. 24.—To-day's ballots for United States Senators showed no change in the situation. The ballot for the full term resulted: Kenney, (Dem.,) 21; Addicks, (Union Rep.,) 16; Du Pont, (Reg. Rep.,) 8; Hilles, (Reg. Rep.,) 2; Spruance, Byrd, and Higgins, 1 each. For the short term: Saulsbury, (Dem.,) 20; Addicks, 16; Richards, (Reg. Rep.,) 11; Nields and Hilles, 1 each; Gray, (Dem.,) 1; absent, 2.

Nebraskans Ballot Again.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 24.—There was little change in the Senatorial contest to-day. The seventh ballot resulted: Allen, (Fus.,) 55; W. H. Thompson, (Fus.,) 53; Crounse, 6; Currie, 1; Hainer, 4; Hinshaw, 15; Hitchcock, (Fus.,) 4; Melkiejohn, 31; Martin, 7; Rosewater, 15; D. E. Thompson, 35; scattering, 12.

The Vote in Montana.

HELENA, Mont., Jan. 24.—The following was the vote for United States Senator today: Mantle, Rep., 31; Frank, 20; Cooper, 11; Maginnis, 9; remainder scattering.

CLUB FOR MILLIONAIRES.

The hard toiling folk of Brownsville, a picturesque, if not beautiful, section of Brooklyn, were somewhat staggered yesterday to learn that there was a big bunch of coupon-clipping millionaires "in their midst." This came to light through an application to Justice Dickey, in the Supreme Court, yesterday morning for the incorporation of the "Millionaires' Club." It has all along been the prevailing impression in Brownsville that nothing resembling a millionaire could be found in that locality even with the aid of a "jimmy" and a dark lantern. If one should be unearthed there, it was felt, he could multiply his riches by raising a tent over himself and charging admission to see him.

Naturally, therefore, Brownsville was astonished yesterday that millionaires were really as plentiful in the district as on Murray Hill, and that they were seeking to form themselves into a club, that they might the better pursue their luxurious tastes for pleasure after the wearing work of lugging money to the bank all day.

The papers accompanying the application for the incorporation of the "Millionaires' Club" showed that its objects were to promote social intercourse and recreative enjoyment, and to unite in bonds of friendship all persons in sympathy with the objects of the club. As about everybody in Brownsville is known to be heartily in favor of "recreative enjoyment," it was felt that the club would have an easy time of it accomplishing its object of uniting them in bonds of friendship. It was predicted that, if the club got its papers of incorporation, pretty nearly every one in Brownsville would be making desperate efforts to break into it as members, in order to use its stationery in corresponding with their friends. The expressive legend "The Millionaires' Club," it was felt, would be a thing to conjure with when appearing on note paper used in either business or social correspondence.

The lawyer who made the application to Justice Dickey did not appear to be a bit nervous, despite the responsibility of representing such a vast aggregation of wealth. The club being composed of about forty members. Several of the members were in court. Justice Dickey has considerable knowledge of millionaires, and he looked his visitors over carefully to see if they bore the usual markings indicating the species. He was somewhat doubtful after his survey.

"I don't think I can approve of these papers unless the gentlemen qualify," he said finally. "They may be sure enough millionaires, but one can't determine that at a glance. I must have some proof that the name is a proper one for the club before I can approve of it."

The club, however, failed to come forward with the bank and stock books of its members to prove that they were all the glad owners of fortunes in not less than seven figures.

"I was on the golf links when I heard about it," remarked "Abe" Levy, a local philosopher, speaking of the matter, "an' it jarred me so I foozled. I've lived here a long time, but the only millionaire I ever seen in Brownsville was in a hearse going through to Cypress Hills Cemetery."

Most of the members of the club live in the neighborhood of Pitkins and Thatford Avenues, and are said to work as tailors and bakers.

LEGACY TO WOMAN SUFFRAGISTS.

The treasury of the National American Woman's Suffrage Association is about to be enriched by a bequest of $8,000. This is from the estate of Henriette M. Banker of Essex County, N. Y., who at her death a year ago made the association and the town of Keene, in the Adirondacks, her residuary legatees.

The association is in a flourishing financial condition. The Treasurer of the recent bazaar has turned over to the general treasury the net receipts of over $8,000. The disbursements for the past year were $14,000. The association begins the new century free from debt, one of $2,000, of several years' standing, having been wiped out. During the past year more new members have been enrolled than in any one year in the history of the association.

BOERS LOOKING FOR AID.

It Is Said European Filibusters Will Land Arms and Ammunition—Traitors in Cape Forces.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 24.—It is believed that the presence of invading Boers in proximity to the western coast is due to preconcerted plans with European filibusters to land a large consignment of arms and ammunition at some point between Port Nolloth and Lambert's Bay.

Many traitors have succeeded in enlisting in the local forces, and there have been numerous arrests.

The sale of Reynolds's Weekly Newspaper of London and The Review of Reviews and Truth has been prohibited here, as it was found that they have been circulating among the Dutch.

Operation on Krueger's Eyes Successful

UTRECHT, Jan. 24.—An operation was performed on Mr. Krüger's eyes this morning by Profs. Nellen and Dhreymans. The operation was perfectly successful.

THE CHINESE REQUESTS.

Objections Accompanying the Agreement to the Joint Note.

PEKING, Jan. 16 (Delayed in Transmission.)—The note which accompanied the agreement delivered by the Chinese plenipotentiaries reiterated the Chinese objections already published, adding thereto a request for the immediate return of the public buildings, and the total cessation of military expeditions, the desire for a definition of the limits of the legations, also a desire for the removal of the troops as early as possible.

The German and French officials seem to think it unwise for the troops to leave Peking for several months. The French especially object to what they call "the cowardly behavior of other nations in not protecting the Chinese Christians." For that reason they believe it will be necessary to keep the troops at least another year. The British, Americans, and Russians seemingly think a gradual withdrawal can be made as soon as the river opens, about the beginning of March.

The Chinese are anxious to have the indemnities payable to the different nations adjudged before an international committee. A majority of the Ministers here seem to think that their Governments may make separate arrangements with China. The Ministers will shortly hold a meeting to consider the next step to be taken. No formal reply will be sent to the Chinese objections, but they will be considered.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The State Department had had no recent advices from Minister Conger, so it has no knowledge of the latest phase of the negotiations at Peking, as reported in the press dispatches.

This Government has by no means abandoned hope of preserving the concert between the powers at Peking, at least until the minor points to be adjusted under the agreement with the Chinese officials have been disposed of. It has anticipated a serious divergence of views among the powers respecting the wehrlder topics of indemnity and the permanent maintenance of armed forces in China, but it is not informed that those topics have yet seriously engaged the attention of the Ministers at Peking.

RUSSIANS CLAIM TERRITORY.

SHANGHAI, Jan. 20.—As a result of the sending of the British gunboat Plover to Blonde Islands, eastward of Lictung, to suppress the pirates, whose depredations upon native craft were becoming serious, the expedition succeeded in destroying the offending piratical junks.

In connection with this matter, Vice Admiral Alexieff, the Russian commander, has written to Vice Admiral Seymour, in command of the English naval forces, claiming that inasmuch as the islands are in Russian territory the British action was unwarranted. He expressed a hope that Admiral Seymour would view the matter in the same light. Admiral Seymour replied to the effect that though he knew Port Arthur and Talienwan were in Russian territory, he did not know that this was the case regarding these islands, and that he was therefore unable to coincide with Vice Admiral Alexieff's views, and that he could only refer the question to his Government.

Admiral Seymour thinks that the Russian pretensions to islands ninety miles from Port Arthur ought not to be allowed. If admitted, it is the opinion of the British naval commander it would almost naturally follow that Russia would claim the Niaotao group, lying much nearer and extending across the Gulf of Pechili, thus giving Russia compl

THE QUEEN'S PART IN THE TRENT AFFAIR.

It has been many times recalled that Queen VICTORIA once manifested her love of peace and did a friendly service to this Nation by tempering the rigor of Lord JOHN RUSSELL'S demand for the surrender of the rebel Commissioners, MASON and SLIDELL. The story of that good deed, characteristic of the late Queen, both as an act of wise policy and as an exhibition of woman's tact and consideration, furnishes one of the many reasons why Americans have held in high respect the sovereign whose death they now deplore.

We had put ourselves in the wrong, dreadfully in the wrong, and the Queen made it easier for us to get out of the inexcusable situation. Greater service can no man or woman render another. It will be remembered that the Confederate Government appointed two Commissioners, Mr. JAMES M. MASON to England and Mr. JOHN SLIDELL to France, with the purpose of securing, if possible, the recognition of the independence of the Confederate States, and the intervention in their behalf of England and France. The Royal Mail packet Trent, sailing from Havana on Nov. 7, 1861, with these gentlemen on board, was stopped at sea two days later by the United States war steamer San Jacinto, commanded by Capt. CHARLES WILKES, and the Confederate Commissioners and their secretaries were taken off, after which the Trent was allowed to proceed. This was simply a high-handed outrage, not sanctioned by any theory of international law, and constituted an affront to Great Britain of which she was bound to take immediate notice. Later on when Capt. WILKES, who acted wholly on his own responsibility, had learned that envoys sailing under a neutral flag were inviolable, although dispatches from the enemy might lawfully have been seized, made some sort of excuse that the Commissioners were "living dispatches." MASON and SLIDELL were shut up in Fort Warren, and dinners were given in honor of Capt. WILKES. The country's blood was up with the fervor of the war, and it had been incensed by too many evidences of English sympathy for the cause of the Confederacy. It did not stop to weigh points of international law, and the Government at Washington, which must have perceived that a terrible blunder had been made, did not attempt to set public opinion right. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy, even sent a letter of congratulation to WILKES. The people of the North were full of exultation over the Confederates and of defiance of England. Meanwhile Great Britain was swiftly preparing for war with us. There was no cable, and the arrival of the English mails gave us the first intimation that the fun was not all on our side. Capt. WILLIAMS of the Trent, who was a foolish braggart, had aroused the British public by the picturesque inventions with which he adorned his description of the unbearable insolence of the American commander in committing the trespass. The Government, with PALMERSTON at its head and Lord JOHN RUSSELL as Foreign Secretary, was moving troops and giving orders that kept the shipyards busy. The two nations seemed to stand upon the verge of war. The English people, with some notable exceptions, like JOHN BRIGHT, did actually sympathize with the rebellion, and the people of the North were too highly wrought up with the passions of civil conflict to perceive that another war would at that moment be highly inconvenient.

It was on Nov. 29 that Lord PALMERSTON informed the Queen by a note of the proceedings of a Council of the Ministers held that day, and inclosed a copy of the letter to be sent by Lord JOHN RUSSELL to Lord LYONS, the British Minister at Washington, demanding the release of the prisoners and a disavowal of the act. If this was refused the Minister was to retire from the United States. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort examined with great care the proposed dispatch. The Queen disapproved of the harsh language used, particularly of the charge that a "wanton insult" had been put upon England by the United States. Prince ALBERT prepared a memorandum for the Ministry, which she afterward amended with her own hand. This memorandum is given in MARTIN'S "Life of the Prince Consort":

> The Queen returns these important drafts, which, upon the whole, she approves, but she cannot help feeling that the main draft—that for communication to the American Government—is somewhat meagre. She would have liked to have seen the expression of a hope that the American Captain did not act under instructions, or, if he did, that he misapprehended—that the United States Government must be fully aware that the British Government could not allow its flag to be insulted and the security of its mail communication to be placed in jeopardy, and her Majesty's Government are unwilling to believe that the United States Government intended wantonly to put an insult upon this country and to add to their many distressing complications by forcing a question of dispute upon us; and that we are therefore glad to believe that upon a full consideration of the circumstances of the undoubted breach of international law committed, they would spontaneously offer such redress as alone would satisfy this country, viz., the restoration of the unfortunate passengers and a suitable apology.

In this generous and considerate spirit the dispatch was prepared and forwarded to Lord LYONS. It is deserving of notice that the Queen's memorandum contains a hint of what our Government ought to have done the instant it learned of Capt. WILKES'S escapade, that is, spontaneously offer redress. We should have disavowed the act without waiting to be reminded of its lawlessness, and have put the prisoners into British hands with a suitable apology for their unwarranted detention. But the North would have gone wild in angry protest had Mr. SEWARD done that.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL could not forbear to inclose a private note to Lord LYONS giving full instructions how he was to threaten Mr. SEWARD in case compliance with the British demands was refused, but the unpleasant affair ended as the Queen had desired. The Confederate Commissioners were surrendered, and Secretary SEWARD was thought to have come off not entirely without honors in the controversy by basing the act of compliance upon the long established doctrine and uniform practice of the American Government, which he was now gratified to observe, after repeated denials had been adopted by Her Majesty's Government. The British Ministers had been quite too eager to seize upon the cause of quarrel which our wrongful action gave them. Their sovereign, with her sense of justice, her real friendship for the American people, and her unfailing preference for peace, prevailed over their inconsiderate policy with her moderate counsels and imposed upon us a sense of grateful obligation of which we have never been unmindful.

THE SENATE AND THE CURRENCY.

The sudden revival of interest in the improvement of the currency which has sprung up in the two committees of the House of Representatives is certainly a good thing. If a rational bill could be passed at this late date in the session, it would have an excellent effect on the sentiment of the Senate, and with the active support of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the President, it is barely possible that it might reach the statute book. But it is not probable that it would do so before the next Congress.

The basis of the proposed action in the House is the fact that there can be no complete establishment of the gold standard until all the forms of money issued by the Government can be exchanged for gold at par at the Treasury at the option of the holder. Of this fact there is no sort of doubt in the minds of reasonable men. It was clearly understood by the House a year ago, and provision was made in accordance with it in the House bill, with the cordial approval of Mr. MCKINLEY and Mr. GAGE. The Senate would not have it. The venerable financiers and politicians of the Republican side had been so long occupied with compromising and equivocating on this subject that it came very hard for them to take the straight and narrow path that the House had pointed out for them. They contrived an elaborate plan which will probably accomplish the maintenance of the gold standard when the Treasury is full and when the Administration is in the hands of men firmly determined to maintain it, as is the case at present. But they would not enact a law that would work necessarily of itself, and leave nothing to the discretion of the Executive for the time being. It is the essential characteristic of a standard, and especially of a standard of value and of payments, that it shall stand, and not be held up or allowed to fall at the will of a merely executive officer of the Government.

We have no right to assume motives for the Senators engaged in this not very creditable business, but it is a fact that the loophole they deliberately cut in the House bill made a good reason for supporting Mr. MCKINLEY in the campaign that followed and for refusing to support Mr. BRYAN. The latter gentleman undoubtedly understood what was the defect in the law, and that it left much to the discretion of his Secretary of the Treasury, should he be elected, for he refused stubbornly to say how he would act in the premises. He would obey the law until it was changed. That is all that he would say. Nor would he utter a word as to what he thought the law required. All this fell in well with the presumption that the Republican Senators did not intend so to bind him that he could do nothing. Had they done that, the currency issue would have had less importance in the last canvass than it had in fact, and less, no doubt, than they intended it should have.

For this wretched manoeuvring in a matter that required the utmost candor and good faith the President was not in the least responsible. He constantly urged that the bill should be made as strong as possible. He would undoubtedly be glad now to have it so strengthened. Perhaps as there is no possible political advantage to be got from delay, the Senate might be induced to act even at this session, but it is not very likely. It is only too probable that we shall be obliged to wait another year for the clear, unequivocal law that we ought to have had a year ago.

CONSTITUTIONAL MONARCHY.

Some of our esteemed contemporaries have been printing speculations which show a very curious conception of the nature of constitutional monarchies in general, and of the British Constitution in particular. Some of them have even informed their readers that King EDWARD is likely to dismiss Lord SALISBURY, because Lord SALISBURY once lectured him in a way that displeased him, and to put Lord ROSEBERY in his place, because he has met Lord ROSEBERY on the turf and elsewhere, and likes him!

Doubtless, to any one who knows what he supposes every one knows, this is very wonderful. It reminds him of one of BAGEHOT'S imaginary conversations between two Somersetshire peasants on the workings of the British Constitution. The notion that the Constitutional advisers of the Crown are the personal selections of the monarch shows a conception of the British Government which is very quaint. Nothing is better known about Queen VICTORIA than that she disliked Mr. GLADSTONE and liked Mr. DISRAELI. But, the Government of Great Britain being "government by a committee of the House of Commons," the Queen had to take Mr. GLADSTONE, and to turn out Mr. DISRAELI, as often as the former was chosen and the latter rejected by the House. The only occasion on which her personal wishes are known to have prevailed in the formation of a Cabinet was in the exclusion of Mr. LABOUCHERE. Mr. LABOUCHERE himself complained of this as unconstitutional. And so it was. It was simply a piece of personal deference to the desire of an aged and honored sovereign. But, if Mr. LABOUCHERE had been a few shades more important as a politician, Mr. GLADSTONE would not have ventured to abandon him, even at the royal request.

But we need not take too much shame for the ignorance of the British Constitution which is shown in New York, considering the display of the same quality which has just been made in London. One of our esteemed London contemporaries rather ungraciously criticised the expression of condolence on the part of the President of the United States on the death of the Queen as "premature," seeing that it was addressed to "His Majesty the King." To whom else should it have been addressed? The Constitutional theory of our esteemed London contemporary appears to be that a sovereign of Great Britain is not authentically so until he has been so publicly proclaimed. In other words, there was an interregnum in England between the Queen's death and the public announcement of the accession of her successor.

This theory of the British Constitution is quite as wild as that of any of our esteemed yellow contemporaries in New York, and it might conceivably give rise to even more serious practical consequences. If the President of the United States had addressed the dispatch of condolence upon the death of the Queen, which was at once personal and official, to her successor under the title of the Prince of WALES, he would not only have been guilty of a breach of etiquette. He would have shown himself ignorant of the doctrine, which would have made such an address a breach of etiquette; the doctrine, namely, that the sovereignty of England can never be in abeyance. For the Chief Magistrate of a foreign country to betray any doubt upon that point would be equivalent to a declaration, on his part, that there was a dispute about the succession, upon which he reserved the opinion and the action of his Government. The "demise" of the sovereignty of England happened at the moment of the Queen's death. For a foreign Government not to recognize that fact would have been either a blunder or an affront.

MR. BRYAN AND "THE COMMONER."

The announcement that Mr. BRYAN has started a newspaper does not at first sight go with the announcement that he is about to undertake a trip around the world. Either project is defensible. But nobody has heretofore tried to combine them. When a man starts a newspaper, it is his invariable custom to "hang around," at least for a few weeks, to verify his expectations about how it is going to go. But Mr. BRYAN, having started his newspaper, concludes that he will choose this occasion for a look around the planet. That decision of itself settles the controversy, of which he has himself apprised us, whether in a country where it is an article of faith that "all men are created equal" a newspaper should assume to set up invidious distinctions by calling itself The Commoner. Without question, the starter of a newspaper who thus treats his backers and his enterprise is an Uncommoner.

We repeat that his enterprise is justified. The outlook for The Commoner is rosy. Its editor has had some newspaper experience and has proved himself to be worth at least thirty dollars a week. Say fifty, and on a gold basis. There may be some who get more. There are certainly more who get less. And you can, as we are informed, live and respectably bring up a family in Lincoln, Neb., even on the smaller of the sums we have mentioned. And the projector of The Commoner has the advantages of "a first-class newspaper send-off." We do not recall an enterprise of the kind which has had so much free advertising in advance.

And Mr. BRYAN'S other project is more than unblamable. It is commendable, especially when he announces that he is going to devote himself particularly to the study of colonial dependencies and imperialism. At the end of the "Grand Duchess of Gerolstein," one of the cycle of dramatic works of which Mr. BRYAN'S career has so often reminded his thoughtful countrymen, the hero asks the Duchess to appoint him a schoolmaster. "But can you read and write?" "No; it is to learn." Perhaps it had been better that Mr. BRYAN had informed himself about these subjects before he began to inform his countrymen about them. But he has really been very busy with other things. And certainly it were better that he should take them up seriously late than not at all.

It is thus neither of Mr. BRYAN'S schemes, but only both, that may excite apprehension and alarm. A man who can combine starting a newspaper with globe-trotting is entitled to be called the Great Uncommoner.

The principle of the law on which Gov. ODELL bases his veto of the bill for extending the water supply of Goshen, Orange County, is a sound one. It is, in effect, that a matter of considerable importance to the citizens and taxpayers of the town shall be submitted to them for approval. Is this principle any more sound because it happens to be embodied in a statute? Does it not apply in reason and fairness to the right of the people of the City of New York to have their wishes consulted in a matter so important as the removal of the head of their police force by the Executive at Albany? Gov. ODELL undoubtedly knows that the great majority of the citizens of New York are entirely opposed to lodging this power of removal outside of their own agents. It relates not only to property interests far greater than the $10,000 of bonds for Goshen, but to the efficiency of the police force in the maintenance of order and the enforcement of law—matters far more important than all merely property interests. We wish the Governor could find it in his heart to be as just to us poor New Yorkers as he is to the dwellers in the hills of Goshen.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Unmoved by the instant and practically unanimous condemnation of his refusal to give official expression to the feelings with which the vast majority of his unfortunate fellow-citizens heard of the death of Queen VICTORIA, Mayor VAN WYCK persists in keeping the City Hall flag at the top of its mast, with the result that, yesterday as the day before, no reputable New Yorker could pass within sight of the building without experiencing a thrill of angry humiliation as he noted the contrast between the city's flag and the hundreds of others that met the eye all along the neighboring streets. The responsibility for this wanton display of brutal discourtesy would naturally be divided by an indignant public between the Mayor and the Municipal Assembly, since either, by yielding to a rare impulse toward common decency, could have saved the city, as distinguished from its people, from the inevitable disgrace incidental to an exhibition of bad manners, but Mr. VAN WYCK, whose only ambition seems to be to add to his already unrivaled reputation for boorishness, has broken his rule of stolid silence under criticism long enough to say that his will determined the position of the flag, and that he is quite content to take all the responsibility. Let him have it, therefore, the whole of it, and let the Council and Aldermen for once escape denunciation. Of course he is entirely without defense except that which he has as a pachyderm. The "precedents" about which he talks are utterly irrelevant, the most of them, and the rest have but slight and oblique bearing on action to be taken by Americans on the death of Queen VICTORIA. In the past occasional annoyance has been felt when the City Hall flag evidenced no recognition of foreign events that justified, even if they did not specially demand, an expression of official sympathy or respect, but on the whole the failure to express any emotion at all was regarded with satisfaction, since it rendered less likely on other occasions any manifestations of regard for unworthy or questionable objects. Now the case is lamentably different. New York unites with the rest of the civilized world in lamenting the death of the Queen, and yet this Mayor of ours says the city's flag shall not be lowered, because, forsooth, it was not done when one of his personal friends died while fighting for a cause concerning the justice of which there is, to say the least, much difference of opinion.

—By the exercise of an ingenuity the workings of which are utterly incomprehensible on this side of the water, The London Chronicle has been enabled to discover that "the flogging and shooting of peace envoys in DE WET'S camp recalls one of the most striking and pathetic incidents of the war waged between the mother country and her American colonies." The "incident" thus "recalled" is the execution of Major ANDRE, concerning which The Chronicle expatiates in this remarkable manner: "In 1780 a gloom was cast over the English Army and Nation by the sad fate of a most gallant officer, Major ANDRE, who had been ordered to negotiate with BENEDICT ARNOLD, an American General, who offered to desert his countrymen. ANDRE had gone at night to the American lines in uniform, but when day broke he was persuaded to change his clothes, and, being captured within the American lines without his uniform, was hanged as a spy. Nothing cast such a shadow over the fair fame of WASHINGTON as the execution of ANDRE." Now, thanks to the severity of Gen. KITCHENER'S censorship, nothing very definite is yet known either here or in London as to the credentials carried by the so-called peace envoys who were maltreated by the Boer commander. They certainly were not accredited agents of the British military authorities, but had been sent out by a self-created "Peace Committee," composed in part of civilian Englishmen and in part of Boers tired of war and eager for the re-establishment of peace. The London papers make much of the possibility that the envoys wanted to exercise their persuasive powers on Gen. DE WET himself, but the probabilities are that they were on a secret mission, the purpose of which was to incite desertions from the Boer army and to prevent its reinforcement by burghers not then in arms. On no theory in the slightest degree tenable did their status bear even the most remote resemblance to that of Major ANDRE, and whether Gen. DE WET did well or ill in shooting one of them—an Englishman—and flogging the other two, who were Boers, how does his action "recall" that of Gen. WASHINGTON? The latter permitted, after a trial conducted in strict accord with the laws of war, the execution of a British spy who had been captured while treating with an American traitor. The spy was an amiable gentleman, engaged in the performance of a military duty, but he did not question the justice of his own condemnation, and to say that his death shadows the fame of WASHINGTON is to descend to the level of those who say that PAUL JONES was a pirate.

—A picture which appears this week on the first page of Harper's Weekly gives a highly humorous but entirely accurate presentation of the chase after vice in which the Tammany Committee of Five is engaged. The artist has portrayed Mr. NIXON and his associates, mounted in a row on the back of the symbolical tiger. The animal is in rapid motion—so rapid that his riders have obvious difficulty in maintaining their positions—and the direct object of his pursuit is his own tail. The chance that he will overtake it is not great, of course—about as great, a student of probabilities might say, as is the chance that he would do the appendage any serious damage even if he did succeed in shortening the circle in which he runs enough to give the threatening jaws something to do; but the men on the tiger's back, to judge by the expressions of their faces, have suddenly awakened to a realization of the fact that though the tail may be moderately safe, they are themselves in danger, at least of a terrible tumble, in case they do not soon bring the excited creature to a standstill. So they are pulling back with desperate energy, and from one to another passes the exclamation, "Suppose we should catch up with ourselves!" The situation is certainly a trying one. The members of the committee might easily have anticipated its terrors, however, for there are numberless books on tiger-hunting, and every one of them—by clear implication—condemns the hopeless folly of expecting the tiger to assist, voluntarily and knowingly, in his own destruction. If this particular tiger does catch up with himself, it is not his tail that will suffer, but the frightened group of riders. And they know it, somewhat late, but thoroughly. The picture is a triumph of political caricature, and both Mr. ROGERS and Harper's Weekly are to be congratulated on its production at just this time.

—There is something distinctly amusing in the suddenness with which the departmental authorities at Washington have discovered that perhaps there are two sides to the story about the Venezuela asphalt deposits. The public has not been even yet put in possession of anything like enough facts to justify it in deciding, or even guessing, as to which side of the story it likes best, but many indications hint that possibly, just possibly, the Venezuelan Government is not made up entirely of raving maniacs, eager for a war with the United States, and that possibly, just possibly, the version of the situation presented by the Asphalt Trust was not an altogether adequate excuse for ordering out large herds of warships. It doesn't take long to wait a minute in cases of this sort, and happily, though the waiting in this particular case was not done at exactly the right time, still it has been done before any great harm resulted from premature activity. Irreverent outsiders are laughing at us a little, but we can stand that. Meanwhile, it is to be presumed, the merits of the controversy are receiving consideration, and we can all hope with confidence that everybody, in or out of the Asphalt Trust, who has any rights to maintain will succeed in maintaining them. As for Venezuela, her firmness, though just a bit funny, was none the less admirable—provided, of course, Venezuela was firm, which has not yet been proved.

CHOICE SEATS AT THE THEATRES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Noticing in to-day's "Topics of the Times" advice to intending theatregoers to complain to the managers of our playhouses about discourtesy at the box office instead of writing to the newspapers, I take the liberty of telling my own experience in this direction.

Last season at two different theatres which were presenting successes I applied three weeks in advance for seats. The box office clerk took out a big bunch of tickets for the date desired and, although I saw with my own eyes better seats among the lot than the ones offered me, he asserted insolently it was that location or none. The two cases were so alike in detail that a description of one covers the other exactly. In each instance I wrote to the management stating exactly what I have stated here and received a very courteous reply, in which the manager said that the treasurer was instructed to offer only the best seats; that his attraction was very, very popular and people were securing seats a month or two in advance; that of course certain seats had to be reserved for the hotels, &c., and further argument that I didn't want to sit in the first two rows.

As both replies were practically the same, I decided it was useless to complain further and haven't tried it since. It was a singular coincidence that the newsstands two or three days before the performance had the same seats I saw in the hands of the box office clerk three weeks before.

A SPECULATOR'S VICTIM.

THE EXPECTORATION HABIT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There are two things which the guards on the elevated cars and on the platforms do that should cause the discharge of every one of the offenders. They permit men to expectorate all about them, and never utter a word of protest. I have watched dozens of such cases, and know what I am talking about.

They permit men to smoke from one end of the station platform to the other, and never open their heads. I have seen men on the One Hundred and Fourth Street station of the Ninth Avenue line blow cigar, pipe, and cigarette smoke into the face of the big guard who stands there to watch the moving trains, and he acted as if he liked it. At the same time, other men would be blowing cigarette smoke into the faces of women who were standing waiting for trains. Does the guard stop them? I have seen scores of such cases, and he never lifted a finger.

Where is President Murphy of the Health Board? Why doesn't he make an example of a few of these guards?

A SUFFERER.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

From the tone of your articles on Brooklyn Rapid Transit one would suppose that you were stockholders in the concern. Of course, they (the Brooklyn Rapid Transit) are mightily pleased with any change that brings in nickels. Under the present capitalization of the road it is necessary to make these changes to obtain extra nickels enough to pay dividends.

"Why did you buy all those fine sets of the standard authors?"

"Because they were cheap."

"Cheap?"

"Yes, cheap at any price."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Annoyingly Precise.

"Indeed," answered the cold-blooded iconoclast. "I wasn't aware that any flattery would be 'sincere.' James, pass the dictionary."—Washington Star.

Would Have It Right.

"Give me," said the man at the telephone, "South 4200."

"Four two double ought South?" queried the sweet-voiced girl at the central office.

"No," he responded, savagely. "Four two double naught, young woman, if you insist on correcting me!"—Chicago Tribune.

The Need Removed.

Browne—No, more dollars. He really is immensely wealthy now.—Philadelphia Press.

THE SAD CASE OF A FOOL.

S. E. Kiser in Chicago Times-Herald.

A fool sat down beside the road
Where people hurried by
And grinned at men who trudged along
Without demanding why.

At last a woman passed that way,
And presently returned
To ask the fool what pleased him so,
For she was much concerned.

Thereat the fool forgot to smile,
And sadly bowed his head:
"I thought I was the greatest fool
God ever made," he said.

"And oh, it pleased me well to be
Supreme in some one way,
E'en though that way were foolish, but
My joy ends here, to-day!"

The woman, eager to know all,
Remained to ask him, "Why?"
"Because you are," he answered her,
"A greater fool than I."

VARIOUS DRAMATIC TOPICS

Specimens of the Humor in Current Operetta and Musical Farce.

Mr. Sothern's Remarkably Eventful Season—Return of Effie Ellsler—Gossip of the Stage.

Euphrosyne is having a hard time of it in the current comic stage plays. The quality of the humor in "Vienna Life," which is musically and pictorially charming, is best illustrated in one of the showiest remarks of the funny man, to wit: "I may look wealthy, but I am not. All is not Gould that glitters."

This funny man is the keeper of a "merry-go-round." He is mistaken for the owner of large racing stable. "Do not your horses give you a great deal of trouble?" some one asks him.

"Oh, no," he replies; "I only have to rub them off with a damp cloth every morning and give them a coat of paint once a year."

Later in the play he is asked which one of his horses is likely to come in first in the races. "The yellow one with the green spots," he replies. "It has to, for its built that way." This same humorist remarks that he wears medals because he fought, bled, and nearly died for his country, not on the battlefield, but in a four years' course as a cadet.

But, after all, comic operetta is still more humorous than "musical comedy" like "The Night of the Fourth." The verbal jokes in that piece are all ancient, and its very funniest ones are pantomimic, as when the principal comedian, about to pass through one door and directed to "take the other door," literally "takes" the other door, lifting it from its hinges and carrying it away. This same humorist fills a cellar with fireworks. Then he goes into the cellar. A bad boy throws in a property bomb. Explosion, red fire, and reappearance of the comedian with a red nose, a black eye, and his clothes torn in ribbons. Such is the popular stage humor at the dawn of the twentieth century.

Mr. Sothern has had an eventful and exciting season, in which much encouragement has been offset by many discouragements. But the result of it will be increased fame. Everybody will sympathize with him in his mishaps. It is hard to lose the most precious weeks of the forty through an accident like that which happened in the fencing scene of "Hamlet" early in the season. It is hard, too, to be driven out of a theatre by fire and to lose an expensive equipment of scenery and dresses. But in the end talk, much talk, ceaseless iteration, serves the public performer so well that he can afford to pay for it. Mr. Sothern, if he keeps his health and pluck, will more than make up for his losses.

Another curious fact about Sothern is his lately developed habit of replying sharply and publicly to hostile and even to amiable dissenting criticism. An actor who does this may temporarily increase his vogue, but he is in a way to lose the respect of the better part of the community. He eagerly invites criticism of his performances. He knows well enough that all of it, taken as it comes, good and bad, is the very breath of professional life; that the kindliest is only one man's opinion of another's work, that the harshest cannot hurt him in the least if his cause is good. Mr. Sothern's wrathful dispute with some critics in Chicago, who were only stating their own opinions and showing that they had the courage of them, looked, from this distance, like an ancient advertising scheme. Probably it was not, though. Probably another actor has given way to needless irritability.

One of the documents circulated by the "press agents" lately has been the report of an interview with Mr. A. M. Palmer, in which that suave and experienced manager expressed his belief in the recent improvement in the art of acting, (a belief which many other close observers of the stage share with him,) and blew Mr. Sothern's trumpet, though not without a passing reference to Mr. Mansfield's greatness. Is this to be taken as a "sign" of a coming change? It surely will be so regarded by the alert paragraphers.

The revival of Fitch's best play, "Barbara Frietchie," on a big pictorial scale at the Academy next week will bring back to town one of the best American actresses who has been too rarely seen here since the now remote era of "Hazel Kirke." The reason Effie Elisler has not been often in town, however, is that she has always been a star and has failed to provide herself with plays suitable to the metropolis. Her ventures here with Clinton Stuart's version of "Antoinette Rigaud," called "The Keepsake" and with a dreadful Minnie-Palmer-like farce, in which she wore a sunbonnet and was "cunning," are all but forgotten.

But the insight, vigor, and finish of her acting are well remembered. She should well fit the title rôle in "Barbara Frietchie," and easily lend it the semblance of life. The recurrence of the play, too, will be most welcome, though it is as yet doubtful how well it will lend itself to cartoon treatment on the Academy's big stage after its notable success on one of the smallest stages in this city.

After an exceedingly long and encouragingly profitable run, "A Royal Family" will leave the Lyceum and go on the road. It is a rather delicate piece for Winter travel and the rigors of "one-night stands," and doubtless we shall hear anon from some of the farmers' lads whose vanity is tickled by having their names frequently printed in a wily trade weekly as rural dramatic critics of celebrity, how "corrupt" the press of New York is which praised this pretty, fanciful, and witty piece.

But the production of "A Royal Family" will be remembered as one of the most noteworthy and gratifying incidents of the dramatic season. The manner of production, too, could scarcely be surpassed. Annie Russell has done nothing better than the Princess, while Mrs. Gilbert as the Dowager Queen has been just in her element and Mr. Thompson's admirable portrayal of the diplomatic and patient Cardinal, one of the most delightfully humorous characters in the wholy repertory of modern comedy, has measurably increased his artistic repute.

The local managers seem to prefer to have their first nights conflict. In London it is considered almost a breach of courtesy for one manager to produce a new play on a night pre-empted by another manager for the same purpose. But here we often have as many as five new productions on the same night with no thought of the worry and bother entailed upon the professional playgoers. To be sure, the survival of the "combination system" here partly explains, if it does not excuse, the managerial custom. But in the case of the announced first performance of "Under Two Flags," to conflict, Feb. 4, with the productions of "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines" at the Garrick and "Richard Savage" at the Lyceum, there is surely not that excuse, for the Garden Theatre will be unused all next week, and surely "Under Two Flags" could be got ready for a first performance by next Friday or Saturday night. All the regular first nighters will want to see Ethel Barrymore in Fitch's new piece, and Henry Miller as Savage. But they will also want to see Blanche Bates in her new rôle. Such expostulations as this, however, do no good, any more than the protests about extortions and rudeness in the sale of theatre tickets.

Pinero's long-promised new comedy is belated. He seems to work slowly nowadays, and the production of one new piece in two years is his limit. Haddon Chambers's piece, "The Awakening," postponed at the St. James's Theatre this week on account of the death of the Queen, is the only new English play of consequence actually in sight in London. Some of the newspapers are complaining of the overdoing of revivals. Shakespeare by Irving, Tree, and Lewis Waller is all very well, but the well-worn and out-of-date "Masks and Faces" threatened for production in two theatres at once, with Winifred Emery and Marie Tempest as the rival Peg Woffingtons, and the promised recurrence of the old and played-out "Peril" ("Nos Intimes") are not encouraging.

King Edward VII., in his forty-eight visits to London theatres in the year 1900, went fourteen times to hear grand opera at Covent Garden and showed himself most catholic in the choice of nights. He sat through three works of the Wagner cycle, missing only "Siegfried," and was at the premiere of Puccini's "La Tasca." He went to the Alhambra once and was also once at the Hippodrome. He liked both "Miss Hobbs" and "San Toy" so much that he saw them twice.

MISS OLITZKA'S CONCERT.

A Song and Violin Recital at Mendelssohn Hall.

Rosa Olitzka, one of the contraltos of the Metropolitan Opera House company, gave a concert at Mendelssohn Hall yesterday afternoon. She had the assistance of Maud Powell, the violinist; Louis Saar as accompanist, and Robert Thallon at the organ for one number. The songs which Miss Olitzka elected to sing were Marcello's "Quella Fiametta," Durante's "Danza, Danza," Schubert's "Der Wanderer" and "Geheimniss," Jensen's "Murmelndes Lüftchen," Schumann's "Frühlingsnacht," Brahms's "Von ewiger Liebe," Grieg's "Zwei Braune Augen," Saar's "Sterne" and "Liebesquelle," Mackenzie's "Old Corsican Ballad," d'Albert's "Mädchen mit dem Schmetterling," and Bizet's "Agnus Dei." Miss Powell played Tartini's sonata "Dido ne Abbandonata" and Hubay's "Scenes de la Czarda."

It appears to be necessary to the satisfaction of some of the singers of the Metropolitan company that they should give song recitals. It is certainly not essential to the happiness of the general public. Miss Olitzka is evidently a well-meaning person, quite incapable of understanding why she cannot be accepted here as a great singer. She has a good voice and she could sing with it if she only knew how. But her method of vocal emission—in which all the tones, with a few exceptions, are placed too far forward, in which there is a ceaseless strain of the muscles of the throat, and a constant mismanagement of the breath—produces a quality of tone unpleasant enough on the operatic stage, but doubly so in the concert hall, where all of its peculiarities are more clearly heard. Yesterday Miss Olitzka was apparently suffering from a slight cold, but if she had not been the results would not have been markedly different. No singer who breathes so spasmodically as she does can hope to bring forth that smooth, solid, trustworthy tone, with which the interpretation of the intimacies of songs can be successfully attempted.

Miss Powell lent the dignity of her art to an entertainment which without it would have seemed more than dull. Her performance of the Tartini sonata was distinguished by lovely purity of tone, impeccable technic, and high dignity of style. It was good, solid, musical violin playing, and was a genuine delight to hear. The audience was large and of a very friendly constitution.

A MARQUIS IN CONCERT.

At Carnegie Hall last night a concert of the most curious nature took place. It was announced with much blazonry in the preliminary heraldings, and the expectations raised by these announcements were realized in a peculiar fashion. The concert was given for the purpose of introducing to this public the Marquis de Souza Continuno, a near relative of the King of Portugal. Rumor had preceded the advent of the Marquis with the news that he was a gentleman of extraordinary physical and vocal proportions. For once rumor proved to be true. The Marquis is a very large man and he has a very large voice. Furthermore, it is a very good voice, and in the hands of an artist would be of immeasurable value. But the Marquis de Souza apparently has no respect for anything but the size of his voice. At any rate, last night, in his singing of the prologue from "Pagliacci," and in the everlasting Toreador song from "Carmen," it was the enormous volume of his tones and his ability to make contrasts by singing piano that he chose to exhibit. Of refinement and beauty of style, or poetry of interpretation, he was apparently quite ignorant, or quite careless. His delivery of the "Carmen" excerpt was the most ludicrous ever heard in this town. The audience, which was there for the purpose, cheered the vociferations of the noble Portuguese as if they had been the revelations of a new era in art.

Mr. Martinus Sieveking, pianist, played with the orchestra the concerto of Rachmaninoff. The work was a disappointment. The first movement is made of Schumann, Tschaikowsky and water. The second employs the water alone. The third is chiefly wind. Such an empty, foolish, cheap piece of piano writing has not been heard in this city in many moons. Mr. Sieveking's performance was entirely worthy of the composition. It was hard, inflexible, stolid, and unmusical. But, of course, he had to be encored, and then he played the Rachmaninoff étude, which Siloti introduced here, and which made its composer a subject of interest. After last night, however, most music lovers will suspect that he was a "single-speech Harrison." Mr Victor Harris conducted a scratch orchestra in a scratch manner.

GIFT TO BROOKLYN INSTITUTE.

Movement Started to Purchase a Picture by William Keith.

The art department of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences is likely to have a new picture presented to it—a landscape by William Keith, the California artist. The picture is valued at $400. It is entitled "Springtime in the Valley of Napa." The picture was presented to the National American Woman's Suffrage Association by Mr. Keith, and was in the California booth at its bazaar in December. The price on the picture being prohibitive, it remained in the possession of the association.

A number of Brooklyn people at the close of the bazaar expressed a desire to purchase the picture by subscription for the Brooklyn Art Museum. A notice to this effect was sent to Prof. Hooper, Director of the Brooklyn Institute, asking if such a gift would be acceptable. Carll H. De Silver, one of the Vice Presidents of the Institute and Chairman of the Committee on Museum, and Prof. Goodyear, Curator of Finance, examined the picture at the association rooms, reported favorably, and notice has been sent to the association officers that the institute will accept the picture if it is presented to it.

Subscriptions are now being received at the headquarters of the Suffrage Association, American Tract Society Building, Nassau Street.

BRUCE ISMAY HERE.

White Star Steamship Owner Says Racers Have Played Out.

Bruce Ismay of Ismay, Imrie & Co. of Liverpool, the owners of the White Star Steamship Line, was among those who arrived in New York on the Oceanic yesterday. Mr. Ismay comes to New York on business, the nature of which he would not disclose. He said though that the company had placed an order with Harland & Wolf, the Belfast ship builders, for the construction of another ocean liner.

The new vessel will have a displacement of 3,000 tons in excess of the Oceanic, he said, and have seven feet more beam, but would probably not be any longer. She would not be any faster than the Oceanic, and would not come under the head of a racer, which type of vessel, Mr. Ismay said, had played out. The line was so well pleased with the success of the Oceanic that it would not build boats any faster than that vessel.

THE NEW RAILWAY IN LONDON.

Mr. Legare Here to Interest the Johnson Brothers in Its Purchase.

B. Peyton Legare of London is at the Gilsey House. His visit is for the purpose of seeing Tom L. and Albert Johnson with reference to the purchase of the Baker Street and Waterloo underground railway, in the English capital. The road runs from the Elephant and Castle at Islington under the River Thames and Trafalgar Square to Paddington. It is something over five miles long, and is considered an excellent artery to relieve the congestion of traffic.

Mr. Legare said last night that an American named Willoughby, who is in the real estate business in London, has an option on the property for $2,500,000. The road is about half completed, and the Johnsons can have it for the sum named at its completion. Mr. Legare will see one of the Johnson brothers to-day, and hopes to get his business transacted so that he can return to Europe by the Oceanic next Wednesday.

OSWALD OTTENDORFER'S PUBLIC BEQUESTS

Will of Staats-Zeitung's Proprietor Offered for Probate.

Over $200,000 Given to Charitable and Educational Institutions—$50,000 for Employes of His Newspaper.

The will of Oswald Ottendorfer, editor and proprietor of The New Yorker Staats-Zeitung, was offered for probate in the Surrogates' office late yesterday. The testator leaves over $200,000 to charitable and educational institutions. He also remembers the employes on the Staats-Zeitung by giving $50,000, to be divided among them.

Mr. Ottendorfer died on Dec. 15 last, and the delay in probating his will gave rise to some rumors that there would be a contest over his estate. He left no direct heirs who are in a position to make a contest, and he has liberally provided for his stepchildren. Those who are in a position to know, declare that the large estate will be amicably divided. The will, with its three codicils, made a most voluminous document when it was presented to the Surrogate. The petition accompanying the will says the estate is worth "over $10,000." Those who know estimate the value of the real and personal property left by Mr. Ottendorfer at over $2,000,000.

The will is dated May 22, 1890. The three codicils were executed in 1892, 1897, and 1900. Lewis Cass Ledyard, who drew the will and is one of the executors, prepared a summary last night of all the bequests made by Mr. Ottendorfer. The New York Free Circulating Library gets $20,000, the United Relief Work of the Society for Ethical Culture $10,000, the Charity Organization Society $20,000, Cooper Union and the German Hospital and Dispensary each get $20,000. To the Isabella Heimath, which was founded by the testator's wife, is given $100,000. The German Ladies' Society for the Relief of Destitute Widows and Orphans receives $10,000, and the American Museum of Natural History gets $25,000.

I give and bequeath unto my executors the sum of $50,000, in trust, to divide, distribute, and pay over the same unto such of the employes of the corporation known as The New Yorker Staats-Zeitung of the City of New York as shall come within the category and fulfill the requirements following, that is to say: Such as shall at the time of my death be, and shall have been continuously for the period of at least one year, devoting and contributing their whole time, labor, and services to the said New Yorker Staats Zeitung, to the exclusion of any and all other profession, business, and calling, and who shall at my death be, and shall then for at least one year next preceding have been, receiving for such services certain salaries or wages, which shall have been voluntarily fixed and adjusted by the Trustees of said corporation; provided, however, that no person shall be deemed to come within the said category and shall be entitled to any interest in this bequest unless the Trustees of said New Yorker Staats Zeitung shall so certify in writing to my said executors. The said sum shall be divided among the persons entitled thereto in proportion to the aggregate salaries or wages received by them respectively during the year next preceding my death.

The personal bequests made by Mr. Ottendorfer include $20,000 to Mrs. Eleanora Stabler, who for a number of years was his housekeeper. His servant, Patrick Gaffigan, is to receive $5,000.

The balance of his estate Mr. Ottendorfer divides among the children of his wife and their children. He first provides that all the household furniture, silverware, and pictures shall be given to his stepchildren, Edward Uhl, Emma Schalk, Mathilda Riedl von Riedenstein, and Anna Woerishoffer. One share of stock in The New Yorker Staats Zeitung is given outright to Mrs. Woerishoffer, and all the other shares owned by the testator are to be equally divided between his three stepdaughters, Emma Schalk, Mathilda Riedl von Riedenstein, and Anna Woerishoffer.

To his step granddaughters Annibel, Baroness von Leitenberger, and Antoinette, Countess Seilern, Mr. Ottendorfer leaves $30,000 each, and to his step granddaughter Emma Carola Woerishoffer he gives $80,000. All the residue of the estate, both real and personal, is to be divided among the testator's three stepdaughters.

The last codicil to the will revokes a bequest of $50,000 to the testator's native city of Zwittau, Austria, as well as a large number of legacies to relatives in Austria. In explanation of this the testator says: "I have already, since the making of my said will, made such provisions as I deem proper for the several legatees to whom the same were given."

Mr. Ottendorfer, in order to anticipate any possible contest of his will, adds the following clause:

Since I have made that disposition of my property which in my judgment, after mature consideration, is the wisest and best, I do further direct and it is my will, that in case any person to whom any legacy is given by this will, or for whose benefit any provision is made by this will, or any person who, if I had died intestate, would be entitled to any share or interest in my property or estate, shall under any pretense, or for any reason whatever, institute, share, or participate in any action or proceeding looking to the probate of this my last will and testament, or to impeach or impair or to set aside or invalidate any of its provisions, any and every devise or legacy to such person, and any and every provision of my will for the benefit of such person is hereby revoked, and such person shall be excluded from any participation in, and shall not have any share or portion of my property or estate, and I give and bequeath unto my stepchildren Edward Uhl, Emma Schalk, Mathilda Riedl von Riedenstein, and Anna Woerishoffer all legacies and benefits given to or conferred upon such person by any provision of this will; and also I give, devise, and bequeath unto the said Edward Uhl, Emma Schalk, Mathilda Riedl von Riedenstein, and Anna Woerishoffer all my portion or share in my estate to which, had I died intestate, such person would have been entitled.

The executors, who are not required to give bonds, are Anna Woerishoffer, Julius W. Brunn, and Lewis Cass Ledyard.

The announcement was made last night that the will would in no way change the present position of the Staats Zeitung, and that the profit-sharing arrangement with the employes on that paper would continue as heretofore. The giving of $50,000 to the employes by the testator was really complying with the request of the testator's wife, Mrs. Ottendorfer was the widow of Jacob Uhl, who owned the Staats Zeitung before Mr. Ottendorfer came to the United States. After Mr. Uhl's death Mr. Ottendorfer married the widow, and when she died, some twelve years ago, she made a request that he distribute by his will at least $25,000 among the employes.

Herman Ridder, the publisher of the Staats Zeitung, announced last night that he would not take any share of this bequest, preferring to have it divided among the other persons connected with the paper.

Mr. Ottendorfer practically retransferred by his will all of the interest in the Staats Zeitung back to the direct heirs of Jacob Uhl, who was his first employer in newspaper work. Edward Uhl, Mr. Ottendorfer's stepson, already has an interest in the paper, and as a result he received very little under the will.

None of those interested in the probate of the will would discuss the value of the estate or the provisions of the will when seen last night. Mr. Ledyard in explaining the delay in filing the will said that it was due to the fact that several of the heirs lived abroad, and they had to be communicated with before the will could be filed.

YEAR'S WORK AT ST. MARY'S.

The twenty-third annual report of St. Mary's, a charitable organization at 143 West Fourteenth Street, which has just been made public, gives statistics in regard to the work done during the year. Meals have been given to 45,937 people, while 20,427 others have been sheltered and fed.

A feature of the institution is the Night Refuge for Women, which it maintains at 144 West Fifteenth Street. This house is open at all hours of the day and night, and applicants for shelter are never turned away. It is the only refuge in the city where a homeless woman may find food and shelter without being questioned as to her antecedents. No attempt is made to investigate the circumstances or character of the applicants. Besides this refuge, St. Mary's supports a Summer cottage at Long Branch, where women and children are cared for during the hot weather.

Susan M. Osborne, the President, says in her report that money is urgently needed for carrying on the work of the institution. Contributions will be received at 143 West Fourteenth Street.

Aid for a Consumption Sufferer.

THE NEW YORK TIMES has received $5 from "E. D. T." and $2 from "Mrs. E. J. A." in aid of the young man suffering from consumption, for whom the Brooklyn Bureau has made an appeal.

Paintings, Water Colors, and Crayons at the Montrose Gallery.

The play of color round the walls of the Montrose Gallery, a small gallery on Fifth Avenue, at Thirty-fifth Street, tells at first glance the presence of one of the great color wizards of the age, the man who taught the world a new lesson in stained glass, after the masters of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries were supposed to have uttered in that medium the last and conclusive word, the man who took mosaic and made it translucent, and has filled window after window in cathedral, in church, and in mansion with poems of color such as no century before our own has known.

Here is a mere handful from the total work of John La Farge, a few oil paintings, many water colors, studies in crayon or color for decorations never shown to the public, or for stained glass windows which must be hunted for in New York and Buffalo, Boston and Stockbridge, or wherever else they have been placed. A few records of travel in the South Pacific and Japan, part of the large body of work he has produced in memory of his impressions of the Orient, repeat the story of the colorist. Looking about the gallery as these come one by one in view, one thinks of the way the East strikes a writer who has made the Orient his happy hunting ground these many years, a word painter such as Lafcadio Hearn, for example, who describes a Japanese night: "There was no wind, but the sea, far as the sight could reach, was running in ripples of fire—a vision of infernal beauty. Only the ripplings were radiant, for between them was blackness absolute, and the luminosity was amazing. Most of the undulations were yellow like candle flame; but there were crimson lampings here and there—and azure, and orange and emerald." Similar feasts of color will greet one here in a daylight scene: "Bridle path in Tahiti," where the embayed waters on the right, with the hills beyond in different shades of dark and blue and mauve seem in excellent tone with the great palm tree in the middle distance and the nude native to the left, with a wine-red loincloth about him, who rides his horse away from the spectator along the bridle path. Such is the coloring of a view from the Great Pallon Hawaii, with its many-colored hills and seas and its promontory fading down into the ocean.

"Mauna Loa, Hawaii, Sunrise," "Crater of Kilauea and Dana Lake, Evening," and "Kilauea, Hawaii, Looking at Cone of Crater," are further landscapes. Then there are the pictures that show the Samoan natives seated cross-legged at the Siva dance; files of natives bringing presents of food, women dancing by daylight and at night; scenes in Tahiti and Fiji; a view of a courtship in Samoa, the courting couple peeping at each other around the bole of a tree; recollections of Ceylon, such as a Cinghalese girl posing as Lakshmi, the Goddess of Love, and a landscape showing one of the reservoirs at Kandy; dancing girls at Garoet, Java, and "Tokyo Bachelor Uncle," in the House of Our Neighbor the Priest."

What may surprise those who think of La Farge as a maker of glass windows is the excellence of his early work in oils. Here is a painting of camellias and other flowers lent by Mr. J. J. Higginson, and a study of Bayou Teche, Louisiana, the latter painted in 1860 and the former probably before the Civil War. Here is a splendid, mellow view of Bishop Berkeley's Rock at Paradise, near Newport, with the red-brown salt marshes below and the sea beyond the marshes, dated 1867. The strength and richness of these oils testify to the loss we have suffered in the matter of easel pictures because La Farge gave himself up to stained glass and mural painting. There are decorative panels in wax medium and witnesses of his exquisite feeling for flowers in "Nocturne," a single blossom of the morning glory, and in "Roses in Antique White Bowl," in "Hollyhocks," and "Waterlily," and "Apple Blossoms." Mr. Higginson's water-color "Irises" is one of the finest flower pieces here, strong and cool and suggestive. And among the marines none is better than the Newport sketch with splendid clouds over a dark-blue sea, lent by Mr. C. T. Barney.

There are bits from every portion of La Farge's life as an artist. "The Last Arrow of Will of Cloudeslee" seems to hark back to the time when the British Pre-Raphs had their day; but their methods are not strongly apparent. Will, in kirtle green, kneels forward to shoot; a woman, around whose knees clings a frightened child, stands just beyond him in dismay; she wears the pale red gown one often sees on La Farge's studies for church windows. "The Little Choir Boy," oil painting, dated 1859; "Adoration," water color, more than life size, admirable for the drapery in the standing female figure, both hands up in prayer; "The Angel Stirring the Pool," and a color study for an adoring angel, help represent his religious pictures and stained glass. All these pencil sketches, crayons, water colors, and oils to the number of 90, together with others which may be added later as loans, will remain at the Montrose Gallery for a month.

RESENTS JUSTICE'S CRITICISM.

State Agricultural Department Official Talks of Oleomargarine.

F. H. J. Kracke, Assistant Commissioner of the State Department of Agriculture, said yesterday:

"My attention has been called to the statement made by Justice Jerome in the Court of Special Sessions in which he criticised this department for not prosecuting manufacturers and wholesalers of oleomargarine instead of the storekeepers and restaurants. There are no manufacturers or wholesalers of oleomargarine in this State. As this is a State law, we have no jurisdiction outside of the State of New York, and whatever oleomargarine is found has been brought from another State through the medium of the railroad or express. As such the latter are common carriers, and we have no jurisdiction over these goods until they are delivered here. Wherever this department has been able to secure evidence that any expressman was acting as an agent he has been prosecuted in the Court of Special Sessions, all of which was fully explained to Justice Jerome some time ago when I called upon him.

"It therefore looks to me as though the statement of Justice Jerome, if he has been reported correctly, amounts to nothing short of an abnormal desire to criticise."

Lincoln's Birthday Celebration.

The elaborate preparations for the public celebration of Lincoln's Birthday at Carnegie Hall on the evening of Feb. 11, are now about complete. On the platform will be seated the committee in charge, the orator, Henry Watterson; the presiding officer, Mark Twain, and guests. Besides President McKinley those invited are Robert T. Lincoln, son of Abraham Lincoln; Secretary of State John Hay, ex-President Grover Cleveland, ex-Speaker Thomas B. Reed, President Patton of Princeton University, and Lieut. Gov. T. L. Woodruff. Seats at $2 and $1 are already selling well at the box office of the Musical Art Society, 388 Fifth Avenue, near Thirty-sixth Street.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

The opening of the new Clyde Fitch play "Lover's Lane," at the Manhattan Theatre, has been postponed until Tuesday, Feb. 5. The theatre will be closed the coming week for night and day rehearsals.

Theo F. Morse and Vincent P. Bryan are writing a new set of lyrics for Marie Dressler for her play "Miss Printy." Two of their songs, "Ugly" and "Johnnie in the Army," have already been introduced into the farce and proved quite successful.

Maurice Grau announces that, owing to the unfinished condition of the opera "Tosca," the initial performance will be postponed from Feb. 1 to Feb. 5, and in its place will be substituted a performance of "Aida," with Margaret Macintyre in the leading soprano rôle.

Sickness has again made its appearance in the Empire Stock Company, and has caused the retirement of Miss Jessie Millward, who plays the part of Lady Eastney. Miss Ethel Harnick will play her rôle until she is well enough to return to the company.

Henry Bergman, whose last appearance in this city was with the "Springhtly Romance of Marsac" company, has arranged to present a sketch called "A Case of Divorce" at the New York Theatre, beginning next Monday night. He will be assisted by Miss Nina Farrington.

In consequence of the success attending the Damrosch Wagner lectures at Daly's Theatre, Daniel Frohman has arranged for a supplementary recital, to be given by Mr. Damrosch on Friday, Feb. 1, on the subject of "Tristan and Isolde." On Feb. 14 a final lecture will be given on the subject of Tschaikowsky, with musical illustrations by Mr. Damrosch and William Henderson. For this afternoon's lecture Wagner's "Siegfried" will be the subject.

"La Tragédie de la Morte," (The Tragedy of Death,) a new symbolic drama by M. Réné Peter, the French poet, will be presented at the Empire Theatre on Tuesday afternoon, Jan. 29, at the fourth performance of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. The English version of this drama has been made by Edwin Star Belknap. A comedy in three tableaux from the French of Octave Feuillet, and a one-act farce from Molière entitled "The Jealousy of Barbouille," will also be included in the programme.

BENJ. D. SILLIMAN DEAD

New York Lawyer Was the Oldest Graduate of Yale.

Owned the Most Valuable Piece of Real Estate, Dimensions Considered, in America.

Benjamin D. Silliman died yesterday morning at his home, corner of Pierrepont and Clinton Streets, Brooklyn. He was ninety-five years old. Mr. Silliman had been ill about a week with bronchial pneumonia. Despite his extreme age, it had been thought on Wednesday that he had a chance of recovery, but a change for the worse in his condition took place early yesterday morning, and he sank rapidly.

Mr. Silliman was the oldest practicing lawyer in the State, and was also the oldest living graduate of Yale University. The arrangements for the funeral have not yet been completed, but the services will probably be held at the Church of the Pilgrims, Remsen and Henry Streets, on Monday. Mr. Silliman never married, and his nearest relatives living are his sister, Mrs. Laura S. Blagden of Washington; two nieces, Miss Caroline Taylor, who was his housekeeper for years, and Mrs. Samuel Carey of Manhattan; another niece, Mrs. Harriet Silliman Matherson of Brooklyn, and two nephews.

It is expected that the greater part of Mr. Silliman's estate will go to these relatives. No estimate of the value of the estate could be obtained yesterday, but it is known to be very large. Mr. Silliman inherited a fortune from an aunt, and was also left part of the estate of his brother. He owned the valuable piece of property at the southeast corner of Broadway and Wall Street, Manhattan; his residence in Brooklyn, also a valuable property; a country seat at Babylon, L. I., and other real and personal estate. It could not be learned yesterday whether Mr. Silliman had left any directions for disposing of the important business property at Wall Street and Broadway. Yale University will receive at least $50,000 from the estate of Mr. Silliman. This amount was left to Mr. Silliman in trust for the university by his brother, the trust expiring at the death of Mr. Silliman. It is believed that Mr. Silliman has himself also handsomely remembered the university in his will.

Benjamin Douglas Silliman came of an old New England family. Among his ancestors were the John Alden and Priscilla Mullins made famous by Longfellow. Ebenezer Silliman, his great-grandfather, graduated in 1727 from Yale. Gen. Gold S. Silliman, who played a prominent part in the Revolutionary War, also studied at Yale, and his father, Gold S. Silliman, who in Colonial days was Crown Attorney for Fairfield County, Conn., was graduated in 1796. Benjamin Silliman's uncle, Benjamin Silliman, was Yale's first Professor of Science.

The class of '24, in which the last Benjamin Silliman graduated, contained many other distinguished men. In it were the young men who later in life became Chief Justice Origen S. Seymour of Connecticut, Willis Hall, formerly Attorney General of New York State; Gen. Elias W. Leavenworth, formerly Secretary of State of New York, and the Rev. Richard F. Cleveland, father of ex-President Grover Cleveland.

Mr. Silliman was born in Newport on Sept. 14, 1805. When he was ten years old his father moved to New York to take up mercantile pursuits, and the greater part of his boyhood was spent in an old house in Greenwich village, which stood on the ground now occupied by the Jefferson Market Police Court. While he was at Yale his father moved to Brooklyn, and he spent the greater part of his life there, having lived for over fifty years in the house at 56 Clinton Street.

After leaving Yale, young Silliman studied law in the office of Chancellor Kent, and was admitted to the bar in 1820. Since then he was an active member of the legal profession up to a few years before his death. His last public appearance as a pleader in a lawsuit was a little over three years ago, when he appeared as counsel for the Bank of the Republic in an action against the New York Clearing House. Joseph H. Choate, now Ambassador to England, was the opposing counsel.

In 1838 Mr. Silliman began his political career as a member of the Assembly from Brooklyn. The first measure he introduced was the bill incorporating Greenwood Cemetery in Brooklyn. The next year he was a delegate to the Harrisburg Convention, which nominated Gen. Harrison for President, and in the following campaign he ran for Congress in the Second District, which then included Long and Staten Islands as well as Rockland County, and was defeated by 200 votes. Mr. Silliman became an ardent Republican at the formation of that party. In 1864 President Lincoln appointed him United States District Attorney for the Eastern District of New York, and in 1872 he was an active member of the convention which revised the State Constitution. In 1873 he was unsuccessful as a candidate for the office of Attorney General of the State. In that year he received the honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws from Columbia College, and in the following year Yale—his Alma Mater—conferred a similar honor upon him.

Although an extensive property owner Mr. Silliman was well known in real estate circles through his ownership of the southeast corner of Broadway and Wall Street. This little corner, about thirty by forty feet in size, enjoys the reputation of being the most valuable piece of ground in this city, if not in the world. Its little four-story brick building has been overshadowed by skyscrapers on all sides of it, but Mr. Silliman has persistently refused all offers to buy the property. At one time, it is said, he was offered $540,000 for it. This would be at the rate of $450 a square foot. The property was bequeathed to Mr. Silliman by his aunt, Mary McGregor, whose will was probated in 1871. John McGregor had acquired the parcel in May, 1827, for a consideration of $18,275.

The corner is next to the tall building erected and owned by W. Wheeler Smith. When Mr. Smith put up his building he made to Mr. Silliman what was considered a very liberal offer for the little corner, and as this was not accepted it became the general opinion among real estate men that Mr. Silliman refrained from selling from sentimental rather than financial reasons. In fact, a well-known downtown real estate broker, who heard of Mr. Silliman's death yesterday afternoon, recalled an interview which he had had with him three or four years ago. In the conversation, the Broadway corner was mentioned incidentally, and the broker said:

"Mr. Silliman, don't you take considerable pride in owning the most valuable piece of real estate on the American continent?"

"Well," replied Mr. Silliman, "perhaps that is so. I think with me there may be something about the property aside from its absolute value."

Mr. Smith's building could be readily extended to include the corner, and it is not unlikely that negotiations to this end will be opened with Mr. Silliman's heirs, or that Mr. Smith will acquire the parcel if it is sold at auction under partition proceedings.

Mr. Silliman was one of the founders of the Bar Association. For over twenty years he had been President of the Brooklyn Club. From the organization of the New England Society of New York State until 1886 he was its President. He had also been President of the Yale Alumni Association of Long Island, and a Director of the Long Island Historical Society and a Trustee of the Greenwood Cemetery.

Bedford Park's Water Supply.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In to-day's issue of your paper an article appears, headed, "No Water in Bedford Park." While this is the condition of the water supply in the hilly districts, it does not apply to the whole of Bedford Park. Such an impression would tend to injure this place in the eyes of prospective buyers of real estate, notwithstanding the fact that it is one of the most healthful and beautiful settlements in the environs of New York City.

The object of the delegation which called on Mayor Van Wyck was to obtain some temporary relief until such time as the Board of Aldermen was ready to vote favorably on a measure appropriating $80,000 for a pumping station in the vicinity, and which should be available immediately.

The resolution is now in committee, but Alderman Geiger promises that a meeting will be held on Friday and the report signed, and it will be submitted to the Board on Tuesday next.

We have submitted several propositions for temporary relief to Commissioner of Water Supply William Dalton and his Chief Engineer, Mr. Birdsall, who rejected them as not being feasible, and would now, through the instrumentality of your estimable paper, request that the above named gentlemen make arrangements to send sprinkling carts through the district, thereby relieving the present distress.

DANIEL A. M'CORMICK,
Secretary of the Bedford Park Taxpayers' Association.
New York, Jan. 23, 1901.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The Secretary of War and Mrs. Root entertained at a large dinner party this evening, at which the guests of honor were the Mexican Ambassador and Mme. Aspiroz, who are not included in the general mourning for Queen Victoria now prevailing in diplomatic society. Other guests were Justice and Mrs. Brown, Justice and Mrs. Harlan, Gen. and Mrs. Miles, Senator and Mrs. Elkins, Senator Hale, Senator Depew, Mr. and Mrs. Cassatt of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. Wayne MacVeagh, the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Hill, Mrs. Sheridan, Rear Admiral Kenna, Miss McKenna, Miss Patten, and Miss Root.

Mrs. Audenried entertained to-day in honor of Miss Pauiding and Lieut. John R. Edie, whose engagement has recently been announced. Other guests were Mr. and Mrs. George B. McClellan, Mr. and Mrs. Olmsted, Miss Kean, Miss Ernst, Mr. Woodhull, and Dr. Kindleberger.

Miss MacVeagh entertained at luncheon to-day. Her guests included Miss Root, Miss Hitchcock, Miss Griggs, Miss McKenna, Miss McMillan, Miss Jones, Miss Lovering, Miss Wallach, Miss Alice Ward, and Miss Hagner.

NEWPORT SOCIETY NOTES.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Jan. 24.—Gen. and Mrs. Herbert F. Eaton, accompanied by their two sons, went to New York this afternoon. The Eatons will remain in New York for a few weeks and then visit Mr. and Mrs. A. T. French at Lenox, afterward sailing for England. Mrs. French remains at Harbourview to receive Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who will remain for a week before sailing for Europe.

Mrs. French, in appreciation of the work of the police detail at Harbourview during the recent wedding, to-day sent Chief of Police Richards a check for $100.

Mrs. Paget, daughter of the late Mrs. Paran Stevens, is expected here in a few days to look over her estate, known as Marietta Villa.

Crawford—Owen.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Miss Kathleen Beale Owen of this city and William Gordon Crawford of New York were married at noon to-day at St. John's, in the presence of a large company of guests. The ushers were Acosta Nichols, Albert Fairfax, and J. D. Crawford of New York; Walter Davidge, Jr., William S. Reyburn, Robert E. Lee, and Newton C. Adams of Washington, and John Bergland of Baltimore. In the absence of her elder brother, Lieut. Albert Crosby Owen, United States Navy, who is in China, the bride was escorted by her seventeen-year-old brother, Hubley Owen, who gave her hand in marriage. The only attendant maid was the bride's sister, Miss Christine Owen. Mr. Crawford and his best man, Marshall J. Gasquet of New York, joined the bride at the chancel, where the Rev. Dr. Mackay-Smith read the service.

A breakfast and reception at the bride's home followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Crawford started in the afternoon on a wedding trip, which will include a visit to New Orleans.

Mrs. Crawford is the daughter of the late Dr. Owen, United States Navy, and a niece of Mrs. Queen, widow of Rear Admiral Queen. She has lived with Mrs. Queen from childhood.

Dinner of Dartmouth's Sons.

The annual dinner of the Dartmouth College Association will be given at Delmonico's to-night. William H. Cohen, President of the association, will preside, and Ex-Gov. Black, Governor Odell, Dr. William Tucker, President of the College; John H. Wright, Professor of Greek at Harvard; Congressman McCall of Massachusetts, and Congressman Foster of Vermont are expected to be among the speakers.

Society has so much to amuse it these days that the twenty-four hours pass with almost lightning-like rapidity. The mornings are devoted to all kinds of pursuits, and the afternoons to luncheons, receptions, and bridge whist, while the evenings are divided between dinners and dances. Last evening the Assembly ball was possibly the largest gathering of society's forces. Those who cared for more serious pursuits went to the meeting of the Thursday Evening Club, which was held at the residence of John Bigelow, in Gramercy Park, while the Poultry Show had a large number of visitors, many of whom have personal interest in the exhibits. The Old Guard ball hardly comes under the head of fashionable events, but at all large public balls in New York you may meet many people who go to see the tableaus and to enjoy themselves incog.

This evening, at the residence of Heber R. Bishop, who has a very sumptuous ballroom, designed after one in the Palace at Fontainebleau, there will take place another private ball. Mr. Bishop usually gives an entertainment of this kind every year. The ball will be very late, on account of the dinners which will precede it, notably one which is to be given by Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, with a vaudeville entertainment. The opera also will attract many of those who are going to the Bishop ball.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Robert McAllister Lloyd, (Miss Jennet M. Belknap,) who were obliged to recall the invitations for the dance in honor of Miss Eleanor R. Morris, scheduled for Jan. 17, owing to the death of a relative of Miss Morris, have cards out for a dance to be given on Tuesday, Feb. 19, at which G. Beekman Hoppin will lead the cotillion, dancing with Mrs. Lloyd. The dance will be preceded by a dinner.

***

A number of dinners not yet announced include those of Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, who has cards out for a dinner to be given on Saturday, Feb. 2, and Mrs. Robert McAllister Lloyd, who has invitations out for a dinner of twenty-four covers, to be given on Tuesday evening, Feb. 12.

***

Coleman Drayton and his daughter, Miss Drayton, granddaughter of Mrs. Astor, who were expected to arrive here from England, have postponed their coming until a later date. They have remained over for the ceremonies attendant upon the death of the Queen and the installation of the King.

***

Mrs. Adrian Iselin, Jr., has cards out for a small dance for Miss Therese Iselin, on Feb. 15. This is the first entertainment of the season at the Adrian Iselins. Last year they were abroad in the Engadine.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt are in Ottawa. They are expected in New York early next week. They will go to Newport for a short visit to Mrs. French, and if present plans are followed they will sail early in February.

***

The Oceanic brought a number of very well-known people, including Mrs. Arthur Paget. Among her passengers were Goold Hoyt, Frank Dugdale and Lady Eva Dugdale, Sir William and Lady Orr Ewing, Sydney Paget, Sir Weetman D. Pearson and Lady Pearson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Ismay, Gerald Lowther of the English Embassy at Washington, the Marquis Don Carlos Eizaguerre, and William Carson Kane. Mr. and Mrs. F. Marion Crawford were on board the Hohenzollern.

***

To-morrow will be quite a busy day. Mr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Ismay, who arrived here on the Oceanic yesterday, will be given a dinner by Mr. and Mrs. George R. Schieffelin. Mrs. Ismay is to remain here about two months. Mrs. Cadwalader Jones of 21 East Eleventh Street will have a tea for Mrs. F. Marion Crawford, and the St. Nicholas Club a reception. There will be a large reception, also, in honor of Mrs. F. D. Millet and Miss Millet, the wife and daughter of F. D. Millet, which will be given at the new residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Poor, Lexington Avenue and Gramercy Park.

The first ride this season of the Knickerbocker Riding Club took place last evening at Durland's. This is the eleventh season of the club. The Rev. Mr. Braddin Hamilton is President, and Mr. Cortlandt S. Van Rensselaer the Vice President. Mr. Irving McKesson is Secretary and Mr. Harold Matthews is Treasurer. Among the members who were present last evening were the Misses de Peyster, Miss Edith Livingston Mason, Miss Pansy Roosevelt, Miss Lulu Dudley, Miss Louise Peck, Mr. C. Waterbury Clark, Mr. Walter H. Powers, Mr. E. Ormonde Powers, Mr. Harry Center, and Mr. Schuyler Schieffelin.

John Bigelow and his daughter, Miss Grace Bigelow, were the host and hostess at the meeting last night of the Thursday Evening Club, which took place at their residence on Gramercy Park. William Barclay Parsons gave an unusually interesting description of the underground railway system, and this was illustrated with stereopticon views. Later a supper was served. The invitations to this affair were confined almost exclusively to the members of the club, whose names are well known and have been published a number of times in this column.

***

Luncheons were given yesterday by Mrs. Ogden Goelet and Mrs. Albert V. de Goicouria. Mrs. Frederick J. de Peyster gave the third of her January "at homes," at which she was assisted in receiving by the Misses de Peyster, and Mrs. Charles A. Post of Washington Square gave a dinner, from which she and her guests went to the Assembly.

***

Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, who gave a dinner on Wednesday night, will give another and larger one to-night, which is to be followed by a vaudeville entertainment. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Olyphant will give a theatre party for their daughter, Miss Amy Gordon Olyphant, to be followed by a supper and dancing in the annex of the Metropolitan Club. Mrs. Charles M. Lea of 18 West Tenth Street will give this afternoon the second of two coming-out receptions for her daughter, Miss Marjorie Lea. Mrs. Francis Dana Winslow will give the second of two "at homes" Mrs. W. Storrs Wells and Miss Wells, Mrs. Maitland Armstrong and Miss Armstrong, and Mrs. William Beekman and the Misses Beekman will also all receive during the afternoon, and in the evening Mrs. Frederick J. de Peyster will give a dinner. Mme. Nordica will also entertain in the afternoon, when she will give a tea at Sherry's. Mrs. J. West Roosevelt is to give a tea for Mrs. F. Marion Crawford, and there will be at Sherry's in the evening a meeting of Mrs. Church's dancing class.

Mrs. Arthur Paget, who arrived from Europe yesterday on the Oceanic, was given a tea at late afternoon in the palm garden of the Waldorf by Frederick Townsend Martin, brother of Bradley Martin. The tables at the west end of the palm garden were reserved, and were decorated with large wreaths of pink carnations. Mrs. Paget was gowned in a princesse robe of black panne velvet, with white chiffon around her neck, relieved by a band of pale blue panne velvet close to the throat, the chiffon falling in rather short bowed loops. She wore a large hat of black velvet, jetted, and with black ostrich plumes laid on the brim at the front and sides. This was worn well forward, and shaded her face. There was just a glint of a diamond or two to fasten the chiffon, and the only other jewels worn were large pearls in her ears. She looked extremely well and very youthful. Among those who came to greet her were Mrs. W. Storrs Wells, in a beautiful costume, ribbed gray velvet and hat to match, trimmed with fur; Mrs. William D. Sloane, Mrs. Townsend, Mrs. James A. Burden, Jr., Mrs. Potter Palmer, whose gown was dark purple velvet, the bodice picked out in black; her small toque was of dull cloth of gold, with touches of velvet to match the costume; Mrs. Lucius K. Wilmerding, Lady Cunard, Mrs. Francis H. Legget, Mrs. James Speyer, in blue cloth, trimmed with chinchilla; Miss Josephine Johnson, Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer, Miss Annie Leary, in black velvet and black satin, with bodice of white, and a black and white bonnet; Mrs. Davies, the Misses Davies, Mme. Nordica, and Mrs. Joseph Stickney, whose charming gown was of bluish gray velvet, cut en princesse. Mrs. Paget intends remaining at the Waldorf-Astoria while in New York.

The second Assembly Ball took place at the Astoria last evening. The second Assembly is always deemed by many to be more enjoyable than the first. It is not so crowded, and the débutantes, having made there first appearance, are not quite so much in the minds of anxious mammas. The Assembly last evening was a very charming ball. It was not too uncomfortably packed, so that dancing became a pleasure. The cotillion at all Assemblies is more or less perfunctory. It did not begin until very late last evening, or rather this morning, and as there was only one favor figure, after supper had been served at small tables in the Astor Gallery, the favors for which were Japanese fans and boutonnières, it was not long before it was danced. The ball itself, after the whim of the hour, was very late, and the hour before midnight was passed in the reception and general dancing. From the entrance on Thirty-third Street up the stairway, and through the corridors, down to the foyer, the guests passed through an arched way of towering palms and ferns. The foyer, where Mrs. Baylies, Mrs. Sloane, Mrs. Cutting, and Mrs. Cryder received, was banked with Boston ferns, palms, and immense bunches of Marguerites, and the group of statuary in the centre was half buried in the same decorations; here and there vases of American Beauty roses were placed. The railing about the opening at the top of the foyer was draped with Southern clematis, and a canopy of this vine filled the open space and was starred by Small with yellow daffodils, jonquils, and red tulips. The ballroom itself had its boxes draped with green vines, and many of them were filled with palms. Already established, Mrs. Ismay is to remain here about two months. Mrs. Cadwalader Jones of 21 East Eleventh Street will have a tea for Mrs. F. Marion Crawford, and the St. Nicholas Club a reception. There will be a large reception, also, in honor of Mrs. F. D. N.Y.A.C. HOCKEY TEAM WON

EXTRA HALF WAS NECESSARY

Score Stood at One Goal All at the End of Second Half — Rare Hockey Displayed.

Hockey was played with rare agility and amid intense enthusiasm last night in the Clermont Avenue Skating Rink, Brooklyn. The hockey teams of the New York Athletic Club and the Crescent Athletic Club met in the championship series of the Hockey League, and, after a desperately fought game, the New Yorks won by the close margin of 2 goals to 1.

The Crescents won the match last year, and inter-borough rivalry naturally ran high when the opponents faced each other for this season's match. Considerable credit is due to Capt. Wall of the Crescent team for his plucky part in the game, for his left foot had not healed from the cut it sustained in a recent game, and the wound was still swathed in bandages. For a maimed Captain, he put up a strong game, and he never failed to encourage his men to maintain dashing play.

Hornfeck, the crack New York Athletic Club man, and Kennedy, for the Crescents, had the honor of beginning the tussle. As they darted forward for the puck the New Yorker was the speedier, and in a twinkling the implement was skimming down the ice toward his forward line. Then ensued the usual mêlée for possession, and the scene presented an animated mass of flying skates and swiftly moving sticks. The friends of the opposing factions, who literally crowded the rink to its utmost capacity of standing room, cheered lustily, and the enthusiasm, beginning early, continued with uninterrupted ardor to the end.

For over five minutes the fight went on. Howard, the New York Captain, and who was recently reinstated in good hockey standing, kept his men working like beavers, while Kennedy, Dobby, and Shiebler were constantly alert to gain every advantage for the Crescents. Wonham, one of the Mercury-foot forwards, finally got the rubber all to himself and quickly passed it to Howard, and cleverly assisted by O'Donnell, he made the first count, and the New York Athletic contingent went wild with joy.

The remainder of the twenty-minute half resulted in no more scoring, but the playing was fast on both sides.

When the second half began it was at once apparent that the contest would be no easier than before. Kennedy was determined to win back the goal for the Crescents, and he beat Hornfeck in a lively rush for the puck. Wall took it, but the usual mix-up occurred again. Finally there was free play, and the forwards kept the rubber flying up and down the ice for nearly ten minutes. Wonham, Hornfeck, Howard, Shiebler, Kennedy, and Dobby doing the major part of the work. The goal defenders, O'Donnell and Hallock, were well-nigh perfect in their play and stopped the ball at many a critical point.

Shiebler got a chance as the puck bounded from one side of the rink directly in front of the goal line, and he shot it through in a twinkling. This tied the game.

Then followed the extra play for the decision. It took eight minutes of the liveliest sort of play, but little Hornfeck, who never showed to better advantage, at last made the deciding goal and the New York crowd cheered itself hoarse. It was the first time the Crescents have been defeated in two years. Line-up:

Hallock	Goal	O'Donnell
Randall	Point	Hunt
Drakeley	Cover point	Fenwick
Dobby	Forward	Howard
Wall	Forward	Frey
Kennedy	Forward	Hornfeck
Shiebler	Forward	Wonham

Referee—Charles MacKenzie, Skating Club of Brooklyn.

Goal umpires—C. H. Ayres, St. Nicholas Skating Club, for the New York Athletic Club, and H. L. Jennison, Skating Club of Brooklyn, for the Crescent Athletic Club. Timekeeper—J. Allen Smith, Clermont Hockey Club.

In the match play this afternoon Mulliken defeated Dutton 4 and 3. Maddock defeated Black 1 up on 19 holes. Carpenter defeated Emmet 1 up. Cory defeated Smith 5 and 4. Consolation—Johnson defeated Farlintosh 6 and 4. Pendleton defeated Jefferson 4 and 3. Barnard defeated Farrelly 2 up. Livingston defeated Ramsey 2 up. For the lobster cup Titus defeated Moore 3 and 2. Salter won by default, and Boice drew the bye.

Jennings to Stay at Cornell.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 24.—Hugh Jennings, who came here from the Brooklyn National League Baseball Club for the purpose of taking a collegiate course and incidentally coaching the Cornell baseball team, took occasion to-day to publicly stamp all rumors to the effect that he was going back into professional baseball as a manager as false. He emphatically said: "I have no intention of managing a team in any league."

CATS WIN BLUE RIBBONS.

Gen. Collis's Coco Beats Lord Bobs at the Poultry Show—The Havemeyers' Fine Pigeons.

Cats, rabbits, and guinea pigs received the blue-ribbon badge of high-class merit yesterday at the poultry show in the Madison Square Garden, as well as several hundred additional birds and other members of the feathered tribe. The attendance was much larger than on the opening day, and all the birds looked in the prime of condition.

The judging of cats attracted considerable attention, and, after it was all over, there was scarcely a cage that did not have either a blue, red, or yellow ribbon fastened upon it. One of the fattest and handsomest looking cats is a long-haired blue cat, owned by Gen. Charles H. T. Collis, and is known by the name of "Coco." It is a great rival of another blue cat, known as "Lord Bobs," owned by J. Robins of this city. Only a critical judge could detect their superior merits, and when "Coco" received the blue ribbon, he maintained the picture of comfort and aristocratic bearing for the remainder of the day.

Miss L. C. Moeran of this city is the largest cat exhibitor, having eighteen different ones, and she captured five first prizes. Miss Mary B. Thurston of Newport won the same number of firsts with her six long-haired cats. Miss M. Hays and H. T. Draper of this city each won two awards.

The pigeons this year are unusually fine. Every variety is shown, and some rare colored birds are among them. In the fantails, the Havemeyer brothers fairly carried every thing before them in the prize winning line. These pigeons are raised on the Havemeyer farm at Mahwah, N. J., and their magnificent tails stand out straight and graceful like an enormous fan. In some cases the tails have fallen flat over the back, and, while this is not the proper way for a first prize, the appearance is very odd, as it gives the idea of a huge umbrella covering the pigeon, the ends extending some times an inch beyond the head. The Havemeyers have over fifty of these graceful and proud-looking fantails in their collection, the chief colors being white, buff, black, and blue.

Horace Havemeyer made one of the prize purchases of the day when he secured five white Wyandottes, first prize winners, from James Cheston, Jr., of Philadelphia. The price was not stated, but not long ago the former owner refused $400 for them.

August D. Arnold and the Elmwood Rabbitry secured most of the prizes for hares. H. J. Rosenburg of Eastport, N. Y., took the honors for wild and bronze turkeys. William A. Pease of Middletown, Conn., led the field with his dark Brahmas and white Cochins. In the fancy duck classes, A. J. Hallock of Speonk, L. I., won a prize for his Pekin duck, and a Brazil duck, owned by Philip Sampter of Ridgewood, N. J., took a blue ribbon.

One of the dead features of the show that created considerable amusement was a large black bear labeled, "Teddy's latest." It was shot a few days ago in Minnesota, and weighs 300 pounds. The incubators began yesterday to hatch out several hundred fluffy little chicks, and to-day they will be advanced enough to go into the brooders and take their first regular baby food. They are left in the incubators without feeding for about twenty-four hours.

SHOOTING ON ARMORY RANGES.

Company B of the Seventh Regiment Loses Clark Trophy Contest.

The teams of Company B of the Seventh Regiment, which shot for the Kemp and Clark Trophies on the armory ranges last night, failed to repeat their double victory of last year, and consequently will lose one of the prizes to Company C, and perhaps both. For the Clark Trophy Company B scored only 1,594 to Company C's 2,081, and for the Kemp Trophy tied at 1,084, which gives them another chance next week. The scores follow:

UNION SETTLEMENT A. C. GAMES.

Tug of War Contests the Feature of the Sports.

Tug-of-war competitions had the place of honor in the competitions of the Union Settlement Athletic Club in the club's gymnasium, 207 East One Hundred and First Street, last night, the club's regular tug-of-war team, which claims the championship of New York, taking the opportunity to try thoroughly its strength in preparation for the challenge contest with the team of the Danish Athletic Club, claimant to the world's championship, at the open games of Company K of the Eighth Regiment March 9. In one contest the members of the regular team were divided between two teams of five—married men against single men—the bachelors winning after a very even struggle. In another trial the club's regular four hauled the cable out of the hands of five of the best and strongest men the club could produce, the five finding themselves beaten and giving up half a minute before the time for the trial expired. A novelty was introduced in the obstacle race, in the shape of a mattress, heavily weighted with dumbbells, under which the competitors had to crawl. By agreement, no decisions were rendered in the boxing bouts, which were last on the programme. The summary follows:

Obstacle Race—Won by James T. Wynn, B. Buckenburg second, James J. Hopkins third. Eleven starters.

Tug-of-War—Married men against bachelors.—Married men: J. Bradshaw, anchor; C. Burney, J. L. Cluney, T. Hopkins, and James J. Hopkins; bachelors: E. Payne, anchor; A. Casten, P. Shea, F. Falke, and E. Johnson. First trial tie, neither side gaining half an inch. Second trial won by bachelors by two inches. Final trial won by bachelors by five inches. Heats of three minutes each.

Tug-of-War, Handicap—Union Settlement A. C. four against five picked men. U. S. A. C. team: E. Payne, anchor; J. Bradshaw, E. Johnson, and C. Burney. Picked team: A. Benford, anchor; P. Shea, P. McGowan, John Hopkins, and James J. Hopkins. Won in one trial by U. S. A. C. team, with a gain of fifteen inches, in 4½ minutes.

Boxing, at 85 Pounds.—Ed Oates and Kid O'Connor, three rounds, no decision; at 90 pounds, Kid Timmons and Kid Barnes, three rounds, no decision.

KEENEY BEATS POGGENBURG.

He Now Ties with Townsend for Amateur Billiard Players' Championship.

Arthur Townsend, who has been showing up in brilliant style in the billiard championship tournament for the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players, which has been in progress for nearly two weeks at the Hanover Club, Brooklyn, continued his good work last night by defeating J. Bryan Stark, 300 points to 137, at fourteen-inch balk line. That was the first game of the evening, and the second was between Ferdinand Poggenburg and Frank A. Keeney. The latter won in a forty-four-inning game, scoring his 300 points to 225 for Poggenburg.

Townsend is the Hanover Club champion and his game was the last one for him in the series, as well as for Stark. Townsend has only been beaten once, and then by Keeney, in the opening contest. The local champion's friends have always had strong faith in his billiard ability, but scarcely one in a hundred believed he would come out of the tournament with four victories to his credit. Poggenburg and Stark were considered the strong men. The latter won three games and lost two, while Poggenburg has proved a serious disappointment, and his defeat last night finished his part in the struggle with a record of only one victory and four lost.

Keeney and Edward Gardner will meet in the final match to-night. If Keeney wins he will have the championship by a clean score of five victories, as he has not yet been beaten, but if he loses it will be a tie between Keeney and Townsend.

Frank Gardner, the Crescent Athletic Club champion, was the only competitor who did not win a game.

Townsend fairly electrified the gallery last night by the magnificent steadiness of his play. He defeated Stark in a short game of 37 innings, and 10 of those were runs of 10 points and over. His high mark was 33, and he had a 32 and two of 31. Stark got one run of 31, but only had 4 innings in which he scored double figures. He was lamentably off his game, while Townsend seemed to have perfect control over the ivory spheres. He ran out with 31 points, and had the balls in good shape to continue counting.

The scores were:

Arthur Townsend—18 7 0 8 3 0 11 1 0 1 5 1 10 7 7 22 11 13 2 0 0 0 5 3 2 1 13 22 4 0 4 0 0 3 3 31. Total, 300. Average, 8 4-27. High runs, 33 32 31 31 22 18 13 13 11 10

J. Bryan Stark—0 3 0 0 4 0 1 2 4 1 2 7 4 6 3 4 31 19 0 16 0 4 19 0 0 5 2 0 3 4 7 0 0 0 2 0. Total, 137. Average, 3 28-37. High runs, 31, 19, 19, 16.

In the Keeney-Poggenburg game, the former began to lead from the start, and throughout he gave a clear-cut exhibition of well-played billiards, with excellent accuracy of judgment and a nicety of touch that never deserted him. Poggenburg rose once to a brilliant standpoint by a run of 50, but his small runs were surprisingly numerous for a former victor of many important games. The scores were:

Frank A. Keeney—8 10 8 0 13 1 6 1 46 5 22 4 2 2 11 2 0 14 20 11 0 2 22 0 10 1 0 2 2 0 2 2 0 2 0 1 0 15 0 16 2 2 10 23. Total, 300. Average, 6 36-44. High runs, 46, 23, 22, 22, 16, 15, 14.

Ferdinand Poggenburg—10 5 0 4 2 7 0 0 0 8 3 0 1 0 1 19 0 0 0 0 0 0 1 2 11 1 0 28 0 3 0 1 0 1 0 0 16 1 0 16 7 2. Total, 225. Average, 5 10-43. High runs, 50, 28, 19, 16, 16, 10.

Edward McLaughlin was referee.

Knickerbocker A. C. Billiards.

The handicap billiard tournament at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club resulted last night in the peculiar finish of a three-cornered tie for the all-around club handicap honors. The Class X, Y, and Z series came to an end with Dr. F. W. Andress winner in Class X, Joseph Steiner in Class Y, and H. W. Hewitt in Class Z. Handicap allowances figured in the play last night. Steiner beat Andress by 100 points to 98 actual, and Steiner and Hewitt will meet in the final to-night. Previous to that game Hewitt beat Andress by 80 to 119 actual, but Hewitt had 80 handicap, and that gave him the lead.

TROTTERS TO BE MATCHED.

Fred Noble is willing to match Fred Gerken's trotter, The Monk, that has been familiar to patrons of the Speedway, against E. E. Smathers's trotter, Alice Barnes, on the following conditions:

Match to be for $5,000 a side, best three in five, National Trotting Association rules to govern; $1,000 to be deposited as forfeit at time of drawing articles of agreement, the remaining $4,000 a side to be put up day before the race, the race to be trotted over the Cleveland track during the Grand Circuit meeting of 1901, and judged by the regular judges of that meeting, the officials of the association to fix the day and hour of said race on their programme. The judges of the meeting at Cleveland shall be empowered to select a veterinary surgeon to examine both horses on the day preceding the race, and if either horse is found to be lame or otherwise unfit to race the owner shall have the privilege to withdraw said horse, also his $1,000 forfeit money. If one of the horses fails to appear for examination on the day before the race, as above specified, the owner shall forfeit the deposit of $1,000, or, if either owner fails to put up the additional $4,000 after the horses have been decided fit to race, the party failing shall forfeit the $1,000. If on the day appointed for the race either horse fails to start, the owner shall forfeit the entire stake of $5,000. If the track on the day selected for the match is unfit to race on, said match shall go with the regular programme according to the decision of the judges.

Mr. Noble has notified E. E. Smathers and his representative, George Spear, that he would like to make the match as above specified, and has already deposited his $1,000 forfeit with George Putney, and will meet E. E. Smathers, or his representative, at the Rossmore Hotel Monday evening, Jan. 28, at 8 P. M., to consummate said match.

Sydney Paget Back from England.

Sydney Paget, formerly manager of the stable of racehorses owned and campaigned by William C. Whitney in Mr. Paget's name, was among the passengers who arrived yesterday on the White Star Line steamship Oceanic from Liverpool. Mr. Paget was Mr. Whitney's adviser and representative when the American millionaire first engaged in racing three years ago. When war was declared between Great Britain and the South African republics Mr. Paget immediately gave up his connection with the Whitney stable and returned to England to volunteer for service with the English forces in South Africa. Mr. Whitney then for the first time running his horses in his own name, retaining the Paget colors. While associated with Mr. Whitney's racing establishment Mr. Paget rode in many races for amateur riders and earned a prominent place among the gentleman jockeys by victories achieved chiefly on Sir Vassar and Buela. Mr. Paget said that he expected to remain in the United States until some time in the Summer.

CARRIAGE AND HARNESS SHOW.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—One of the most important trade meetings and expositions ever held in the Middle West will be held in Chicago next week, the occasion being the first annual convention and exposition of the National Carriage and Harness Dealers' Association. It will commence Monday morning and continue each day until Saturday night.

For eleven years this association has been holding its meetings twice a year in New York, one in the Spring and one in the Fall, the latter being accompanied by an exposition comprising a display of all the latest designs in vehicles, material, and appointments. With each succeeding year the importance of these meetings has increased, and an urgent demand for a more central point has brought about the movement to hold a yearly meeting in Chicago, at which time the exposition will be given as at the October meeting in New York.

The expositions, which will be arranged in the Coliseum, will be thrown open to the public on next Tuesday and Wednesday.

TO THE FIRST MORTGAGE BONDHOLDERS OF THE Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company.
The interest on the first mortgage bonds of the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company, which, by agreement of October 12th, 1895, between a Committee of the Bondholders and the Union Pacific, Denver and Gulf Railway Company and its Receiver, was reduced for a time to four per cent., will, after December 1, 1900, accrue and be payable at the original rate of six per cent.
The control of the Company through stock ownership is in the Colorado and Southern Railway Company, and it appears from published reports that the present earnings of the property are not sufficient to pay the full interest on the bonds. Under these circumstances it becomes essential that the bondholders unite in securing all the consideration to which they are entitled, and, if need be, enforcing their rights under the mortgages and otherwise protecting their interests.
The undersigned have been requested by the principal bondholders to act as a bondholders' committee, and in order to confer upon the committee necessary authority, the bondholders are respectfully urged to deposit their bonds at once with the United States Trust Company under a bondholders' agreement lodged with it.
Engraved certificates of deposit will be issued by the Trust Company, and application will be made to the New York Stock Exchange to list the same.
Copies of the agreement can be obtained either from the Trust Company or from the Committee.

Meetings and Elections.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO.
Public notice is hereby given that a special meeting of the stockholders of the Illinois Central Railroad Company will be held at the Company's Office in Chicago, Illinois, on Saturday, January 26, 1901, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of acting on these five propositions and transacting such other business as may, in connection therewith, come before the meeting.
FIRST—That in order to provide necessary moneys for the purchase of additional cars and locomotive engines needed for the accommodation of the growing traffic on the Company's lines of railway; the construction of additional sidings, tracks, side tracks, and station and terminal facilities; the reduction of grades; the elimination of grade crossings at different places along said railway lines, and other improvements of a permanent character, some of which purchases, additions and improvements have already been undertaken, and for other corporate purposes, the capital stock of the Illinois Central Railroad Company be increased by an issue of 60,000 new shares of $100 each, from 600,000 shares to 960,000 shares of $100 each, thus making the whole capital stock of the Company $96,000,000.
SECOND—That each shareholder shall have the privilege of subscribing at par on or before March 4, 1901, for one share of such new stock, for every ten shares of stock registered in his name on the transfer books of the Company at the close of business on December 26, 1900, and for fractions of shares in like proportion—payment for the new stock to be made in full at the Company's office in the City of New York, on or before Monday, March 4, 1901.
THIRD—That stockholders entitled to subscribe for fractions of shares shall, upon payment therefor, receive scrip convertible into full-paid stock when presented in sums of $100 or multiples thereof, but such scrip shall not draw dividends.
FOURTH—That the shares, or fractions of shares, of the new issue, if any, not subscribed and paid for on or before March 4, 1901, may be disposed of by the Board of Directors at such price, or prices, not less than par, as may be approved by them.
FIFTH—That the new shares shall be entitled to participate in all dividends which may be declared payable after March 4, 1901.
For the purposes of this meeting, the stock transfer books will be closed at 3 P. M. on Thursday, December 20, 1900, and remain closed until the morning of Monday, January 7, 1901.
By order of the Board of Directors.

MRS. HANCOX'S DEBTS.

She Asks to be Declared a Bankrupt, and Tells of Her Obligations.

The hearing of the petition of Mrs. Catharine Hancox, who asks to be declared a bankrupt, was begun before Referee George C. Holt, at his office, 24 Pine Street, yesterday afternoon. According to the schedule which was submitted to the referee, Mrs. Hancox's liabilities have been fixed at $10,314.01. The largest creditor is Henry T. Cutter of 781 Lexington Avenue, who has a judgment for $5,792.75, which represents money loaned to Mrs. Hancox.
At a meeting of the creditors Mr. Cutter was appointed trustee for the other creditors.
Mrs. Hancox during her examination stated that she was a beneficiary under the will of her father, William Wall, to an income of about $4,000 a year. She occupies apartments at the Hotel Beresford, Eighty-first Street and Central Park West, for which she pays $1,300 per annum. Mrs. Hancox has two daughters, who, she said, spent, approximately, $300 a year for clothes.
Attorney Michael Jacobs, who appeared for the creditors and trustees, elicited the information from Mrs. Hancox that she and her daughters always went to the country in Summer, but, added the petitioner: "inexpensively, of course." Pressed to explain what she considered inexpensively, Mrs. Hancox said that her and her daughters' expenses, all told, amounted to about $50 per week. She admitted that the rent of her city apartments went on meanwhile.
When Mr. Jacobs reached an item for carriage hire, Mrs. Hancox said that she regarded carriages as a necessity, as the carriage rides they took were for the benefit of their health.

Birkbeck Loan Company's Trustees.
At the annual meeting of the Birkbeck Investment Savings and Loan Company of America, held yesterday, the following Trustees were elected: Charles S. Fairchild, Abram S. Hewitt, Isidor Straus, William L. Brown, Gustav H. Schwab, A. Augustus Healy, A. Abraham, William G. Park, Orlando H. Parker, Robbins B. Smith, William H. Yale, and Samuel E. Kilner.

Pressed Steel Car Co.'s New President.
Charles T. Schoen, who was one of the founders of the Pressed Steel Car Company, resigned as President of the company yesterday, and his place was filled by F. N. Hoffstat of Pittsburg. Mr. Schoen remains with the company, however, as Chairman of the Board of Directors.

MARKET MOVEMENT.

Yesterday was the dullest day the Stock Exchange has had for several months. For the first time since election transactions fell much below the million mark, barely 750,000 shares being traded in all day. It was rather a novelty in its way when the tape actually stood still, sometimes failing for several minutes to record a single transaction. The dullness, nevertheless, was a relief to many of the brokers on the floor, who in past weeks have been so rushed with business that they had little rest—business that so burdened the tape that in the press many transactions were forced to go unrecorded. The dullness resulted in a general sagging of prices, though in few issues was there actual weakness.

The selling of St. Paul was attributed to the non-appearance of the expected and promised announcement from Chicago telling of the completion of the Northern Pacific-Great Northern deal.

The manipulation in the steel stocks came to a halt and with the halt came declining prices. Buying on the decline by interests altogether free from the stigma of stock jobbing was regarded on the Street as not without significance.

The rumormonger was again busy, principally engaging himself with the Erie stocks, on the first preferred stock of which, it was declared, a semi-annual dividend of 2 per cent. is to be declared "next month." It was from the same sources that some time ago came the assurance that a meeting of the Erie Directors would be held about the 15th of January, and that the dividend would then be declared. The meeting was never held, and the dividend was never declared.
On the other hand, it is practically officially admitted that at the next meeting of the Directors of Reading the first preferred dividend will be increased to a 4 per cent. rate. Any such assurance is altogether lacking in respect to Erie, and there seems to be an impression that even some of the unissued Erie first preferred stock was sold by insiders at the recent high figures, the present stock being borrowed for delivery.

The "Western contingent," which on Wednesday was declaring that the steel stocks were in for a big rise, going even so far, after the market's close, as to bid a half point or more above the closing figures for certain stocks, were little in evidence as buyers yesterday to help on the boom. Instead, there was quiet selling from the opening from sources close to these interests. Good independent buying, however, appeared.
In respect to Press Steel Car the opinion in the Street was that the omission of the word "quarterly" in the declaration of the common stock dividend was intentional, particularly as the preferred stock dividend was explicitly set out as quarterly. On this theory and the belief that no other dividend will be declared this year there was selling of the stock all day.

The selling of St. Paul was regarded as primarily due to the fact that the announcement promised from Chicago in respect to the Northern Pacific-Great Northern deal did not materialize. As a matter of fact, in well-informed quarters no such announcement at this time was expected.

The local railway shares were for the greater part of the day weak. Brooklyn Rapid Transit especially so. Bear traders made much of the bill introduced in Albany by State Senator Wagner seeking to prevent the company from charging more than a five-cent fare in any part of Long Island. There was some selling, also, on the belief that there may be disappointment at to-day's meeting, some statements being that expected and promised changes in the board will not be forthcoming.

The heaviness of Manhattan and Metropolitan was not explained by any news developments.

According to the Street gossip on Wednesday, a leading operator was in charge of the Southern Pacific movement, and hence the rise to above 44. Yesterday when the security dropped more than a point the goslipers were at a loss to explain who the responsible party was, though the decline itself was declared to be "only a healthy reaction."

There was more selling of Sugar Trust stock by purchasers who had been induced to buy on Tuesday on the strength of "tips" that the stock was in for a substantial rise. Yesterday the "rise" was represented by a further drop of 2 points.

The report of the American District Telegraph Company for the year ended Dec. 31, made public yesterday, shows net earnings of $80,400, as compared with $104,180 a year ago. The company has 1,537 miles of wire miles. At a meeting held during the day the retiring Board of Directors and officers were re-elected.

Both in Burlington and in Rock Island the buying was pronounced in the Street to be much better than the selling, though no endeavor was made in either case to bid up prices.

People's Gas was sold by Chicago houses, the advices from there being to the effect that many bills against the company in one form or another were before the City Council, or were contemplated to be introduced in the State Legislature.

London was not much of a factor in this market during the day, arbitrage houses having relatively few orders, buying on balance. It is insisted that for some time there have been large direct orders from London, almost all on the selling side.

Pool selling was held responsible for the decline in the Atchisons, Union Pacific, and Missouri Pacific. The "corner" in this last-named stock seems entirely to have disappeared.

Commission houses reported yesterday the quietest day in weeks. Commission business was purely nominal.

BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT.

B. W. Folger, Jr., Appointed Superintendent of the Elevated System.

It is officially announced that B. W. Folger, Jr., of Kingston, Ontario, has been appointed Superintendent of the elevated system of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, and will assume his duties on Feb. 1. The Brooklyn officials have for some time been looking for a suitable man for the place, and now believe that they have found him.
For so responsible a position Mr. Folger is a very young man, having just passed his twenty-sixth year. He is a son of Henry Folger, President of the St. Lawrence River and Thousand Island Steamboat Company, and is himself a large stockholder in that company, as well as in the Kingston Street Railway.
Mr. Folger is a younger brother of Harry Folger, who was private secretary of the late Gov. Flower.

WALL STREET TOPICS.

No change in the Bank of England's rate of discount.

Statement, on what is said to be good authority, that the Directors of the International Silver Company will hold a meeting March 12 next, at which date dividends on the preferred stock will be resumed.

Chicago Telephone Company to issue $1,000,000 new stock on April 8 at par to shareholders of record March 27.

According to Boston dispatches the Directors of the Père Marquette will at their meeting on Jan. 29 declare a dividend of 4 per cent. on the preferred stock, payable out of the earnings for the year ended Dec. 31.

Incorporation in New Hampshire of the Manchester Traction, Light and Power Company, with a capital of $1,500,000.

Purchase by the United States Tube Company, incorporated under the laws of West Virginia, of eleven acres of land in the Kensington district of Buffalo, on which it will build a big steel tube plant.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—Money was in quiet demand to-day. New York's exports of gold are expected to benefit London only indirectly.
The tone of the Stock Exchange was good, but business was inactive. The general impression is that little will be done for the next week or so. Recent events prevent the public from coming in. Consols and first-class securities hardened. Argentines and Brazilians were in demand. Chinese were higher.
Americans opened good and above parity, remained steady a while and closed easier. Grand Trunks improved on the traffic returns. Kafirs were better.
On the street Americans were weak. There were considerable declines on New York selling orders, especially in St. Paul.
Consols for money, 96⅝; consols for the account, 96 11-16; Atchison, 46⅝; Canadian, 91½; St. Paul, 154⅞; Illinois Central, 133⅝; Louisville, 90⅝; Union Pacific preferred, 85½; New York Central, 145⅞; Erie, 29⅜; Pennsylvania, 74½; Reading, 46⅝; Erie first preferred, 63¾; Northern Pacific preferred, 88½; Grand Trunk, 7; Anaconda, 8⅜; Rand Mines, 37⅝.
Money, 2½@3 per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short bills 3⅝@4 per cent., and for three months' bills 4@4 1-16 per cent.
Spanish 4s, 71⅝.
Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Buenos Ayres, 132; Madrid, 36.65; Lisbon, 43; Rome, 3.85.
Bar silver closed steadier at 28 9-16d per ounce.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—On the Bourse to-day prices opened firm, but later were easier on disappointment that the Bank rate in London was not reduced, and owing to the Shanghai message indicating a difference between the Russian and British Admirals, which caused an unfavorable impression. At the close business was dull all around.
Three per cent. rentes, 101f 97½c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 12½c for checks.
Spanish 4s closed at 71.92½.
The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows the following changes: Notes in circulation decreased 75,050,000f, Treasury accounts current increased 33,725,000f, gold in hand increased 7,400,000f, bills discounted decreased 82,975,000f, silver on hand increased 4,450,000f.

BERLIN, Jan. 24.—Prices opened weaker on the Boerse to-day, owing to the unsatisfactory December returns of the Harpener and Hibernia Companies. Industrials were maintained. Home funds were in good demand. Americans were steady. Canadian Pacifics fluctuated.
Exchange on London, 20 marks 46½ pfenings for checks. Discount rates: Short bills, 2½ per cent.; three months' bills, 3 3-8 per cent.

BANK OF ENGLAND'S STATEMENT.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—The weekly statement of the Bank of England shows the following changes: Total reserve increased £1,663,000; circulation decreased £535,000; bullion increased £1,127,000; other securities decreased £2,411,000; other deposits decreased £4,195,000; public deposits increased £1,473,000; notes reserve increased £1,616,000; Government securities decreased £1,921,000.

New Telephone Company's Plans Secret

Stayton & Campbell of 30 Broad Street, who are attorneys for as well as stockholders in the Atlantic Telephone Company, which was incorporated in Albany on Wednesday, with a capital of $5,000,000, refused yesterday to make known any details concerning the company's plans. "We have been asked," they said, "by the people behind the company not to say anything about its plans, and until we are released from that injunction we must remain quiet." The incorporators named in the papers, which include Mr. Stayton and Mr. Campbell, each own but one share of stock, so that the persons really at interest are kept in the background.

THE TUNNEL TO BROOKLYN

Work Upon It Likely to be Started Within a Year.

Rapid Transit Board Provides for Increased Express Service Beyond 103d Street Station.

By the action of the Rapid Transit Board yesterday resolutions were readopted providing for the underground extension to Brooklyn. Plans are to be forwarded at once to the Municipal Assembly and to the Park Board for approval, and if there are no unusual delays on the part of the city authorities, actual construction on the extension is likely to begin not later than next January, and possibly before.

Several weeks ago Chief Engineer Parsons started in to make some slight alterations as seemed best from an engineering point of view. The only change in the plans as adopted yesterday is that the tracks will proceed down State Street instead of down Whitehall, as originally contemplated, and extend under East River at a point in South Street. In Manhattan the route lies down Park Row from the Post Office; thence down Broadway. At Exchange Place the tracks will begin to drop and pass under the Bowling Green and Battery Park loop, continuing to the river. The change simply involves the tearing up of one street instead of two, and less of a curve at the lower end of the island. The cost of construction will be about the same.

The Battery Park loop is for Manhattan trains only. The Brooklyn route is the same as originally planned, striking in at Jerolomon Street, going to the City Hall, out Fulton Street and Flatbush Avenue, with a terminus at Flatbush station.

The board also provided for an increased express service beyond One Hundred and Third Street by extra tracks at the stations at One Hundred and Third, One Hundred and Sixteenth, and One Hundred and Forty-fifth Streets and across the viaduct from One Hundred and Twenty-third to One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street. The plans formerly proposed an express service to begin and end at One Hundred and Third Street, but with the new trackage such a service to One Hundred and Fifty-seventh Street is practically made possible.

The tracks authorized are simply turnouts at the stations named, allowing express trains to pass the locals without stopping. The extra cost will be about $100,000, and will be paid to Contractor John B. McDonald under the head of "extra work," legally allowed.

The board also approved the fifth requisition from the contractor for work and materials furnished to the amount of $528,000, making the total amount to date paid to Mr. McDonald $1,685,000.

So far as could be ascertained yesterday, nothing was done by the Commissioners at their meeting in reference to the "hold-up" on the part of the Municipal Council or the proposed change of route between Fort George and Two Hundred and Fifteenth Street.

Recent action has made it possible for the Degnon-McLean Company to start on the City Hall loop of their section. The papers providing for sureties on the contract are ready for signature, and it is expected that the sub-contracting firm will soon begin the trench through the park and Mail Street.

SICK MAN LOWERED BY ROPES.

Sebastian Dieser Could Not Be Taken to Street by Ordinary Means.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 24.—Sebastian Dieser, a saloonkeeper, weighing over 200 pounds, while going up to his bed last night slipped and fell backward. A doctor was called, who found Dieser was badly hurt, and it was decided to remove him to the General Hospital. When the attendants went to carry the injured man down they found they could not take him down the stairs, and the only way it could be done was to lower him from the window.

The ambulance men went to a firehouse in the neighborhood and secured ropes. These were fastened to the stretcher and the man was lowered.

CONSUMPTION AT SING SING.

Dr. Lewis Says Prison Is an Unfit Place for Human Habitation.

SING SING, N. Y., Jan. 24.—A hundred and fifty cases of consumption in the prison, added to between thirty and forty cases of typhoid fever, together with such bad plumbing and sewerage that every time the tide rises in the Hudson River noxious gases are backed up into the prison buildings, are what caused Dr. Daniel Lewis, President of the State Board of Health, to condemn that institution as an unfit place in which to pen up human creatures who have not the death penalty already passed upon them.

There have been hundreds of cases of consumption in the prison, but they are shipped away as rapidly as possible to Clinton and Auburn prisons. A cell that has been for some time inhabited by a consumptive gets contaminated with the germs of the disease and fresh criminals who come and happen to get one of these cells virtually receive the death penalty, for they are sure to become victims of consumption.

DOG CAUSES A $15,000 FIRE.

Tips Over a Lamp in the Lackawanna Railway Station.

Special to The New York Times.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Jan. 24.—A $15,000 fire was caused by a harmless appearing little dog in the express office of the Erie Station at Lackawaxen, Penn., early this morning. The animal was being transported over the Erie, and during the night was placed in the Lackawaxen Station.

While the night station agent was temporarily absent the dog escaped from his cage and knocked over a lamp that was resting on the table. The explosion that followed set fire to the building, and, despite the speedy arrival of a large number of the residents of Lackawaxen, the building was rapidly consumed. After the fire was extinguished the remains of the dog were found burned to a crisp.

DEAN DIVORCE CASE ENDED.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Jan. 24.—Mrs. Adele Oakley Dean has won her suit for divorce against her husband, Arthur Dean, a member of the banking firm of John A. Dean & Co., of Exchange Place, New York, so far as the recommendation of the Master in Chancery goes.

Mrs. Dean has two children, one sixteen years old and the other twelve. She is the daughter of F. Loomis Stott, a manufacturer of Stottville, N. Y., and has a large private fortune. The Deans were married in Stottsville Oct. 17, 1882. In 1897 there was a separation. Suit for divorce on statutory grounds was started the next year by Mrs. Dean, and testimony in the case has just been concluded before Special Master in Chancery Washington B. Williams, in Jersey City.

Major Smith Again Loses in Court.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—The Appellate Division, Third Department, to-day denied a motion of Major Clinton H. Smith, late of the Seventy-first Regiment of New York City, that he be permitted to take certain questions before the Court of Appeals in connection with his removal from the Majorship in that regiment. His conduct as an officer of the regiment at the battle of Santiago de Cuba was investigated by a board of inquiry appointed by Gov. Roosevelt. Major Smith was removed by the Governor. His fight in the courts was for a review of the action, but they decided they had no jurisdiction.

New Jersey Masons Elect Officers.

THE MONTREAL FIRE.

Thirty Buildings Destroyed—Insurance Companies Involved.

MONTREAL, Jan. 24.—To-day business is practically stagnated in Montreal as a consequence of the disastrous fire which took place in the centre portion of the city, and crowds of thousands of people throng the narrow streets around the burned district, which is a scene of desolation. The burned district is bounded on the north by St. Sacrament, thence south along St. Peter, and westward on Lemoine to Fisk & Co.'s building; on the east by St. Nicholas Street to Commissioners, on the south by Foundling, facing St. Anne's Market Square to St. Peter, thence north to St. Paul.

Altogether about thirty buildings, chiefly wholesale warehouses, occupied by some of the leading firms of Montreal, were destroyed, together with their valuable stocks. Official reports as to losses cannot be obtained owing to the fact that the offices and papers of the Canadian Fire Underwriters have been burned in the Board of Trade. It is now feared that two men have perished.

The latest estimates place the total loss at $2,750,000. The following is a revised list of the heaviest individual losses:

Board of Trade Building, $400,000, fully insured; Silverman, Boulter & Co., wholesale furriers, $125,000; Beardmore & Co., tanners, $80,000, insured for $48,000; H. A. Nelson & Sons, fancy goods, loss $150,000; James Corlstine & Co., furs, loss $450,000, fully insured; Gilmour Bros. & Co., commission agents, $50,000, covered by insurance; C. A. Cholileau & Co., commission merchants, loss $25,000; J. Cohen & Co., wholesale clothiers, $40,000; B. L. Levin & Co., wholesale furs, loss $100,000; H. W. Decourtenay & Co., iron and steel, loss $25,000; Seybold, Son & Co., loss $100,000, fully insured; Cortelyl Silk Company, loss $80,000; M. Saxe & Co., wholesale clothiers, loss $100,000, insurance $60,000.

The insurance companies involved are as follows: Aetna, $66,000; American, $21,000; Atlas, $36,000; Alliance, $55,000; British America, $5,000; Caledonia, $50,000; Commercial Union, $75,000; Connecticut, $7,000; Guardian, $120,000; Hartford, $10,000; Imperial, $50,000; Lancashire, $42,000; Phoenix of Hartford, $10,000; Phoenix of London, $150,000; Scottish of Brooklyn, $51,000; Liverpool and London and Globe, $97,000; London and Lancashire, $45,000; Law, Union and Crown, $3,000; London Assurance, $50,000; Manchester, $61,000; North British and Mercantile, $285,000; Northern, $66,000; Norwich Union, $60,000; North America, $25,000; National of Ireland, $18,000; Quebec, $35,000; Queen, $60,000; Royal, $140,000; Scottish Union, $60,000; Sun, $31,000; Union, $70,000; Western, $75,000; Ottawa, $20,000; total, $2,025,000.

FAITH CURISTS DIDN'T CURE.

So the District Attorney at Binghamton Will Investigate.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Jan. 24.—After investigating the death of Stephen Post, who had been under the care of Christian Scientists, Coroner Smith to-day said the man had died of pneumonia and had been neglected. He will bring the matter to the attention of the District Attorney. Post died yesterday. A physician was called at the last moment, but the man had died before he arrived. The affair is causing a sensation here, as the Christian Scientists implicated are prominent persons.

DISPUTE OVER REWARD.

Man Who Found Capt. Munsey's Skeleton Not Yet Paid.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Jan. 24.—Charles Lawrence of Lindenhurst threatens to sue the Board of Supervisors for the $200 reward offered by District Attorney Smith for the finding of the body of Jesse Munsey, the Babylon man who disappeared about a year ago. District Attorney Smith disputes the claim, upon the ground that Lawrence produced only the skeleton of Capt. Munsey, and not the body. This is the position taken by the District Attorney, according to Supervisor Dally, who had communicated with him about the matter.

The District Attorney says his object in offering the reward was to satisfy the friends of Capt. Munsey, who believed he had met with foul play. The skeleton was found near in this respect, and was not a body, and he objects to paying the reward.

District Attorney Smith offered $200 reward for the production of the body of Jesse Munsey and $300 for evidence leading to the conviction of persons who caused his death.

Eleven months after the old man's disappearance his remains were found in the woods near Lindenhurst by Lawrence. The identification was complete, and the circumstances left no room for further belief in foul play.

There was also a reward of $100 offered by the family, but this has not been paid, as the other companions of Lawrence on that day protest.

Home for Friendless Quakers.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Jan. 24.—Mrs. Margaret Dietrich, an aged Quakeress who died here on Monday, has in her will bequeathed stocks, bonds, mortgages, &c., to the value of $50,000, to the trustees of the New York Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, to establish and maintain a home for friendless members of the Quaker society. The will provides the home shall be in the house occupied for many years by Mr. and Mrs. Dietrich, at the corner of Arlington Place and Arlington Avenue, which is given for the purpose. She also leaves $500 to the Plainfield Society of Friends for the use of the Sunday school.

Fatally Hurt Going to a Wedding.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Jan. 24.—Two sisters, a brother, and a niece of Miss Margaret Lyons were being driven to church to-day to attend her wedding, when the breaking of a whiffletree bolt in the hack started a runaway, and the vehicle was demolished by striking a post at the side of the street. The occupants were picked up unconscious. Both the sisters were so severely injured that it is feared they will die. The brother suffered a fracture of the arm, and was cut about the head. The niece was less seriously hurt.

Drink-Crazed Woman Shoots Husband.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Jan. 24.—While crazed with drink this morning Mrs. William Mitchell of Groton shot her husband in the forehead with a .32-calibre revolver, inflicting a dangerous wound, the ball lodging in the brain. The woman was arrested. Mitchell recently inherited a large estate from his uncle, Col. William Mitchell of Groton.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

In the following list "mtg" stands for mortgage and "R S" for revenue stamps. The war revenue law provides that stamps shall be placed on all conveyances at the rate of 50 cents for each $500 of consideration. This "consideration" has been held to mean only the equity above the mortgage, except in the rare cases where the purchaser assumes payment of the mortgage. The amount of the mortgage plus 1,000 times the value of the revenue stamps on the conveyances should therefore show the true consideration:

OWNERS OF PROPERTY

Don't wait till the market is over before asking your tenants their intentions. Have it settled with them all the first week of February—or before if you can.

The best business people are early in the field for homes. That's the kind you want for tenants, and will get if you follow my advice.

TAMMANY EVIDENCE GOES TO GRAND JURY

Inquisitors to Devote Next Week to Investigation of Vice.

Consideration of the evidence submitted by the Tammany Committee of Five to the District Attorney, and understood to be against police officials in whose districts the committee has unearthed vicious and disorderly resorts, will be begun by the Grand Jury Monday, or the early part of next week. Pursuant to Judge Cowing's instructions when the January Grand Jury was sworn in, Maynard Hollister, the foreman, desires to devote the last week of the inquisitorial body's sitting to the vicious conditions referred to by the Judge, and also to the evidence of the Committee of Five, which Assistant District Attorney Scharman has been investigating and getting into proper legal shape before asking for indictments.

The decision to consider vice evidence was arrived at during a conference yesterday between District Attorney Philbin and Foreman Hollister.

Another conference regarded as highly significant was that of Robert Grier Monroe, counsel for the Committee of Five, with Recorder Goff, in the latter's chambers. The consultation lasted an hour, after which neither would talk for publication. Mr. Monroe has not yet called on District Attorney Philbin, although Chairman Goldwin some time ago arranged with the District Attorney for the presentation to the Grand Jury of any evidence that might be submitted by his committee.

It is the belief of the District Attorney, who has not yet received any evidence from the Committee of Fifteen, that Mr. Monroe, the committee's counsel, unlike the Tammany Committee of Five, is carefully weighing the evidence collected by its agents before submitting it to the Public Prosecutor, so that there will be no doubt of its legality, or of indictments eventuating.

The work of investigating the mass of matter submitted to the District Attorney by the Tammany purifiers, and of weighing its legal value devolved upon the members of the former's staff. Mr. Scharman's examination of the statutes resulted in the statement emanating from the District Attorney's office that the evidence was practically valueless. This statement was purely inspirational. Mr. Platzek of the Committee of Five made known, however, his committee's intention of supplementing the matter already in Mr. Philbin's hands.

Judge Cowing, in charging the Grand Jury, directed its especial attention to the existence of vice, and the general belief that the police were willfully blind and deaf to violations of the criminal laws. Those laws, he said, should be enforced and the offenders properly punished.

The Grand Jury has been holding two sessions almost every day since the first of the month, and has disposed of a large number of urgent prison cases and other routine business, as well as investigating conditions at Bellevue Hospital. This latter investigation was completed yesterday, and a presentment will probably be made up within a week. This leaves the Grand Jury free to devote the remainder of its session to evidence against disorderly and illegal resorts, their proprietors, and the police officials under whose authority the complained of conditions flourish.

ESTATE OF C. VANDERBILT.

The official schedule of the value of Cornelius Vanderbilt's estate has been filed in the Controller's office. The report of the appraiser of the estate, Charles D. O'Connell, does not differ materially from the valuation of the stocks, bonds, and insurance printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Dec. 12, 1900. The figures printed on that date showed that Cornelius Vanderbilt had left $52,000,867 in stocks, bonds, cash, and other personal property. The real estate brought the estimate of the wealth of Cornelius Vanderbilt up to $70,000,000. In order to save the interest on the inheritance tax, Senator Depew, Deputy Attorney General Hasbrouck, and the attorneys for the Vanderbilts made the first estimate on the property and $320,000 was paid to the State.

Railroad stocks	$41,904,834.50
Railroad bonds	16,929,122.99
Real estate mortgages	1,447,759.03
Cash	1,213,571.63
Furniture	558,156.50
Insurance	25,000.00
Horses	19,924.00
Promissory notes	2,400.00
Total	$52,099,867.96

The above table shows the value of the stocks and bonds on the date the appraisement was made. The fluctuations in the stock market are not considered in this official appraisement.

Under the Inheritance Tax law, 1 per cent. of the personal estate, or about $320,000, will have to be paid into the State Treasury. Controller Coler receives 1 per cent. of the inheritance tax, or about $5,200, for collecting the tax and transmitting the money to the State Treasurer.

Appraiser O'Connell's official report shows the principal holdings of the Vanderbilt estate to be as follows: $1,100,000 West Shore first mortgage 4 per cent. bonds, $1,080,000 Black Creek first mortgage 4 per cent. bonds, $4,875,000 New York Central-Lake Shore collateral trust 3½ per cent. bonds, $4,875,000 New York Central-Michigan Central collateral trust 3½ per cent. bonds, 20,000 shares New York Central and Hudson River at 137, 40,468 shares New York and Harlem at 380, 16,250 shares Chicago and Northwestern at 204, 20,000 shares Wagner Palace Car Company at 188½, 23,500 shares Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis at 69½, and 1,372 shares Union Trust Company at 1400.

GIRL DODGED THE TRUTH.

Told Police She Was an Orphan, While Parents Were Looking for Her.

Hattie Hunt, fourteen years old, whose parents live at 101 Jackson Street, Brooklyn, entered the Bedford Avenue Police Station early yesterday and told Desk Sergt. Black that she was cold and hungry. "I am an orphan," said the girl, "and have been from the age of two years. For several years relatives looked after me and then discarded me, so I decided to appeal to the police for shelter and food."

The girl's story had the desired effect on the Sergeant, who sat her down in a chair beside a fire and ordered the doorman to purchase some food. While she was seated in the station house the girl's uncle happened along. When told of the girl's story he declared that it was false and that she had a good home with her parents. Hattie, when confronted by her uncle, admitted she had told a story and then declared that her parents treated her cruelly.

This story also proved to be false. The police learned that the girl had left her home on Wednesday morning without any cause, and at the time she appeared in the station house her parents were making a diligent search for her. The police held the girl, and when she was arraigned in the Lee Avenue Police Court the parents were present. They denied that they had ever treated her cruelly, and told the Magistrate that the girl of late was inclined to be wild. She was turned over to her parents.

NEW HOME FOR MONKEYS.

Contract for Bronx Park Building Awarded to Thomas Cockerell.

The Park Commissioners yesterday opened bids for the construction of the new monkey house in Bronx Park. There were three bids opened: William Henderson, $64,197; George Hilderbrandt, $64,747, and Thomas Cockerell, $59,700. The contract was awarded to Cockerell.

The monkey house will be the first of a group of buildings to be erected in Baird's Court, and will be the central attraction of the "Zoo." It will be one story in height, 130 feet long, and constructed of limestone, brick, and terra cotta. On the eastern side along the entire length of the building will be the outdoor cages, in which the monkeys will receive during warm weather. Inside there will be a pavilion at each end, connected by a long central pavilion. The building will be fire-proof and well lighted.

JUROR FAINTS IN COURT.

Benjamin Donaldson Falls Unconscious While Listening to Judge's Charge.

A commotion was caused in Judge Garretson's court in Long Island City yesterday when a juryman fell in a dead faint while the Judge was delivering his charge. The case, which was that of Kenworth against Bogart, which had occupied all Wednesday afternoon and almost all yesterday morning. The jurymen had arisen and were listening to the Judge's charge, when Benjamin Donaldson, a jeweler of Elmhurst, staggered and fell to the floor. His fellow-jurors and court officers went to his assistance, and he was carried into one of the side rooms, where restoratives were given and he soon regained consciousness. It was some time, however, before he was in condition to be removed to his home.

The case has been put over until Monday, and unless Mr. Donaldson is able to resume his place in the jury box, it will have to be re-tried.

"BILLY BRYAN'S" FATAL FEAST.

He Easily Digested Silver Certificates, but Fringed Paper and Broken Bottle Necks Killed Him.

"Billy Bryan," the Jersey City goat, so named because he ate seven one-dollar silver certificates belonging to his owner, Michael J. Kenny, is dead. It was not the silver certificates that killed him, however. Mr. Kenny says the goat's digestion would have carried him over that episode, even if he had eaten double the amount.

After he ate the notes "Billy" was banished to a farm owned by Mr. Kenny's brother, but Mr. Kenny's young son, for whom the goat was bought, mourned so over his pet's absence that Mr. Kenny finally notified his brother to send "Billy" back. The expressman delivered the goat at Mr. Kenny's saloon, at Grove Street and Pavonia Avenue, where the certificate-eating feat was performed. That was late Wednesday afternoon, and, as it was not convenient for Mr. Kenny to drive "Billy" home that night, the animal was tied in a rear room and left there overnight. When the saloon was opened yesterday morning "Billy" was found dead on the floor behind the bar. Several broken bottles, parts of which were missing, lay around him.

A veterinary surgeon, who was called to view the remains, found that "Billy" had secured his liberty by gnawing the rope he was tied with. Then he had wandered behind the bar, and began tearing down the fringed paper with which the shelves were decorated. In doing so he had pulled over the bottles, and had eaten the necks of four of them. That was too much for his digestion, but whether the broken glass caused internal hemorrhage or acute gastritis the surgeon would not undertake to decide.

WINTERS WINS WILL CONTEST.

The contest over the will of Anna Maria Dooley-Hunt-Winters came to a sudden termination in the Supreme Court yesterday by reason of the decision given by Justice Bischoff, which took the case from the jury. As a result of this decision Byram L. Winters, the young husband of the testatrix, comes into an estate worth over a million dollars. He was thirty and she was seventy-four years old when they were married, in 1894. Mrs. Winters was then Mrs. Hunt. He was earning $15 a week as a law clerk and she had the property which has been in litigation ever since her death.

The number "thirteen" figures largely in the fortunes of Mr. Winters. It was on the thirteenth day of the hearing before the Surrogate that the will was originally admitted to probate. Again on the thirteenth day of the trial before the Justice and a jury Mr. Winters becomes the victor.

The contest was carried on by a number of heirs at law, who alleged that Mrs. Winters was not of sound mind, and that her husband had used undue influence in getting her to execute the will which gave him property worth $1,100,000. Mrs. Winters obtained her wealth through the will of her first husband, Alderman William A. Dooley. She died four years after her marriage to Mr. Winters, and then nearly a score of nephews and nieces instituted a contest. The will was, however, admitted to probate, and then, to make himself doubly sure of his inheritance, Mr. Winters caused the matter to be carried into the Supreme Court.

Some fifty witnesses were called to prove that Mrs. Winters was decidedly eccentric. After those interested in proving Mrs. Winters not competent to make a will had presented their testimony, Supreme Court Justice O'Gorman, who was one of the witnesses to the will, was called, and he declared that Mrs. Winters was perfectly sane at the time of executing the instrument. Yesterday a motion was made asking Justice Bischoff to instruct the jury to find for Mr. Winters. In a lengthy opinion the Justice so instructed. He said, in part:

"Nothing in the expressed wishes of the testatrix lends color to the view that she failed to follow her natural inclinations in the disposal of her property. She had no relatives of blood, and, apparently, none of those connected with her held a place in her affections which could be a substitute for parental regard. Marrying the plaintiff in the last few years of her life, she evidently formed an attachment for him whereby her relatives were displaced, and it is difficult to perceive anything violent in the change.

"Such a marriage, in view of the great disparity between the ages of the parties, may have been a very unusual thing, and it may be that the plaintiff's motives were mercenary, but this has to do merely with the situation which resulted in the final wish of the testatrix to leave him her property, and has no bearing upon the validity of the will, if she was of sufficiently sound mind to express that wish."

MRS. DEAN NOT INSANE.

Justice Blanchard Denies Application for a Commission of Inquiry.

Justice Blanchard in the Supreme Court yesterday denied the application of Jotham Osborne for a commission to inquire into the sanity of Mr. Osborne's aunt, Mrs. Anna Dean of 409 West One Hundred and Fiftieth Street. The application made in December last asserted that Mrs. Dean, who is quite old, owned property worth $250,000.

Among other things the application said that Mrs. Dean imagined herself to be the Queen of England, and that she would array herself in all sorts of garments and bedeck herself with jewelry. Several nephews and nieces opposed the application, and Justice Blanchard decided that their affidavits showed that Mrs. Dean was not insane.

MILLIE CHRISTINE'S FARE.

Two-Headed Woman Causes Agent to Wire for Instructions.

The General Passenger Agent of a Southern line was puzzled for an answer to a "rush" dispatch which he received from a ticket agent at a small station on the line. The telegram read:

"What shall I do about fare in case of Millie Christine, the two-headed, two-bodied woman? She claims that hitherto she has been traveling for one fare. Shall I charge her one or two fares? Please rush answer."

After some hurried thinking, the following answer was sent to the agent: "If Millie Christine is one and the same woman, charge her one fare; if she is two women under one attire, charge her two fares." The agent has not yet reported how many fares he collected.

STUDENTS VISIT THE MAYOR.

The sophomore class of Muhlenberg College, Allentown, Penn., called on Mayor Van Wyck yesterday with a letter from Mayor Brandt of the college town. Mayor Van Wyck treated the collegians cordially. He said:

"I am always glad to see college boys. I congratulate you on this excursion from the dormitories and college rooms, and I know in observing our metropolitan life in New York you will be satisfied that no man can labor for himself alone—each helps to mold the universe. If you will bear that in mind, you will make kind citizens and able men. If you get into any trouble while you are here, let me know and I will get you out of it."

Mayor Van Wyck then directed Secretary Downes to give the collegians letters of introduction to officials at the navy yard and Governors Island. The students will attend a dinner of the alumni of Muhlenberg College on Friday night.

Just a little time and trouble, a little poking and groping and you'll be repaid twenty-fold.

Hardly a day passes but a few from our very choicest and highest priced are dropped into the $15 pile. Not enough for us to "holler" about, but enough to be interesting.

Suits and overcoats, $15.

OTHER MAGNETS:

Men's half-hose, 25 cents—doesn't sound low-priced perhaps, but it's half-priced.

Neckwear: 32nd and Warren Street stores, Ascots, 55 cents; Prince Street store, four-in-hands, 25 cents.

The Ascots came out of the dollar boxes, the four-in-hands from off the 50 cent shelf.

HERLIHY TRIAL SQUABBLES

Wordy Encounters Between Lawyers Olcott and Grant.

Police Commissioners Also Get Into Argument with Counsel—Testimony of Policemen.

Wordy encounters between counsel and Commissioners marked the progress of the trial of Capt. Herlihy at Police Headquarters yesterday.

President York and Louis J. Grant got into the first encounter, and, incidentally, ex-Judge Olcott was mixed up in it. It was while Sergt. James J. Norton of the Twelfth Precinct was on the stand. He said that he had met the Rev. Mr. Paddock in the station house on Feb. 12, 1900.

"What did he say to you?" asked Mr. Grant.

"Objected to," said Mr. Olcott, "on the ground that the question is irrelevant and incompetent."

A long argument followed between President York and Mr. Grant, the lawyer saying that he proposed to show that Mr. Paddock had sent his thanks to Capt. Herlihy for the improved conditions in the district. Mr. York held that testimony as to the general conditions had already been excluded in the case of the prosecution.

"We limited the prosecution to specific facts regarding the houses mentioned in the specifications," said Mr. York.

"It's hearsay evidence," said Mr. Olcott.

Pointing his finger at the attorney for the prosecution, Mr. Grant remarked that that might be Mr. Olcott's opinion, but he himself held differently.

"Well, consider my remark unsaid—I don't want to prolong the discussion."

"No, I will consider it," said Mr. Grant. "Several times you have called my questions foolish. Now I hold that in this you are foolish."

"That merely signalizes your knowledge of the law," retorted Mr. Olcott.

The Commissioners ruled the question out.

Then Mr. Grant asked the witness a question designed to bring out that Mr. Paddock had long had an animus against Capt. Herlihy.

Again Mr. Olcott objected, saying that the inadmissibility of the question would have been obvious to him in his first year in law school.

"Oh, of course," said Mr. Grant, "anything you don't like is obvious."

Mr. York said that the only way the question could be admitted was as showing a motive. "Even then, I'm very doubtful about it," he added, "but I'll admit it."

Mr. Grant then asked the witness to relate what Mr. Paddock had said.

"Mr. Paddock told me to ask Capt. Herlihy to come to his study in the morning at 9 o'clock. He said that the Captain should report to him, or else he would have his head."

In cross-examining the witness, Mr. Olcott asked:

"What did you say when Mr. Paddock made that remark about your Captain?"

"I told him I would deliver his message."

"What did Capt. Herlihy say when you delivered the message?"

"He said he'd see about it."

"Was that all—he didn't call him any names?"

"No."

Daniel P. Sullivan, Assistant Clerk in the Magistrates' Courts, who was assigned to Essex Market Court on April 27, 1900, testified to writing out the affidavit sworn to by Mr. Paddock.

Michael Haggerty, a policeman of the Twelfth Precinct Station, produced a long list of women he had arrested and houses raided and visited. This, he said, was done under specific orders from Capt. Herlihy.

Under cross-examination, Haggerty told of a visit to a house where he had a conversation with the landlady, who remarked that she "would fix matters."

Mr. York questioned the witness sharply as to the meaning of the expression. Haggerty insisted that she meant she would fix the rooms.

During Haggerty's examination there was another sharp tilt between President York and Mr. Grant. A few moments later Mr. Olcott asked the witness what caused him to think that a boy he arrested for warning a woman knew him.

"Oh, you can't be in the precinct long before them people know you," explained Haggerty.

"That's a conclusion," said Mr. Abell.

"It's sworn evidence," said Mr. Olcott.

"I know that," retorted Mr. Abell, angrily.

"I merely wanted to remind you," said Mr. Olcott.

"You don't need to remind me," returned Mr. Abell, with increased emphasis.

George W. Stevenson, another policeman, also told of arrests made pursuant to Capt. Herlihy's instructions. He did plain-clothes work.

"Don't you think it's difficult to get men to do this kind of work?" asked Mr. Grant.

"Don't answer," interrupted Mr. York. "What right has this man to reflect on the force? A policeman is expected to do what he is ordered."

The hearing will be resumed at 11 o'clock to-day.

POLICEMAN SENT TO PRISON.

Second Time McManus Has Been Punished for Non-Support of Family.

Policeman Michael McManus of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station, living at 267 Tenth Avenue, was yestenday sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the penitentiary by Justice Jerome, in Special Sessions, for the non-support of his wife and three children. The children are now in charitable institutions, and the policeman's wife is with friends. Pronouncing sentence, Justice Jerome said:

"You have disgraced your uniform and yourself. You have drawn $1,400 from the city in the past two years, and paid only $68 toward the support of your wife and children. We think you deserve punishment, and the strictest we can mete out to you will serve to sever you from the force you have dishonored. For that we congratulate ourselves."

McManus was sent to prison for six months in 1897 on a similar charge, and was also dismissed from the Police Department. Afterward he was reinstated.

LEGAL NOTES.

USURIOUS DISCOUNT BY PRIVATE BANKS.—A suit involving an interpretation of the General Banking Law of 1892, brought by one Italian against two others, which was recently finally decided by the Court of Appeals, has probably been the subject of judicial consideration by a greater number of Judges than any other case in this State. Pasquale Caponigri, a private banker, brought an action in the City Court, about six years ago, against Pasquale and Pietro Altieri, on a note for $1,000, made by the former and indorsed by the latter. The defendants claimed that the note was part of a $3,000 note given in December, 1891, which was usurious, and for forbearance upon which they made six payments of $150 each, and five payments of $50 each, over the legal interest. The defendants set up these transactions, and sought to recover back double the sum thus paid. A verdict rendered in favor of the defendants on the trial, was affirmed by the General Term of the City Court, held by Judges Schuchman, Conlan, and Fitzsimons. The Appellate Term of the Supreme Court, on further appeal, also ordered an affirmance, Justice Bischoff giving the opinion, which was concurred in by Justices Daly and McAdam. The Appellate Division, in an opinion by Justice Patterson, ordered a reversal, and that decision, after reargument, has now been affirmed by the Court of Appeals. That tribunal holds, unanimously, in an opinion by Judge Martin, that the penalty prescribed by the banking law, for taking more than the legal rate of interest, that is, a forfeiture of twice the amount paid, to be recovered by the party paying it, cannot be enforced as a counterclaim in an action brought by an individual banker upon a promissory note. Such a forfeiture can only be recovered in a penal action brought for that purpose.

BAILEE FOR HIRE.—James Rutherford, whose team was hired by Leopold Krause and others, sued them in the Supreme Court, in Delaware County, for injury done to his property. After proving the hiring, and that the property was returned in a badly damaged condition, the plaintiff rested, and was thereupon nonsuited. The Appellate Division, at Albany, granted a new trial. Justice Smith, giving the opinion, held that in such an action against one of the bailees, the proof created prima facie a liability on the part of the defendant. The fact that it was one of the others of the party who drove the team, the Court held, did not relieve Krause from liability, in the absence of proof that he was free from negligence in permitting the injury. Presiding Justice Parker and Justice Edwards dissented.

THE WEISBARD MURDER.

Jewish Peddlers Will Raise a Reward for the Murderer's Arrest.

More than 250 Jewish peddlers met Wednesday night in the Golden Rule Hall, at 125 Rivington Street, to take steps toward offering a reward for the capture of the murderer of Meyer Weisbard, who was found in a trunk with his throat cut on Pier 11 East River, ten days ago. The meeting was called by Adolph Tietelbaum of 37 Clinton Street. As a result all of the Jewish peddler organizations will hold special meetings to consider what steps shall be taken to raise $500 reward which it is the intention to advertise in the Italian papers for the arrest of the murderer.

Speeches were made setting forth the necessity of protecting the lives of the peddlers, who in the course of their work among the Italians are often threatened for causing the arrest of delinquent purchasers. At the end of the meeting a collection amounting to $250 was taken up.

The police are still working on the Weisbard mystery, but up to this morning had found nothing which they thought worth giving to the public. Among the many rumors that continue to flood the office of Chief of Detectives Titus was one to the effect that the housekeeper of 56 James Street had reported to Headquarters that she had reason to suspect a former woman tenant of being implicated in the murder.

The housekeeper asserted, it was said, that the woman had had dealings with a Hebrew jewelry peddler, and that she mysteriously moved away from her rooms without serving notice or making explanation on the Friday after the murder. Capt. Titus says he will investigate the rumor.

CAPT. GRAHAM WINS HIS SUIT.

Capt. John Graham of Jersey City, who brought suit in the Hudson County Supreme Court against the Iron Steamboat Company of New York for $10,000, was yesterday awarded $1,500. Capt. Graham alleged that he went to Long Branch on Aug. 11, 1900. He had a ticket issued by the Russell Line, which was absorbed by the Iron Steamboat Company in May, 1900. When he presented it he says he was told that the ticket was not good, and was finally put off the boat and brutally beaten by the deckhands. Notwithstanding this he says he jumped over the guard rail just as the boat started. He was not further molested, nor was he asked to pay his fare.

The company's defense was that the ticket offered by Capt. Graham had been issued in 1898, and the Iron Steamboat Company had given public notice that tickets issued by the Russell Company would not be accepted. Capt. Wyse, who was in command of the boat, testified that none of the deckhands struck Capt. Graham. Wyse said he was standing on the gangplank when Capt. Graham made a rush to get on the boat. Witness said Graham ran against him and was thrown down by the force of the impact. This, counsel for Graham claimed, was impossible as Graham weighs 295.

The company will appeal on the ground that the verdict was not warranted by the evidence.

Capt. Graham is a noted local politician, and was Sergeant at Arms of the Republican Senate Committee that unearthed the great Democratic frauds in Hudson County in November, 1889.

JOHN G. CARLISLE SUED.

Cabman He Had Arrested Wants $2,000 Damages—Service on the ex-Secretary Was Difficult.

John G. Carlisle, who was Secretary of the Treasury under President Cleveland, has been sued by an indignant cab driver for $2,000 damages. The cab driver alleges that Mr. Carlisle falsely caused his arrest and compelled him to remain in the Tombs prison for three weeks. The papers in the case were prepared some weeks ago, but, owing to the difficulty of getting at Mr. Carlisle, he was not served until this week, and then the service was made by one of the plaintiff's attorneys, instead of by a regular process server. Mr. Carlisle was so busy with his work in preparing his brief in the Porto Rico case before the United States Supreme Court that the process server could not reach him. Finally M. H. Elliott of the law firm of Stern & Elliott, which is handling the case, decided that he would have to take personal charge of the service of the papers. Both Mr. Elliott and the ex-Secretary are members of the Bar Association. Mr. Elliott went to the house of the association and "camped out" there until Mr. Carlisle came in. Then he served the papers.

Richard F. Leake is the cabman suing for damages. According to his complaint, on the night of Dec. 22, 1898, Mrs. Carlisle returned to New York City from Washington and engaged a cabman at the Twenty-third Street ferry to take her to her home. After she entered the house, she discovered that a sealskin cape, valued at $300, was missing. The next night Mr. Carlisle, who had a description of Leake, went with a policeman to the ferry entrance and there pointed him out as the man who had taken the cape. Leake was arrested, and the next day was held by Magistrate Crane to await the action of the Grand Jury. An indictment was found against him, and in default of bail he was committed to the Tombs. He was tried before Judge Cowing in General Sessions on Jan. 13, 1899, and was acquitted. His defense was that he was on theatre duty the night the cape was supposed to have been stolen, and that he had not been near the ferry. He declares, in his complaint, that he was made ill by his confinement in the Tombs.

The case will come up for trial in the City Court, and Mr. Carlisle will fight it. He has already entered an appearance through his counsel, Curtis, Mallet-Prevost & Colt, but has not filed his answer. When he was served with the summons and complaint in the case he remarked to the lawyer serving them: "Leake ought to be in the penitentiary now."

DIVORCE FOR MRS. McGUINNESS.

Washington B. Williams, the Jersey City Master in Chancery who took testimony in the divorce suit brought on July 8, 1899, by Mrs. Mary E. McGuinness against Thomas McGuinness, on the grounds of cruelty, yesterday filed, at Trenton, a report advising Chancellor Magie to grant the decree asked. McGuinness, who was a wealthy contractor, disposed of his business as soon as the suit was brought and went to Philadelphia. He has not since been within the jurisdiction of the court. He defended the suit, however, through Brinkerhoff & Fielder, his counsel.

Mrs. McGuinness testified that she was married to McGuinness at Newark on July 26, 1879, and that her husband's alleged cruelty began on their wedding trip, which included a tour of Europe, and that instead of returning in three months, as arranged, McGuinness compelled her to remain in Europe for two years. When they did return, he left her when her baby was born and did not return for six months. During that time she lived with her parents, having no means of her own. After his return he denied her proper nourishment, she alleged, when she was ill, but when his favorite St. Bernard dog was ill he called in two veterinary surgeons to look after it. He also kept her a prisoner in his house and refused to let her friends see her. On one occasion, she alleged, he threw a kettle of boiling water over her arm, scalding her so badly that she was unable to leave her room for three weeks.

None of these allegations was disproved by McGuinness's counsel.

ANOTHER WARSHIP ORDERED TO VENEZUELA

The Lancaster Sent to La Guayra, the Scorpion to Trinidad.

Official Documents Made Public at Caracas Throw Light on Status of Rival Asphalt Claimants.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The United States naval force in Venezuelan waters will be increased by the addition of the Lancaster as soon as that vessel has had time to coal at Santa Lucia and sail to La Guayra. Orders to that effect were issued to-day to the Lancaster, which is at St. Vincent. She will go somewhat out of her way to reach Santa Lucia, and will not reach La Guayra, therefore, for three or four days.

The Scorpion, which arrived yesterday at Curaçao, has been ordered to proceed to Trinidad, which is near the mouth of the Orinoco. This will bring the Scorpion much nearer to the scene of the asphalt trouble, but it is asserted at the Navy Department that she is going there for surveying purposes.

The Lancaster is one of the vessels whose whereabouts were reported by the Navy Department, at the request of the State Department, when the Scorpion first received her orders to sail to Guanoco, which were subsequently countermanded. She is a training ship of 3,250 tons, 1,000 horse power, and twelve guns in main battery and a complement of landsmen three times as large as the company on the Scorpion.

CARACAS, Venezuela, Jan. 12.—The Venezuelan Herald of this date prints an article, under the heading of "Asphalt in Venezuela," which includes two documents that throw light on the situation; both are official papers, the first relating to the concession to the New York and Bermudez Company and the other to the rival grant:

Ministry of Fomento.

I, Dr. Guillermo Tell Villegas Pulido, Minister of Fomento of the United States of Venezuela, having considered the petition dated the 4th day of the present month, which Mr. A. Howard Carner, Managing Director of the New York and Bermudez Company, has addressed to this department, and having seen the favorable report of the Director of Territorial Wealth on the said petition, and having carefully examined the records in the archives of this Ministry relating to the said company, certify:

That the New York and Bermudez Company has fulfilled up to date the engagements and obligations of which it is cessionary, entered into with the executive power on the 15th of September, 1883, to which additions were made on the 19th of October following, approved by National Congress by law of the 4th of June, 1884, and confirmed by the High Federal Court, by sentence of Aug. 21, 1898, and that therefore the said contract is in full legal force and effect.

On the petition of the interested parties I issue this certificate at Caracas, July 23, 1900. Year ninetieth of the independence and forty-second of the federation.

G. T. VILLEGAS PULIDO.

United States of Venezuela, Ministry of Encouragement, Department of Territorial Wealth, Caracas, Dec. 10, 1900.

Resolved, On the 17th of July of the present year Mr. A. H. Carner, as Director of the New York and Bermudez Company presented a petition to this Ministry praying that the definitive title of ownership of an asphalt mine called Felicidad, which was granted by the National Government on the 30th of November, 1857, be declared void, and also objecting that the definitive title be granted of another asphalt mine called Venezuela, of which Messrs. Julio Figuero, Eduardo Capecchi, and Antonio Vincentelli Santelli had obtained the provisional title having been granted by the Provisional President of the State of Sucre. Both mines, Felicidad and Venezuela, are situated to the southeast of the village of Guariquen, in the municipality of Union, in the Benitez District of the State of Sucre.

The New York and Bermudez Company allege, as the basis of their petition, that both mines, Felicidad and Venezuela, are situated within the limits of the mining concession and the plot of lands of which is the owner, under titles granted the 7th and 14th of December, 1888, and that the contract entered into by the National Government on the 15th of September, 1883, of which the company is cessionary, grants to it the exclusive right to exploit the asphalt in the former State of Bermudez.

To clear up the matter the Supreme Chief of the Republic, through this Ministry, and by resolution dated the 6th of September last past, ordered a commission composed of three engineers, named, one by the National Government, one by the New York and Bermudez Company, and the other by the respresentative of the owners of the mine Felicidad, to repair to the lands in dispute and to make plans thereof. This commission consisted of Drs. Julio Blanco, Jesus Munoz Tebar, and Leman Jaman Jiminez. The two latter have each presented a plan of the entire lands in dispute and their topographical correctness is certified by Dr. Julio Blanco.

In virtue thereof and considering that the contract entered into by the National Government with Horatio R. Hamilton on the 15th of September, 1883, does not grant to the New York and Bermudez Company the exclusive right to exploit the asphalt existing in the former State of Bermudez, since in the contract the company is cessionary, the like monopoly is not stipulated and cannot be presumed, but must be clearly and precisely expressed, and in case of doubt all presumption must be in favor of liberty; considering that the definitive title granted by the National Government on the 15th of December, 1888, concedes to A. H. Carner, Secretary of the New York and Bermudez Company, the ownership of a mine situated at twenty kilometers from the village of Guariquen, at an elevation of 180 meters above the level of the sea; that the title granted on the 14th of December, 1888, grants a portion of lands of the superficies of the said mining concession, situated also at twenty kilometers from the Village of Guariquen; considering that according to the plans presented by the Commission of Engineers the asphalt lake which the New York and Bermudez Company is exploiting is situated at ten to twelve kilometers from the Village of Guariquen and at an elevation of four to five meters above the sea level, that is to say, eight kilometers above the place shown by the title deeds of their mining concession; considering that, according to the said plan, the mines Felicidad and Venezuela are situated at more than seven kilometers from the said Village of Guariquen and are not therefore included within the mining concession which belongs to the New York and Bermudez Company, according to the title deeds produced by the said company; considering that even if the situation of the asphalt lake which the New York and Bermudez Company is exploiting were the same as that shown in their title deeds it could not oppose the rights of third parties, because in its deeds no boundaries are given and these are essential to determine the ownership of real estate; considering that in conformity with Clause 18, No. 15, of the National Constitution of 1881, corresponding to Clause 13, No. 16, of the Constitution now in force, mines are the property of the States of the Union, which transfer the administration thereof to the Federal Government in order that they should be administered under a uniform system of exploitation, in accordance with the law in that behalf, and that consequently monopoly of the exploitation of asphalt could not be comprehended in the said contract with Horatio R. Hamilton because for that purpose it would be necessary that the law in force at that date should have been repealed; and considering that in the proceedings lodged in this Ministry by Messrs. Julio Figuera, Eduardo Capecchi, and Antonio Vincentelli Santelli for the purpose of obtaining the final adjudication of an asphalt mine called Venezuela in the municipality of Union, in the Benitez District of the State of Sucre, it appears that the requirements of the Mining Code now in force have been complied with. In consideration of the propositions above set forth, the Supreme Chief of the Republic,

Resolved: First—The said petition of the New York and Bermudez Company, dated the 17th of July last past, praying that the definitive title of the mine "Felicidad" be declared null and opposing the grant of the definitive title of the mine "Venezuela" to Messrs. Julio Figuera, Eduardo Capecchi, and Antonio Vicentelli Santelli, who have obtained the provisional title thereof, subject to the provisions of law in that behalf, is without standing.

Second—Messrs. C. M. Warner and P. R. Quinlan remain entitled to the full enjoyment of their rights as owners of the mine "Felicidad," of which the definitive title was granted by the National Executive on the 30th of November, 1897.

Third—Let the title of ownership be granted to Messrs. Julio Figuera, Eduardo Capecchi, and Antonio Vicentelli Santelli for the mine called "Venezuela," situated in the municipality of "Union," in the District of Benitez, in the State of Sucre.

Let it be communicated and published.

For the National Executive.

ERIE'S MEN MAY STRIKE.

Boiler Makers' Fruitless Demands May Lead to Big Shop Tie-Up.

A general strike of the boiler makers in all the shops of the Erie Railroad, it was stated yesterday, is likely to occur at any moment. Delegate Ostrander of the New York District of the International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers reported yesterday that President McNeill of the brotherhood had been here, and had a conference with the officers of the company about the demands of the boiler makers, but his mission was fruitless.

The principal demands of the boiler makers are the abolition of piecework altogether, and higher wages for those who are on salary. The machinists also say they have grievances, and may strike in sympathy in all the shops in case of a general strike of boiler makers, which is now believed to be inevitable.

In response to an advertisement in a morning paper, in which Horace Y. Green promised steady work to all competent boilermakers who called to see him at the United States Hotel, corner of Fulton and Pearl Streets, a number of boilermakers called there yesterday. They were told that they were wanted to take the places of strikers some place "between New York and Chicago," and those who were engaged were told to be in readiness to be sent off at any moment. Mr. Green yesterday afternoon would neither admit nor deny that the men are wanted in case the boilermakers go out at the Erie shops.

Some of the union men who went to the United States Hotel, but refused to take the places of strikers, said yesterday they believed that the men engaged were intended for the Erie shops in event of a strike.

INSURANCE COMPANY FOR SALE.

The American of Baltimore Is Seeking a Purchaser Here.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 25.—A. R. Cathcart, President of the American Fire Insurance Company of Baltimore, is in New York in connection with the proposed sale of the concern, the Directors having decided to recommend to the stockholders a sale if a satisfactory price can be secured.

Offers have already been received from home companies as well as from a New York concern, but none of them is considered satisfactory, as, in the opinion of the Directors, a better price can be obtained. The capital stock is $200,000, the par value being $5 a share, and there is a surplus of about $45,000, making a value of about $6 a share.

For some time there has been friction in the Board of Directors. President Cathcart suomitted his resignation recently, and it is reported that it was the break in the harmony in the board that hastened the resignation. He was willing to continue as President under certain conditions, which evidently could not be pledged. In view of all the circumstances, it was decided to sell. The statement is made by a director that the company is doing a good business and that it is in a satisfactory condition.

CELEBRATES 104TH BIRTHDAY.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 25.—William Earl Cook of Portsmouth, Rhode Island, one of the oldest men in the United States and the oldest living Freemason in the world, celebrated to-day his one hundred and fourth birthday at his home.

Mr. Cook was born in Portsmouth in 1797. He was by trade a blacksmith, and up to the time of his retirement, about four years ago, could swing a hammer with men many years his junior. His wife died in 1830 at the age of ninety-one, their wedded life having lasted seventy years.

Mr. Cook has eight grandchildren living, nineteen great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. He is now very feeble.

TO BUILD A MEDIÆVAL CASTLE.

Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Jan 25.—R. W. Patterson of New York, who lately purchased the Doerr property in Lenox, has had plans made for a large Summer residence on a slight eminence overlooking the Housatonic River. It is to be built of native gray stone, which will be taken from a near-by quarry. In style it will be like an old Scotch mediaeval castle, Mr. Patterson being of Scotch descent.

There will be a great hall extending through the house and a large court. The exterior of the building will have many towers and turrets. The plans for the castle have been made by Architect Robertson of New York, who designed the Seward Webb country house in Vermont. It is not yet known who will have charge of the building, but it is thought it will be Clifford Brothers. Mr. Patterson is a friend of John Sloane, who owns the adjoining property.

It is understood that work will be begun early in the Spring. It will take about two years to complete the building ready for occupancy.

ROBBED OF A $4,500 CHECK.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—Michael Delaney, a ranch owner of Butte, Mont., was victimized out of a certified check for $4,500 on Wednesday by a man whose acquaintance he formed a week ago in New York. Detective Flaherty arrested R. J. Hayes today, and he was identified by Delaney. Hayes sent the check through the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank for collection, and its owner will secure it.

Delaney met Hayes a week ago in New York. They came here Monday last. On Wednesday Delaney expressed a desire to buy some mining machinery, and produced a certified check for $4,500 on the Greenwich Bank of New York. Hayes took it to be cashed, telling Delaney to wait until he returned. When he failed to appear Delaney became suspicious and reported the loss to the police.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINES

MAY REQUIRE EXTRA SESSION

Philippine Commission Believes Civil Control Now Would Be Better than Military—Asks Passage of the Spooner Bill.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The President to-day transmitted to the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, inclosing a report of the Taft Philippine Commission. In his message of transmittal the President says that the report includes not only the reports of the commission, but its act of legislation, "and other important information relating to the conditions and immediate wants of the Philippine Islands."

Concluding, the President says: "I earnestly recommend legislation under which the government of the islands may have authority to assist in their peaceful industrial development in the directions indicated by the Secretary of War."

The brief recommendation in the message of the President caused general surprise among Senators, and occasioned speculation upon the probability of an extra session of Congress immediately after March 4. Senators generally say they have had no intimation from the White House that a special session of the entire Congress may be desirable, but they unite as one man in saying that no Philippine legislation is possible during the remaining five weeks of the present session. The Spooner bill, vesting all power for the government of the Philippine Archipelago in the President, is the only Philippine general bill. It is believed that whenever an earnest effort is made to secure legislation bearing upon this subject, much time will be required.

SECRETARY ROOT'S VIEWS.

Secretary Root's letter of transmissal is dated Jan. 24, addressed to the President, and is, in part, as follows:

"I beg leave to supplement my annual report of Nov. 30, 1900, by transmitting a report made by the Philippine Commission on that date, but only recently received at the War Department. At the same time I wish to call attention to some conditions existing in the Philippine Islands which indicate that the development of that country along the lines of peaceful industrial progress may require the exercise of powers of civil government not vested in this department, or in you, as Military Commander, but requiring a grant of authority from the Congress.

"The commission gives a gratifying account of the progress made in the pacification of the country and the gradual subsidence of guerrilla warfare. Information received since the date of the report confirms the favorable anticipation of the commission. A personal letter received by me from Judge Taft, dated Dec. 14, 1900, says:

Since writing you about 3,000 insurgents in Ilocos Norte have surrendered and 10,000 persons who were not well affected toward us in Panay have taken the oath of allegiance. I have already received two papers from native priests, eighteen in number, and I am told that there will be a great many other papers signed by a great many more native priests, tendering their allegiance to the United States and promising fidelity without mental reserve. The native priests are those who have held out longest in favor of the insurgents and against the Americans, and I deem this action as of great importance.

The army is hitting small but hard knocks against the insurgents everywhere. Since the election there has been a great falling off in the activity of the insurgents in aggressiveness, and their sole activity has been displayed in avoiding the fights which small detachments of our troops have brought about.

URGE PASSAGE OF SPOONER BILL.

On the 2d of January the commission, as a body, reinforced the views contained in their report by the following dispatch from Manila:

"If you approve we ask transmission to proper Senators and Representatives of the following: The passage of the bill in its present session is greatly needed to secure the best result from improving conditions. Until its passage no purely central civil Government can be established, no public franchises of any kind granted, and no substantial investment of private capital in internal improvements is possible. All are needed as most important steps in complete pacification.

A strong peace party has been organized, with the defined purpose of securing civil government under the United States, and they reasonably expect civil government and relief from the inevitable but annoying restraints of military rule long before the subject can be taken up by the new Congress. The time is near at hand, in our opinion, when the disturbances existing can better be suppressed by the native police of a civil Government, with the army as an auxiliary force, than by a continuance of complete military control.

The power to make the change should be put in the hands of the President, to act promptly when the time arrives to give the Filipino people an object lesson in the advantages of peace. A quasi-civil Government is under way, but its power is most restricted and unsatisfying. The commission is embarrassed in securing good material for judicial and other service by the necessarily provisional character of the military Government and its uncertainty of tenure.

The sale of public lands and allowance of mining claims is impossible until the Spooner bill is passed. Hundreds of American miners are on the ground awaiting a law to perfect their claims. More are coming. This is a good element in pacification. We urgently recommend an amendment to the Spooner bill so that its operation be not postponed until the complete suppression of all insurrection, but only until in the President's judgment, civil government may be safely established. The conditions are rapidly improving to a point where the civil Government with the aid of the army will be more efficient to secure peace than military control. COMMISSION.

CONDITIONS IMPROVING RAPIDLY.

A dispatch from Judge Taft, dated Jan. 9, 1901, says:

Conditions are rapidly improving. Rifles, besides officers and privates, are being captured or surrendered daily in considerable numbers in North and South Luzon. The same conditions prevail in Panay, where more than 35,000 have taken the oath of allegiance. The insurgent forces are completely scattered, and the leader Delgado is negotiating for surrender.

Work in Samar is slower, because of an insurgent band's long uncontested occupation of the interior and the swollen streams early in the campaign. The campaign in Samar has driven bands into Leyte, producing disturbance, but information is that conditions there are favorable. There is a favorable party for peace, the direct result of the election. It is well organized and rapidly increasing in Manila, and is preparing to extend its organization to many provinces on pressing and numerous invitations from leading citizens.

"The report shows that the islands are estimated to contain about 73,000,000 acres of land, of which less than 5,000,000 are held in private ownership. More permanent laws than the military government can supply are needed.

"The section of the report on the liquor traffic in Manila indicates that the powers of the commission are ample to deal with that subject and that the success which they have attained will compare favorably with the results in this country. Many false and misleading statements have been made regarding the use of intoxicating liquors in Manila. The fact is that this traffic is more rigidly and effectively regulated and kept within bounds in the City of Manila than in any city of similar or greater size in the United States.

"Acting upon that clause of your instructions which vests in the Philippine commission authority to exercise, subject to your approval through the War Department, that part of your military authority which is legislative in its character, the commission has adopted regular methods of legislative procedure. * * * I venture to express the hope that an examination of these acts, as well as the reading of the report, will carry to your mind, as it has to mine, the conviction that the commission are proceeding in accordance with the high spirit of your instructions and with zeal and discretion are pressing forward with all practicable speed the establishment of civil government in conformity to American institutions and in fulfillment of our duty to the people of the Philippine Islands."

Appended to the Secretary's report are the cablegram sent to the commission on Jan. 15 last inquiring about the prevalence of drunkenness and immoral practices in the army and the reply of the commission. These were made public last Saturday. The Commissioners add that immoral women, when known, were not permitted to land at Manila, and a number of them were deported. Continuing, they say:

General moral condition of the city has been greatly maligned. Crimes of violence are now comparatively few. Gambling has greatly decreased. Native wine shops in Manila in August, 1898, 4,000, now reduced to 400; American saloons, including hotels and restaurants, reduced from 224 in February, 1900, to 88 now. Of these only 48 are licensed to sell spirituous liquors.

THE COMMISSION'S REPORT.

The report itself is a very voluminous production, divided into many heads, exhibiting the progress made by the commission in carrying out its plans for the Americanization of the island. A particularly interesting section of the report, introducing the whole subject of Philippine relations, deals with military and political conditions, the effect of the American elections and Legisiative procedure and acts. The commission says that examinations of many witnesses as to the form of Government best adapted to these islands and satisfactory to the people show that the masses of the people are ignorant, credulous, and childlike, and that under any Government the electoral franchise must be much limited because the large majority will not, for a long time, be capable of intelligently exercising it.

The commission says also that conditions in Ilocos, supposed to be free from insurgents, became unsettled between August and November last, owing to the activity of Tinio the missionary work of certain Tagalogs, and the impetus furnished by the report of the American Electoral campaign. The unfortunate reverses of the United States troops at Sinoloan and Marinduque served to render the insurgent leaders more defiant and boastful and, adds the commission, "possibly to postpone the collapse of the insurrection predicted in our dispatch as likely to occur within sixty days after the election, for a somewhat longer period.

"From all the information we can get, it seems clear that a great majority of the people long for peace and are entirely willing to accept the establishment of a Government under the supremacy of the United States. They are, however, restrained by fear from taking any action to assist the suppression of the insurrection. Any one suspected of giving information to the Americans concerning the insurgents is immediately marked for assassination. The ramifications of the conspiracy are so wide that it has effected the terrorism of an entire people. It is a Mafia on a very large scale."

In Southern Luzon the conditions have improved in the Provinces of Cavite, Batangas, and Laguna during the last month. The Province of Tayabas is peaceful. In the Camarines and Albay the conditions are not so satisfactory, but they are growing better. In the Visayans and Mindanao the conditions are much the same as reported Aug. 21, except that in Leyte much improvement has been made. The report adds:

"Any statement of the conditions prevailing in the islands during the last six months which ignores the effect of the American election as a controlling element in the situation is necessarily inadequate. Since the result was announced there has been a great decrease in insurgent activity. The intensest interest was felt by the insurgents before the election in the issue, and the intensest disappointment since, which will certainly effect the collapse of the insurrection in the near future. From now on, conditions in these islands will grow steadily better."

THE PROBLEM OF THE FRIARS.

One of the longest chapters in the report and one of the most absorbing interest concerns the friars in the Philippines. The commission handles this subject in the greatest detail, and with the utmost freedom. It gives the history of the expulsion of these friars from their places by the rebels and declares that the burning question agitating the Filipinos is whether they shall be permitted to return.

The commission listened to all sides, including the Archbishop of Manila, himself a friar, and the churchmen brought forward by the laymen, officers, newspaper correspondents, and others, and their choice to testify on this subject. The commission says that the friar was the embodiment of all authority, governmental as well as religious in his locality, and that not a single function of government could be performed without his assistance and participation.

As to the mooted question of the immorality of the friars, the commission says that the evidence on this point is so strong that it seems to establish clearly that there were enough instances in each province to give considerable ground for the general report. That such immorality should exist among the friars, it says, is, however, not strange, in view of the fact that many of them came from the ignorant peasantry of Andalusia, and were not by training fitted to resist temptation. But immorality on the part of the friars, it is held, was not the principal ground for the hostility toward them of the people.

The commission says: "It did not shock the common people or arouse their indignation to see their curate establish illicit relations with a woman and have children by her. The woman did not lose caste on that account, but often prided herself on the relation to the chief authority in the village. * * * Of course there may have been instances in which a friar used his autocratic power to establish a relation of this kind against the will of the woman and her relatives, and these cases have lent themselves to deepen the colors of the lurid and somewhat overdrawn pictures painted by the friar writers."

The report shows that the total amount of land in the islands owned by the Augustinians, the Dominicans, the Franciscans, and the Recolletos is approximately 403,000 acres, besides which they have large sums of money to loan. Most of this property has been transferred by the Dominicans to a man named Andrews and by the Augustinians and by the Recolletos to English corporations, but the commission says that these transfers are not genuine and the friars remain the owners. It declares, however, that the United States Government is bound by treaty to protect these interests, and suggests that they be purchased for public lands out of the island revenues and by condemnation if need be, though the orders have expressed a willingness to sell at a satisfactory price.

Regarding the return of the friars, the commission says that the deep-seated hatred of the people must be reckoned with. It would be of assistance to the American cause if the Catholic Church were to substitute American priests, but this is a question of Church policy, with which the commission has nothing to do. Says the report: "It is enough to say that the political question will be eliminated if the friars are not sent back."

Reference is made to the subject of religious exercises in schools, which has since been decided in favor of the Church, on the basis of the Faribault plan. The commission says: "It is not certain that this would completely meet the views of the Catholic hierarchy, but it is likely it will avoid the active hostility to a public-school system which might be a formidable obstacle in spreading education among these Catholic people."

The question of establishing adequate means of communication between and throughout the islands is deemed secondary in importance only to the primary schools as an educator of the people. The commission states that it has no authority to grant franchises for the construction of railways, and advises this Government to empower it with this right, believing that the construction of a number of roads, backed by foreign capital, would ensue immediately.

The report says that all the courts are performing their regular functions, though in a provisional way. In the Supreme Court the Justices are nearly all Filipinos, and the Justices of the Peace are all natives. The commission says that the judicial salaries are miserably inadequate, and it is not surprising, therefore, that charges of bribery and corruption have arisen. The commission hopes to reorganize the judiciary early this year, but declares that the establishment of a Federal court is not within its jurisdiction. The Civil Code is stated to be adequate for the solution of commercial controversies and the regulation of all civil conduct.

CHANGE IN GOV. ODELL'S PLAN FOR COMMISSIONS

Assembly Leader Allds Offers Radical Amendments.

Proposed Single-Headed Boards Must Be Modified—New Bill Prevents Removal Except on Charges.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Leader Allds, during the session of the Assembly to-day, offered some amendments to the Governor's Prison Commission bill, by way, as it was said, of compromise, which, if they are to stand, will necessitate the revision of all the single-headed commission bills advocated by Gov. Odell. One of the amendments which Mr. Allds offered was a provision that the Commissioners can only be removed upon charges. The other amendment is designed to meet the objection that the Governor had no right to appoint to places on the commission for a term of four years State officers who are elected for two years. The bill as amended provides for the appointment of a commission of three members, one of whom shall be the President, with a salary, and the others to serve without pay. In case the other two are State officers their term shall expire with the expiration of their term as State officers.

In all the other single-headed commission bills it is provided as in the Prison Commission bill that State officers can be appointed to fill out the commission so as to make it technically plural in order to meet the requirements of the Constitution. If the term of State officers upon the prisons' commission is to be limited to the duration of their term as State officers, a like limitation will have to be put into the other State Commission bills for consistency's sake.

But the most important concession made by Leader Allds was the amendment that the Commissioner cannot be removed except upon charges. In this concession the Democratic members find an argument in support of their contention that the Governor ought not to have the right to remove the Police Commissioner of New York except upon charges.

STUDENTS HAZE SULTAN'S WARD

Philadelphia Medical College Boys Cut Off Young Turk's Mustache and Inflict Other Indignities.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 25.—Six students of the Medico-Chirurgical College to-day pounced upon John Loutfain, a ward of the Sultan of Turkey, and cut off his mustache.

It seemed very funny to the students, but it promises to become a very serious matter. Loutfain is a millionaire, and was sent here by the Sultan in return for financial favors rendered his Majesty by the house of Ben Amoor Ali Loutfain Bey.

Loutfain is taking a post-graduate course at the college, and his career is watched with great interest by his royal master. Thus the young man directly represents the Sultan, whose Minister at Washington will be officially advised regarding what the young Turk considers an outrage. He says:

"In spite of my protest I was blindfolded after class yesterday and overpowered. My mustache was shaved and my face washed with an offensive solution. To-day I am badly bruised from that treatment.

"It is such a disgrace for a Turk to be without a mustache that I can go nowhere among my Turkish friends now. I cannot even go to see my sister. Americans cannot understand this, but it is so. A foreigner like me is under a disadvantage here that no one can comprehend until he has been through it. The language is difficult. He has no friends and no influence."

COTTON SPINNERS' NEW MOVE.

Committee of Southern Association Advises Formation of Mercantile and Commission Company.

Special to The New York Times.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Jan. 25.—The Concentration Committee of the Southern Cotton Spinners' Association dropped another bombshell to-night by advising the establishment of a mercantile and commission company, with headquarters at Charlotte and branch offices in Philadelphia, New York, and Boston. This scheme will, it is proposed, be carried out on the same basis as that originally contemplated, namely, on the basis of 4 per cent. The company will be formed as any other company, with the exception that the mill men will have the preference in subscribing for stock.

The special committee was continued to-night at a meeting of the Board of Governors, with orders to formulate plans for organization and to take such steps as will be necessary to place the matter before the members of the Southern Cotton Spinners' Association. It was expected that the meeting to-night would carefully consider the question of a curtailment of the output of the mills, but no action was taken on this line. A recent circular on the same question, issued by the Philadelphia yarn merchants, was, according to the sentiment of the meeting, ill-timed.

The new step taken to-night was entirely unexpected on the part of outsiders, and it was believed that this matter would not even be considered at the meeting. The committee indicate as their reason for the new scheme the lack of co-operation on the part of the commission houses of Philadelphia and New York.

TRAINS BLOCKED BY SNOW.

Baltimore and Ohio and Other Railroads Suffer from Storm.

Special to The New York Times.

FREDERICK CITY, Md., Jan. 25.—For the first time this Winter, the Baltimore and Ohio and other railroad lines are blockaded by huge snow drifts. Two locomotives and a dozen cars are in the drifts on the Baltimore and Ohio main line, between this city and Washington Junction. One car is badly damaged.

The electric road between Frederick and Middletown is tied up. Trains on all the steam lines running over the mountains are delayed. The storm on the Blue Ridge assumed the proportions of a blizzard, the drifts in the cuts being enormous.

Lost $11,000 at Poker in One Sitting.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 25.—Bookmaker Donald Mitchell, well known on Eastern tracks, on Wednesday night, is said to have lost $11,000 at poker in one sitting with Joe Harlan, formerly of Chicago, and Billy Shannon, both bookmakers. Mitchell sat down to a little game after dinner in an up-town resort. The click of the checks was heard all night long. The ante was $25, but this was a small item compared with some of the bets made while the cards were being turned. When dawn broke and the account was settled, Mitchell, it is said, was $11,000 in debt. He is reported to have paid the debt at Tanforan yesterday. Harlan has had remarkable luck at poker in the last few weeks. In three days this week, the story runs, he cleared up $15,000.

COMPOSER VERDI DEAD.

He Had Been Suffering in Milan from Congestion of the Brain.

ROME, Jan. 26.—A special dispatch to Patria announces that Verdi the composer is dead. He had been ill in Milan with congestion of the brain.

Giuseppe Verdi was born in Roncole, near Busetto, in the Duchy of Parma, Oct. 9, 1814. His father was an innkeeper and his first instruction in music was given him by an obscure organist. In 1833 he was placed under the instruction of Lavigna, a member of the orchestra of La Scala. After studying operatic composition for six years Verdi produced, in 1839, his first work, "Oberto di San Bonifazio." "Un Giorno di Regno," written in 1841, was his next work. A year later he produced "Nabucco," which established his fame.

In 1843 he produced "Lombardi," and in 1844-5 he wrote four grand operas—"Ernani," "I due Foscari," "Giovanna d'Arco," and "Alzira." For a time "Ernani" was the most popular of his works. It was first presented in Venice, in March, 1844.

"Attila" was produced in Venice in 1846 and "Macbeth" in Florence in 1847. The same year he visited London and produced there "I Masnadieri." "Il Trovatore" was written in 1853 for production in Rome, and the same year he brought forward "La Traviata." Other of his well-known works are "Un Ballo in Maschera," "Don Carlos," "Aida," "Otello," and "Falstaff." Verdi in 1859 was a member of the National Assembly of Parma and in 1861 of the Italian Parliament. In November, 1874, the King made him a Senator.

SPANISH QUEEN SHOT AT.

Bullet Penetrates the Boat While Her Majesty Is on the Royal Park Lake.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—While the Queen Regent and her children were boating in the Royal Park on the outskirts of Madrid today, says the Madrid correspondent of The Daily Express, a shot was fired from the bank and penetrated the gunwale of the boat.

The park was searched, but the assailant was not discovered.

The Queen Regent was considerably alarmed.

LAKE SHIPS FOR OCEAN TRADE.

American Shipbuilding Company Contracts to Deliver Two Big Vessels to Eastern Owners.

Special to The New York Times.

DULUTH, Minn., Jan. 25.—Steps have actually been taken under which lake shipyards will enter into competition with the yards of the Atlantic Coast.

The American Shipbuilding Company has taken a contract with a syndicate of Eastern ship owners represented by Charles E. and W. F. Peck of New York, under which they will deliver at New York next Fall two great ships for the ocean trade. These will not be combined lake and ocean boats, such as are now being turned out at lake yards, and limited in size to the length of the Canadian canals, but ships that will carry 7,000 tons each, of 450 feet length, 43 feet beam, and 35 feet depth, a very different model from what is accepted on the lakes. They will cost $450,000 each.

These ships will be built in two parts, each part launched separately on the lakes, and then the hinder part, containing the machinery, will take the forward part in tow and pass down the lakes and through the canals to Montreal or Quebec, where the two parts will be joined, and the ship will proceed on her way to New York. Each vessel will have the lake improvements combined with the ocean strength. She will have a double bottom five feet high, triple expansion engines of 3,000-horse power, and will be able to move 10 knots an hour loaded, with a draught of less than 26 feet. They have a coal capacity for 1,000 tons.

This is the first time the lakes have ever competed directly with ocean shipyards for vessels for ocean trade exclusively, except in an isolated and unconclusive case years ago. It is the claim of the lake people that they can build ships at less cost than the ocean yards of America, and this would appear to indicate as much. The lake company will push into this ocean trade as fast as it has room at its yards. These two ships will make thirty-five steel vessels the lake combine is building.

One of the Messrs. Peck was seen yesterday at the office of the firm, 58 William Street, in regard to the above dispatch. He declined to verify the story or to discuss the project of building ocean vessels on the great lakes.

"We are not ready to talk about the matter now," he said. "In fact, nothing on the subject is likely to be given out for some time."

STANDARD OIL ENTERS TEXAS.

Corporation Leases an Extensive Tract in the New Oil Region.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 25.—The Southern Pacific Company owns nearly 100,000 acres of land situated in the new oil region of East Texas. A deal has just been concluded between this company and the representatives of the Standard Oil Company, whereby the whole tract is leased to the latter corporation.

This is the first foothold that the Standard Oil Company has obtained in the new oil field, and it is a severe blow to the movement that was recently inaugurated by the independent oil producers to form a combination with a view of keeping the Standard Oil Company out of the State of Texas. A large number of prospect wells will be immediately put down on the land leased by this corporation.

The charter of the Gulf Oil and Pipe Line Company of Beaumont, with a capital stock of $500,000, was filed in the Secretary of State's Office here to-day. Its object is to build pipe lines, oil tanks, and drill oil wells in the new oil fields. The incorporators are W. E. Brice and G. A. Emery of Mason City, Iowa; W. E. J. Stratford, W. B. Stratford, and L. L. Emery of Beaumont.

BIG OIL PROPERTY SOLD.

Special to The New York Times.

PARKERSBURG, West Va., Jan. 25.—This afternoon the Bettman, Watson, and Bernheimer oil property, situated in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, West Virginia, and New York, was sold, under the order of the United States court here, to Max Drey for $270,000.

The Drey syndicate is one in which G. L. Watson is interested. Otto Horwitz of New York was the bluder for the Drey combine.

CINCINNATI-CHICAGO SHORT LINE.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Ind., Jan. 25.—The report was given currency here that the Cincinnati, Richmond and Muncie Railroad, the new Cincinnati and Chicago short line, now under construction through this city, is backed by the Illinois Central system.

It is an open secret that this system has long sought an entrance into Cincinnati, which the construction of this line would furnish it, and these facts are taken to lend color to the report. It has always been a matter of conjecture as to who is back of the Cincinnati, Richmond and Muncie, which is agreed will have traffic arrangements with one of the trunk lines.

The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton denies any connection with the new line.

SPEECHES IN PARLIAMENT.

Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour Eulogize Queen Victoria.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Both houses of Parliament yesterday afternoon received identical messages from the King and voted condolence with his Majesty on his bereavement and congratulation on his accession to the throne.

In the House of Commons, the Speaker (the Right Hon. William Court Gully) read the message from the King. It was as follows:

"The King is fully assured that the House of Commons will share the deep sorrow which has befallen his Majesty and the nation by the lamentable death of his mother, the late Queen. Her devotion to the welfare of her country and her people and her wise and beneficent rule during the sixty-four years of her glorious reign will ever be held in affectionate memory by her loyal and devoted subjects throughout the dominions of the British Empire.

"EDWARD REX."

The Right Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, First Lord of the Treasury and Government leader, in moving the address in reply to the message, said the House, in all its long history, had never met under sadder circumstances or with a clearer duty to expresss the universal sorrow extending from end to end of the empire. The sorrow was felt not only as a national, but also as an irreparable personal, loss. It was hard yet to realize the magnitude of the blow which had fallen on the country. In the whole history of the British monarchy there had never been a case in which the national grief had been so deeply seated. The end of a great epoch had come—an epoch more crowded with important changes and great developments than any period of like length in the history of the world.

Mr. Balfour went on to declare that the influence of the Crown in the British Constitution was not a diminishing, but an increasing, factor, and must continue to increase with the growth and development of the self-governing communities over the sea, which were federated by the great Britain, through the person of the sovereign, who was a living symbol of the unity of the empire. This cumulative result of a great ideal, of the great example of Queen Victoria, was the greatest the world had ever seen. Her position threw upon the Queen a life of continuous labor. Short as was the interval between her final signature of a public document and her final rest, it was yet long enough to clog the wheels of administration, as the vast mass of untouched documents awaiting the hand of the sovereign witnessed.

In moving a double response of condolence and congratulation, Mr. Balfour said they all had unfailing confidence that the great interests committed to the new sovereign were safe in his keeping. They assured him of the ungrudging support of his loyal subjects, and wished him the honor of a long life and the greatness of all blessings, to reign over a happy, contented people, and that in the eyes of posterity his reign might fitly compare with and form an appropriate sequel to the great epoch which had just drawn to a close.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Liberal leader, seconded the motion, which was adopted, the members standing.

The House then adjourned until Feb. 11.

In the House of Lords, the King's message was read by the Lord Chancellor, (Lord Halsbury.)

Lord Salisbury moved the reply in a speech full of emotion. He said that in performing the saddest duty that had ever befallen him he was only echoing the accents of sorrow, deeper than he had ever known of the nation, which had been called forth by the singular loss, which, under the dispensation of Providence, they had suffered, and their admiration of the glorious reign and splendid character of the sovereign they had lost. Being a constitutional monarch, with restricted powers, Queen Victoria had reigned by sheer force of character, by the loveableness of her disposition, and by her hold on the hearts of her subjects. The example which she set of governing by respect and love would never be forgotten, nor how much she assisted in the elevation of her people by their simple contemplation of her brilliant qualities as wife, mother, and woman. Her wonderful powers of observing with absolute strictness the limits of her powers as a constitutional sovereign and at the same time maintaining a silent and persistent influence over the actions of her Ministers inspired the greatest admiration.

Lord Salisbury said Queen Victoria always maintained a rigorous supervision over public affairs, giving her Ministers the benefit of her advice, and warning them of dangers. No Minister could disregard her views or press her to disregard them without feeling that he had incurred a great danger. She had brought the country peacefully through a great change, from old to new England. She possessed extraordinary knowledge of what people would think. He (Lord Salisbury) had always said that when he knew what the Queen thought he knew for a certainty what her subjects would think, especially the middle classes.

The King, the Premier added, came to the throne with the one great advantage of having before him the greatest example possible. He had been familiar for a generation with political and social life. He enjoyed enormous popularity, and was almost as much beloved in foreign Courts and countries. Congratulations could be tendered to him with earnest sincerity, and in the belief that he would adorn the throne and be no unworthy successor of the Queen.

Lord Kimberley, the Liberal leader in the House of Lords, and the Archbishop of Canterbury seconded the address.

Lord Kimberley said he desired to echo every word of the noble Marquis. His access to the sovereign dated back to an even earlier period than the Marquis. He had always been struck with the extraordinary consideration and kindness which marked her Majesty's conduct toward all who came in contact with her. He was simply amazed at the sound, real knowledge she possessed of all important affairs.

The Archbishop of Canterbury said the Queen's influence as a truly religious woman was far greater than the influence exercised by the wisest statesman or cleverest administrator.

The House then adjourned.

In both houses the galleries were filled with notable gatherings. Joseph H. Choate, the United States Ambassador; Henry White, the Secretary of the United States Embassy, and John R. Carter, the Second Secretary, were in the galleries of the House of Lords.

KING THANKS THE PRESIDENT.

Replies Personally to Mr. McKinley's Message of Condolence.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Following is the text of the reply which the President has received from King Edward VII. in answer to his message of condolence on the death of Queen Victoria:

Osborne, Jan. 24, 1901.

The President, White House, Washington, D. C.:

Am most grateful for your kind sympathy in the irreparable loss which the nation and I have sustained. I felt convinced that it would be shared by you and the American people. EDWARD, R.

ACTION BY CUBAN CONVENTION.

Resolution of Sympathy Passed by a Narrow Majority.

HAVANA, Jan. 25.—At to-day's session of the Cuban Constitutional Convention a resolution expressing sympathy with Great Britain on the death of Queen Victoria was introduced. It led to an animated discussion and to some bitter remarks. The resolution, which was signed by five delegates, and presented by Gen. Sanguily, requested Governor General Wood to forward to King Edward VII. an expression of the sympathy of the Cuban people.

Señor Llorente said that while personally he sympathized deeply with England it was no part of the work of the convention to adopt resolutions of sympathy.

Gen. Sanguily replied that a resolution was adopted by the convention thanking President McKinley, that another had been offered thanking Gen. Lee, and that the same procedure could be followed in this instance.

Gen. Rivera, who said that Gen. Lee was "far more deserving of a resolution than Great Britain," referred to what he called "England's acts of inhumanity in the Boer war," and said he doubted whether Great Britain would recognize the Cubans as a nation, and that the convention by adopting the resolution might lay the Cuban people open to a slight.

tude during the Spanish-American war, as that attitude had helped to free Cuba.

The convention voted the resolution of sympathy by 13 to 10.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S WILL.

It Probably Will Not Be Opened Till After the Funeral.

COWES, Isle of Wight, Jan. 26.—It is stated that Queen Victoria's will has not been opened and that, according to present arrangements, it will not be opened until after the funeral, its details being known to the royal family.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The Morning Leader says that the executors of Queen Victoria's will are Princess Beatrice, the Duke of Connaught, and Lieut. Col. Sir Fleetwood Isham Edwards, who was Keeper of her Majesty's Privy Purse from 1895, and extra Equerry to the Queen from 1888.

NOT TO FORM A PRECEDENT.

American Honors to Queen's Memory Intended to be Exceptional.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Reports are current that some of the foreign diplomats look with jealous eye on the honors paid to Queen Victoria in the half-masting of the White House and department flags. It is rumored that some of them will in future expect that similar honors shall be paid to any other sovereign who may die and that it will be considered as a ground for offense if such honors are not paid.

The currency of these rumors led to-day to a statement from an official quarter that the honors paid to Queen Victoria are not to constitute a precedent and that it is not to be expected that any such honors will be paid to any other sovereign in the lifetime of the present generation. The talk about the diplomats taking offense if the honors are not repeated when occasion arises is dismissed as absurd, and it is pointed out that to take such a position would be to make mourning compulsory on the part of the United States and dictate to it when it shall feel grieved.

The honors paid to Queen Victoria were exceptional and unprecedented, and were intended to be so. A high official is quoted as saying, when it was asserted that the United States had now established a precedent:

"Let it then stand as a precedent. When another woman has reigned for over sixty years and is as universally beloved for her goodness as Queen Victoria, let this be invoked as a precedent, but it will not be one until then."

The statement that the Mexican Legation is not in mourning for Queen Victoria is erroneous. It is in mourning, like the other legations, and will so remain until the funeral. Minister Azpiroz, therefore, did not attend the dinner at Secretary Root's house last evening, and also remained away from the dinner at Secretary Hitchcock's, although invited. He will not attend any official dinners until the period of mourning is past.

LONDON PRESS ON MR. VAN WYCK

The Globe Thinks Ignoring by Him of Queen's Death a Compliment.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The Globe, reviewing American sympathy with Great Britain, adds on the death of Queen Victoria, (referring to the refusal of Mayor Van Wyck of New York City to lower the flag over the City Hall:)

"The solitary exception to this attitude of sympathy and respect is to be regarded as a matter of congratulation rather than of regret. It is a high compliment that the memory of the good and pure Queen should be tarnished by any recognition on the part of Tammany Hall and its creatures."

The St. James's Gazette says Mr. Van Wyck "so grossly misrepresents the generous feelings of Americans as to refuse to show in New York official respect to the memory of Queen Victoria, which his countrymen are everywhere and by all means in their power displaying to the world."

Cardinal Vaughan's Tribute.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Cardinal Vaughan, Archbishop of Westminster, in the course of a very sympathetic letter to be read in the Catholic churches in London, pays an eloquent tribute to Queen Victoria, who, he says, was "an object of the greatest reverence on the part of all Catholics, from the Pope downward." He continues: "We fully and gentely share in the national sorrow, and trust and pray that the noble traditions established by the mother may be carried on and perfected by the son. The attachment of Catholics to the throne and the dynasty are beyond suspicion."

Visit to Australia Not Abandoned.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The Cowes correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says he learns that the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York will proceed to Australia as originally arranged, the King being unwilling to allow private sorrows to interfere with an undertaking of such imperial significance.

The Canadian Children's Gift.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—It is believed that one of the last acts of Queen Victoria was to signify a wish that the testimonial sent by the children of Canada should be handed over to the Royal Patriotic Commissioners, for the benefit of the widows and orphans of soldiers killed in South Africa. This desire was communicated to the Commissioners in a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the day of her Majesty's death. The testimonial consisted of the sum of £3,399, which Mr. Chamberlain forwarded to the Royal Patrotic Commissioners.

New Designation for the King?

COWES, Isle of Wight, Jan. 26.—According to a rumor circulating at Osborne, King Edward desires himself to be styled "His Imperial Majesty," in order to emphasize the fact that he is Emperor as well as King.

An Englishman Approves Mayor's Course.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Doubtless many besides the especially observant members of the Christian Endeavor Society or of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, who were received by Queen Victoria, and certainly any one who has dined with her Majesty and spent the night at Windsor, will readily admit that the atmosphere they found themselves in then forcefully indicated how thoroughly the late and justly lamented British sovereign would appreciate Mayor Van Wyck's adhesion to precedent and conservatism in the matter of flag-raising, being full of thought for others and well aware New York has not finished digesting the various foreign ingredients that help so materially to swell the population of the cosmopolitan centre of the New World, which, as the metropolis of a Republic, naturally lacks the element of royalty which tends to foster cohesiveness and unanimity of sentiment in a monarchical capital.

Anyway, the scurrilous tone of your correspondents' communications makes it abundantly clear that they, at any rate, are utterly devoid of a sense of propriety, and personally I have no doubt that, if the Mayor had thought it right to have the City Hall flag half masted, they, or some one else, would have risen up and blackguarded him for doing so.

The trouble with people of this kind seems to lie in their ignorance of conventional modes of procedure and their inability to differentiate between the official and the individual.

This lack of discrimination, of a sense of the fitness of things, of proportion, crops out in so many directions that it might almost be cited as a National characteristic. During the war with Spain, for instance, I came across a young Corporal in a volunteer regiment, who had been educated at Harvard and thought himself a very much more important person in the army than the Captain of his company, who happened to have been, if I remember aright, a Boston butcher. The only-a-butcher-don'tcherknow idea seemed to stick so tight in this youngster's gullet that it took some time to make him understand that the amount of Latin and Greek and mathematics, &c., he had absorbed at his Alma Mater had not served to build up and round out his character and give him the proper poise. It is now very generally conceded that we "sloped over" in our glorification of Admiral Dewey, and that his estimate of his achievement at Manila was infinitely saner and juster than the general public's. Therefore, let us try and steer clear of hysterical sympathy with England.

Possibly you publish the letters abusing the Mayor which appear in your issue of but is it wise to forget that in giving space to such communications you are abetting and encouraging—shall we say?—the twin brother of the despicable bounder who lays for a chance to insult a man when he is escorting his women folks to a theatre and can't resent the affront, any more than the Chief Magistrate of this city can mud impudently thrown at him wrapped up in a letter to a newspaper?

We live in such a rum world that, after what I've written, I suppose it's as well to mention for the edification of some people that I was born in England, not Ireland, and take pleasure in adding that I'm thankful to say I know lots of Americans—native-born and also of Irish, Scotch, Welsh, German, French, Italian, Russian, Spanish, and English extraction—who greatly admired the self-restraint Mayor Van Wyck displayed during the dastardly attack made upon him in connection with the American Ice Company and who keenly regret that the people who vilified him then have not had the decency to apologize since they found out they were in the wrong—which is putting it very mildly.

Thinks the Flag Should Fly.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I want to enter my protest against the impertinent writer of the first paragraph of the Topics of the Times in to-day's NEW YORK TIMES. I consider myself a "reputable" member of this community and I warmly indorse the action of the Mayor in keeping the flag at the top of the flagstaff. The one who wrote that paragraph is the "disreputable New Yorker," for he is giving utterance to what is not the truth when he says that "no reputable New Yorker could pass within sight of the building without experiencing a thrill of angry humiliation."

When THE TIMES begins to indulge in such billingsgate as that what becomes of its boasted motto? I am a political opponent of the Mayor, but I believe he did exactly right in this matter. There are many, I know, who think otherwise. That is their privilege. Let us hope Americans can have an honest difference of opinion without resorting to opprobrious epithets. I am proud of the Americanism that keeps the flag right up to the top!

The flag was not lowered on the death of the President of France, our sister republic, without the aid of whose gallant people we would never have achieved our National liberties, but it is to be lowered in mourning for the monarch who ruled over our old-time foe? When these things come to pass, and we find Bishop Potter and the members of the Church Club drinking a toast "To the honor of the King," while Sir John Hay toadies to British opinion, many thinking Americans are beginning to wonder "where we are at," and if the love of republicanism and republican institutions is suffering any impairment. In the light of what we know of the immorality of those who bleed their people under the divine right of kings," Queen Victoria was an admirable woman, but let us not forget that she represented class government and inherited rights over the people, and with these stalwart Americanism can have no sympathy. Ought Not to Have Been Expected.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reading the many letters from your readers censuring the Mayor for his persistent refusal to half-mast the flag on the City Hall as a mark of respect to a great and good woman, it seems to me that they are doing Mr. Van Wyck an injustice. It is unfair to expect even such a slight thing as an act of courtesy from one who has no knowledge of its meaning. If this matter, however, had been within the scope of his official duty, we have no reason to doubt that our Mayor (of whom we are so proud) would have risen to the occasion; provided, of course, that he had received his instructions from Mr. Croker.

Thinks This Allusion Might Apply.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Apropos of Mayor Van Wyck and his bull-headed refusal to half-mast the American flag on the City Hall of New York—thank God, the only place in the country to form an exception to the rule—does not James Russell Lowell's allusion, under great provocation, to the name of the first King of Sparta, also apply? The first King of Sparta was Eudamidas.

Draws the Line at the Mayor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter of "Potomac" in the paper of to-day is not accurate. While we are proud to claim Augustus Van Wyck on account of his education at the University of North Carolina, his long residence in the South, and his Southern wife, we beg to be excused from any responsibility for the Mayor. Thinks the Mayor Right.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Let us rejoice that for once our Mayor is right! To be sure, he is only technically right! To be sure, every one of the million of people who have looked at that flag in the last few days would have been glad to have seen the flag at half-mast! But for once he is right! That is something!

Answer to a Correspondent.

"HISTORY": The true style and title of King Edward VII. is "Edward, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India." The belief that the rulers of Great Britain also claim to be rulers of France and Navsrre is a very common one. Why the "Navarre" ever crept into the legend is a mystery, but the Kings of England wrote themselves as Kings of France up to Jan. 1, 1801, when the reference to France was discontinued by royal proclamation. William the Conqueror, curiously enough, had for style and title only the words "Willielmus [sic] Rex Anglorum." His immediate successors styled themselves Kings of England and Aquitaine, while Edward III. first laid claim in his title to the rulership of France. Henry V. adopted the title of "Rex Angliae Haeres et Regens Franciae," while James I. was "King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland." It is possible that the idea that Navarre was included in the Kings' titles may have resulted from the merging of the actual crowns of France and Navarre when Henri IV. succeeded to the throne of Henri III.

Englishwoman Scores the Mayor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We Englishwomen are so angry at the refusal of Mayor Van Wyck to place the flags on the New York Municipal Buildings at half-mast on the death of our beloved Queen Victoria that no words can be found strong enough to aptly express our indignation.

After the splendid manner in which America has behaved to her sister country in her great bereavement, after the prompt and sincere message of condolence sent by the President, and the marks of respect shown by nearly every large city in the United States, Mr. Van Wyck's action (notwithstanding his reasons given) can only be regarded as a direct insult from an individual, not only to the memory of a woman who was acknowledged by every civilized nation in the world to be one of the best women and one of the most illustrious sovereigns who ever occupied a throne, but as a personal insult to every loyal English man and woman in the United States!

I trust that you will kindly make room for these few lines in your valuable paper that Mayor Van Wyck may know what opinion the British Nation has of him.

PLANS FOR BIG CHICAGO HOTEL.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—Chicago may have within the next two years a new and immense hotel, which in size and luxurious appointments will rival New York's famous Waldorf-Astoria. Plans, which have not yet been brought to a focus, provide for the building and equipping of such a structure by a syndicate of wealthy men who think that Chicago has "not the sort of hotel that appeals to the extremely wealthy."

Rumors concerning the new hostelry have it that it will be of greater size than the Waldorf-Astoria. The structure is to be erected upon land owned or controlled by Gen. Henry Strong, and, while it is expected to surpass the New York hotel in many respects, the prices to be charged for accommodations will not be so large.

Had it not been for the labor troubles in Chicago the syndicate having the scheme in hand would have pushed it before this. The membership of the syndicate is

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE ALUMNI BANQUET

Gov. Odell Among the Guests and Speakers.

Ex-Judge Cohen Talks of the Value of the Tuck School—Dr. Tucker Discusses Modern Education.

The New York alumni of Dartmouth College gave their thirty-seventh annual dinner last night in Delmonico's. The dinner was one of the most successful and largely attended in the history of the association, and the guests drank to the health of Alma Mater, applauded the speakers' praise of Daniel Webster, the college's greatest alumnus, and told reminiscences of their college days till the morning hours.

Ex-Judge William N. Cohen, President of the association, was the toastmaster. Above his head, tastefully draped on the dark-red wall, was an enormous United States flag, under which hung an oil painting of Webster. With Judge Cohen at table were Gov. Odell, Congressman Samuel W. McCall, Judge Edward W. Hatch, Prof. Charles Darwin Adams, Thomas L. Greene, Dr. William J. Tucker, President of Dartmouth College; Congressman David J. Foster of Vermont, ex-Gov. Frank S. Black, Jefferson Clark, and Prof. John H. Wright of Harvard University. Among the other members of the association present were Dr. Josiah W. Barstow, Major James C. Cooley, Gilman H. Tucker, Horace Russell, Dr. Charles L. Dana, Bishop Leonard of Utah, Dr. Henry L. Silver, Charles R. Miller, Thomas W. Proctor of Boston, and Frank S. Streeter of Concord.

Gov. Odell made his appearance just as the speechmaking was about to begin. The alumni rose and gave him the Dartmouth yell.

In his introductory speech Mr. Cohen referred to the new Tuck School of Administration and Finance at the college. Its first year, he said, marks a new course in college training. "As a Nation," he continued, "we have grown so great in industry and enterprise that it becomes necessary to place the business education of young men on a high plane and scientific basis; this we have been enabled to do by the rare judgment and princely munificence of our generous alumnus, Edward A. Tuck."

"For nearly forty years we have met together in the Empire State to eat, drink, and be merry over our college days. And in all that time we have never paid any corporation or other tax to the State Controller. Our appreciation of such hospitality and protection could not be better shown than by making the head of the State the chief guest of the evening. We modestly assert that we always do the 'correct thing.' For proof, I point to that fine specimen of manhood at my right, who awoke one morning after his inauguration to find himself famous as a statesman of original and sound ideas, who could indicate to the legislature in vigorous English simple means to accomplish the ends in view. He will speak to us of the State and education, and we are sure to hear words of wisdom."

THE GOVERNOR'S REMARKS.

The Governor said that it was the course of a wise man to refrain from doing what he was incapable of, and, therefore, having declined numerous other invitations to speak, he would not make a speech on this occasion, even though he were down to respond to the toast "The State of New York and Education."

"Ex-Judge Cohen," said the Governor, "is by appointment the legal adviser to the Republican Party, and in that capacity he has brought me here. He has also drafted all sorts of bills, some good and some bad." [Cries of, "Mostly good."]

"That may be the fact," went on the Governor, "but one in particular has gotten me into a whole lot of trouble. But as the Judge usually succeeds in what he undertakes, I have found it to be in the regular line to be here to-night and respond with an address to the 'taffy' he has lavished upon me.

"I have just left a dinner where the toastmaster excused me by saying that I had never made a speech before. But, knowing that I had to make one here, I looked up the encyclopedia to find out something about Dartmouth. I am learning a whole lot about education. I have learned that we have more scholars and also more lunatics in the State, and that it costs about twice as much to maintain the latter as the former. And as Judge Cohen has told me, that I would meet here many prominent bankers and business men, I hope that I may be able to impress upon them some of my ideas in regard to taxation, and to show them that there seems to have been extraordinary lavishness in the care of the insane and extraordinary parsimony in regard to education.

"What little I learned and what little I know of college life I have gained in Columbia, so you will pardon me if I say that Columbia is ahead of Dartmouth. But you have a great alumni. Your Ambassador to England—" [Shouts of "Oh, oh, you mean Rufus Choate!"] "Ah," Gov. Odell continued, with a smile, "that is it; is it? Well, you must pardon me. That comes of my not reading my encyclopaedia carefully. But the only Choate I ever knew is the present Choate.

"Now, I have not talked much about education. I am going to leave that to Mr. Black, who knows more about it than I do."

The President of Dartmouth College, Dr. Tucker, responded to the toast, "The College in the New Century." After the guests had toasted his health in a long draught, he talked about the endeavor to make modern education a manageable process. Three facts were cited as marking the present educational era—the sudden increase of the intellectual wealth of the world, the advance in the standard of work in all departments, and the growing freedom of the individual.

Modern education, the speaker said, could not afford to ignore a single one of these points. It must be remembered, too, that there has been a great advance in the requirements for success in business and affairs, and that "every great business has plenty of idle money to invest in the trained mind, if it can find it." When education was a routine to which the individual subjected himself, or was subjected, the process was simple, but now it was to be held in mind that the individual must be reckoned with, estimated as to his capacity and tendency, stimulated and trusted.

"The individual," said the President, "must be honorably consulted, even if his opinion is not complete and final. In view of this fact, I believe in the need of a certain maturity in college students. Choice is a matter of judgment, and judgment is not a product of immaturity. The art of education is the same that it has always been—only more difficult under the conditions to which I have referred, namely, the art of helping men 'to see straight and to think clear.'"

The next speaker was ex-Gov. Frank S. Black, in introducing whom ex-Judge Cohen became reminiscent.

"About four years ago," he said, "I made an effort to secure Gov. Black's attendance at our annual dinner. He did not come. That was one mistake of that year. Another and a greater was that he forfeited the respect of this community by one appointment to the Supreme Court. But with time even deep wounds are healed and grave errors forgotten. I ventured again and again to bring our distinguished alumnus to our board, and at last, from sheer exhaustion, he confessed to the cause of his unwillingness. 'Cohen,' said the Governor, 'I must really tell you why I do not come. From the time I am invited to speak at a dinner until the time my speech is delivered, my appetite is steadily on the decline, my usually sound sleep becomes insomnia, my wife and children observe my restlessness, and ask me anxiously the cause of my distress, and I tell them what I now tell you. It is the terror and the stage fright of making a speech of any kind.'"

The toastmaster also made a comparison between the ex-Governor and Daniel Webster, after which Mr. Black talked for a few minutes. His speech consisted wholly of eulogy on the character and ability of Webster.

STUDENTS AND THE FACULTY.

Prof. Charles Darwin Adams of the Greek department of the college followed Mr. Black. His subject was "The Faculty." He spoke of the increase of responsibility that had come to the Faculty through the recent growth of the college, but said that the introduction of the elective system had served to bring the teacher and the taught closer together, despite the increase in the number of students, for the reason that the wider pursuance of higher studies had made the pupils and the Faculty better friends by means of an increasing number of common interests.

Jefferson Clark, an alumnus of Amherst College, was the speaker who, according to talk from the standpoint of other institutions than Dartmouth. He said that, if he were asked to compare Dartmouth and Amherst, he would say that Dartmouth was Webster and Amherst was Beecher. "The differences and similarities between the two colleges and the two men are the same." Referring to Dartmouth's new School of Administration and Finance, he said:

"This new enterprise will be watched with interest. One of its objects is the preparation for the administering of municipal government. If that object is attained it is safe to say that New York City can use the whole product of the school for some time, provided only that Dartmouth will provide a scheme for getting hold of the offices. This may reconcile Dartmouth to the dual power of removal."

Congressman McCall, introduced as the man who wanted to reduce the Porto Rican tariff to nothing, said that he had not come here to talk politics, but simply to get away from them. He told how many of Dartmouth's graduates had attained prominent positions in the Nation's affairs, mentioning particularly Webster, Choate, Stevens, and Chase.

Congressman David J. Foster talked about "The College Man in Public Life."

"The college man," he said, "lives for four years in a miniature democracy. He becomes grounded in its principles, permeated with its spirit. And aside from the positive instructions of the college, no better training can be found for the young man whose ambition is to lead the way toward the Parliament of man, the federation of the world."

After referring to the glories of the past century and of the one to come, Mr. Foster said that the duty of the college man was "to hold aloft the torch of human freedom, as seen in this land in the past century, as a light to every American citizen." He continued:

"So long as he does this, we need have no fear for the future, no apprehension of danger, even should we find that the letter of the Constitution does not follow the flag. For wherever that proud banner floats there will be found the spirit of the Constitution, the spirit of true democracy, and government by and for the people."

Prof. John A. Wright, class of '73, spoke to "The College Professor as a Working Man." Prof. Wright, who during his term at Dartmouth College was a great favorite among the students, and whose house was a social centre, was received with great acclaim by the alumni. He rehearsed the demands made upon the college professor.

"He must," said the speaker, "besides discharging his functions as a teacher, serve that college in many capacities—as a minister to perfect souls, as a judge and jury in cases of discipline, as a legislator, and as an employment agent. If ambitious and alert, he attempts authorship or editorship, and by making additions to his science seeks to prove his title to his portion.

"Administrative and committee duties consume his spare hours. Too great a demand is made on his time; he should not be called upon for more than ten hours a week of teaching. Such a reduction would enhance the efficiency of his work. The college aims to make men thorough scholars, and the ideal college professor should possess stainless character, broad and productive scholarship, skill in teaching, tact in dealing with men as individuals. He should have good morals, judgment, sympathies with various types of mind and characters, and above all a sense of humor. Dartmouth has many such men on her rolls."

Before the alumni sat down to table there was a business meeting, at which officers for the following year were elected. They were: Charles M. Hough, President; Dr. Henry M. Silver, Benjamin S. Harmon, and Jordan J. Rollins, Vice Presidents; Albert A. Wheat, Secretary; Hamilton Gibson, Corresponding Secretary; Herbert R. Thurston, Treasurer; Addison F. Andrews, Musical Director.

Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity.

The Alumni of Mu Chapter of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity of the College of the City of New York gave a dinner at the Chapter House, 9 West Thirty-first Street, last evening. At the conclusion of the dinner, Roswell D. Burchard, yachting editor of Outing, favored those present with a description of his travels through Egypt and up the Nile, giving special attention to the description of the temples of Karnak and Lusor at Thebes.

Alpha Chi Omega Fraternity.

The sixth annual dinner of the Alpha Chi Omega Fraternity was held at the Royalton, on West Fifty-fourth Street, last evening. Among those present were the members of the new chapter recently instituted at Columbia, John H. Thompson, Irving Bachelder, T. B. Phillips, and the Rev. Charles H. Fenn.

BIG SHEET STEEL DEAL.

American Combine Said to be Negotiating with Carnegie for Large Contract.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 25.—Negotiations are nearly concluded between the American Sheet Steel combine and the Carnegie Steel Company for a large contract for steel, a consideration being that the Carnegie Company will abandon its plans for the erection of a great sheet mill, preparations for which have reached an advanced stage. Little could be learned of the negotiations to-day further than that action had been taken.

None of the officials of the Carnegie Company could be seen, but the information was verified by an official of the Sheet Trust. If such a contract is made it will run for a period of not less than five years, and will be of sufficient magnitude to take most of the product of the steel company in sheet bars. This would be to the extent of $4,000,000 a year, and perhaps more. It is said a contract involving at least $25,000,000 will be made.

TO ARBITRATE LAND DISPUTE.

Litigation in Alabama Between University and Sloss-Sheffield Co. May Be Settled.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 25.—The litigation between the State University and the Sloss-Sheffield Iron and Steel Company over 4,000 acres of university coal lands in Walker County, sold to the Sloss-Sheffield Company by Gov. Johnston for $60,000 last year, is about to be settled, a board of arbitration having been named by the two parties to suggest a basis of settlement.

The plan proposed is this: The Sloss-Sheffield Company to give back the lands, and the State of Alabama to return the purchase money; then both parties are to exchange contiguous lands so as to "body up" the possessions of each. This plan will probably carry. The sale to the Sloss-Sheffield Company was declared illegal by the Trustees, and action filed to have it declared void. This action will remain in abeyance pending the arbitration.

COL. A. M. SHOOK RETIRED.

Was Second Vice President of Tennessee Coal and Iron Company.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 25.—Col. A. M. Shook, Second Vice President of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, has been retired, his office being abolished by the Board of Directors at a meeting held in New York on Monday. Col. Shook himself to-day confirmed the report. It created quite a sensation in industrial circles, Col. Shook being very wealthy and strongly identified with the Tennessee Company in its latest venture in steel-making at Ensley.

It is reported that the Directors are not altogether pleased with the construction of the Ensley steel plant, but whether this had anything to do with Col. Shook's retirement is not known.

ZANESVILLE, Ohio, Jan. 25.—Turner A. Beall of New York, representing the Eastern Tube Company, to-day signed a contract for the erection of a million-dollar tube plant in this city. The plant is to have a capacity of 800 tons of finished product a day, and will give employment to 1,500 men. It is to be in operation by next June.

Chicago Street Railway Directors.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—Shareholders of the West and North Chicago Street Railroad Companies met this morning for the election of Directors. As the two companies named are under lease to the Union Traction Company, the meetings were purely formal and the elections as well, the traction company virtually naming the officials. North Chicago Directors are John A. Rose, Harry F. Kegan, Markham B. Orde, Carlos E. Cook, and Frederick E. Smith. West Chicago elected as Directors the five who fill the same positions for North Chicago, and in addition Lewis R. Altemus. Mr. Rose will be elected Presi-

WATER FAMINE IN BRONX

Residents Say the Situation Is Becoming Desperate.

Not Enough Water Available at the Hebrew Infant Asylum to Bathe the Children.

The Borough of the Bronx is face to face with a water famine that promises to be more serious and far reaching than the one its residents had to contend with several months ago, when Croton water was almost at a premium. In the majority of the flat-houses north of the Harlem River water cannot be obtained from the faucets above the second floor, and then only in very small quantities at certain hours of the day and night. Pumps are necessary to force the water above the second floors and even then at times there is not enough water to pump.

The hospitals and institutions are particular sufferers from the famine, and in one instance, which shows clearly the condition of affairs and just how serious the matter is, sufficient water could not be obtained on several occasions of late to give the inmates of the Hebrew Infant Asylum, at One Hundred and Sixty-third Street and Eagle Avenue, their daily bath. That water is as scarce in the north end of the borough as it is in the south and middle sections is shown by the fact that a delegation of property owners from Bedford Park waited upon Mayor Van Wyck and stated that at times they had hard work getting enough water to wash themselves with or to make bread.

Any number of complaints have been received from residents along Boston, Trinity, and Forest Avenues, which are particularly high ground. At the five-story flat houses 1,105-97-99 Boston Avenue, the janitor stated that it was necessary to pump every drop of water used by the tenants, otherwise none could be obtained from the faucets above the first floor. Mrs. Muller, who is in charge of the row of flats from 1,150 to 1,168 Boston Avenue, stated yesterday that she had no end of trouble about the water, that none could be obtained above the third floor, it being necessary to carry it to the floors above.

Mrs. J. Abarbanell, Superintendent of the Hebrew Infant Asylum, at One Hundred and Sixty-third Street and Eagle Avenue, when interviewed yesterday, said:

"The water question has become a very serious one with us, for on several occasions of late we have found it impossible to obtain enough water, even by pumping it, to give the children their daily bath. We have 150 of them here, whose ages range from several months up to five years, and one of the strictest rules laid down by the Board of Managers is that every child shall have a bath daily. But if we can't get the water we can't give them a bath.

"Of late we have been forced to use the water from the fire tank, but this is dangerous, for at times we cannot pump enough water to fill it. Another bad feature is that if a child is taken with a convulsion or any sickness that requires the immediate use of water in any part of the upper floors we are obliged to rush down one, two, or three flights of stairs, as the case may be, to obtain it. This should not be, especially in an institution of this kind. Another thing, we are obliged to keep the gas engine going continually to pump water, which is a heavy added expense, and even then we can't get enough water."

Mathew Anderson, a prominent member of the North Side Board of Trade, said: "The complaint about the scarcity of water is general throughout the borough. Water is growing scarcer in this district every day, for the reason that the supply is nowhere equal to the demand. We are getting only a trifle more water than was supplied in 1875, when the population was only 36,194, while to-day it is over 200,000.

"There is also a great waste of water at this time of the year, owing to the fact that many persons let the water run all night from the faucets in order to keep the pipes from freezing. Some action should be taken at once by the authorities to meet this emergency, as it is becoming more serious every hour."

Daniel A. McCormick, Secretary of the Bedford Park Taxpayers' Association, says that in the hilly parts of the section water is very scarce and that the object of the delegation which called on Mayor Van Wyck was to obtain some temporary relief until such time as the Board of Aldermen was ready to vote favorably on a measure appropriating $80,000 for a pumping station in the vicinity. He also stated that the property owners had submitted several propositions for temporary relief to Commissioner of Water Supply Dalton and his chief engineer, Mr. Birdsall, who rejected them as not being feasible.

PRAISE FOR HENRY W. HARDON.

Many Persons Thank Him for Causing the Arrest of a Spitter in a Car.

Henry W. Hardon of 56 Wall Street, who recently caused the arrest of Henry Nearman of 240 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street on a charge of expectorating in an elevated train, in violation of the health laws, has been warmly commended for his action by many residents of this city who have written to Mr. Hardon indorsing the stand that he has taken in the case.

A physician writes thanking him for his courage and public spirit, wishing him success and many imitators. A member of the clergy has written a similar letter, in which he says: "You have earned the gratitude of all decent people."

Another letter is from a banker, who says that he wishes to add his thanks and acknowledgment to the many who have recognized the public benefit Mr. Hardon has conferred, which he thinks will have a widespread influence toward abating the evil.

The President of a bank has written to Mr. Hardon saying that he deserves the thanks of every man and woman in the land, and he believes that if others would emulate his excellent example the vulgar and dangerous nuisance of public spitting would be lessened, if

WEST SIDE REPUBLICANS

Gov. Odell a Guest of Honor at the Annual Meeting.

Executive Talks of the Great Responsibility That Rests Upon Him—Queen's Memory Honored.

The annual dinner of the West Side Republican Club, which was held at the Waldorf-Astoria last evening, partook of the nature of a Republican lovefeast. About 400 members of the club were present. The guests of honor were Gov. Benjamin B. Odell, Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, Judge Henry Hawland, Curtis Guild, the Rev. G. E. Strobridge, Samuel T. Maddox, Robert G. Morris, Edward B. Thomas, William H. Douglas, George R. Bidwell, George W. Clarke, William S. Bennet, John Elderkin, Major H. K. Bird, Judge James A. Blanchard, Julius H. Seymour, C. B. McLaughlin, John C. Coleman, and J. W. Houghton. The Astor Gallery, where the tables were set, was beautifully decorated with smilax and flags. In the boxes looking down on the scene were many parties of ladies, who were interested spectators of the events of the evening.

Justice John Proctor Clarke was the toastmaster. In his introductory speech he referred to the recent Democratic campaign as one of sneers and criticism. He quoted ex-President Cleveland's statement that "the Republic would never be what it was," and provoked much laughter. His statement that the schoolhouse would follow the flag, whether the Constitution did or not, was much applauded.

In conclusion the toastmaster proposed the health of President McKinley and of Vice President-elect Roosevelt. These toasts were drunk standing. While the diners were on their feet Justice Clarke asked them to drink to the memory of that good woman, Queen Victoria.

The first speaker of the evening, Gov. Odell, was then introduced. When Gov. Odell rose to address the assembly he was greeted with cheers. He spoke as follows:

"When I came here this evening I was asked if I had ever suffered with stage fright, and the gentleman on my left [Justice Clarke] replied that I had never made a speech before. This is about true. It was this West Side Republican Club that opened the campaign after the Saratoga Convention. It was done in a businesslike manner. We fought the battle and we won because we had with us men who broke away from their old party affiliations because they believed that we represented the principles that were right.

"We owe to them something more than empty promises. We owe to them what I am trying to give them at Albany—an economical, efficient, honest Government. You have before you here in New York City a greater battle. You have against you an army united, composed of men who do not easily sunder their party affiliations, who are held together by spoils and office.

"If we are to beat them we must meet them not only with a solid party, but with the union of all who believe in honest administration. I have no sympathy with those who hope to win a victory through the faults of their opponents. I believe that the Republican Party should fight its battle on a higher plane, that we should give better government to this city by legislative enactment, rather than rely on the mistakes of our opponents.

"There are men who come to me and say, 'Under this Police bill you will make yourself a Police Commissioner of New York City.' I reply, 'I do not so regard the situation.' I am willing to assume any responsibility that my friends the Republican majority in the Legislature choose to put upon me. I am not looking for an easy job. I am looking to administer the laws as I find them on the statute books and as they may be amended by such action as may be wise by the Republicans in the Legislature.

"I fear I am worrying you by my expression of the great responsibility which I feel as the Governor of this great State of New York. I feel a great interest in everything that interests you here in this city, and I believe in and wish to give this city as great a measure of home rule as is consistent with the proper administration of the laws, as applied to the whole State."

The next speaker was Curtis Guild of Boston. That portion of his speech which was received with the greatest enthusiasm was in reference to the political position of ex-President Grover Cleveland and ex-Secretary of State Richard Olney. He said in part:

"Certain honorable gentlemen, Mr. Olney, who believes we were mistaken in promising Cuba her independence, Mr. Cleveland, whose courage and patriotism were so well displayed in the Venezuela message and the prompt repression of arson and murder in the Chicago riots, are appealing to the 'rank and file' of the Democratic Party to renounce Bryanism and to return to them.

"The vision even of the best of men may be obscured by old association and early prejudice. The Democratic Party has changed its candidates and the wording of its platform, not its principles. Democracy, genuine Democracy, as expressed by votes in Congress, has not deserted Mr. Cleveland. Mr. Cleveland has deserted Democracy. The great mass of his party never supported Mr. Cleveland as a legislator, only as a distributor of patronage.

"Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Olney logically belong with the political party to which they were forced again and again to turn for support when they were in power, and who gave that support without patronage because decency and good government demanded it. Has not the time come when these two statesmen (and they are statesmen) and men like them can squarely recognize that the place for their activity is not outside but inside the Republican Party?"

The Rev. G. E. Strobridge of Stamford, Conn., followed. He recited the history of the Republican Party during the past year, and in regard to the issues of the day, he said:

"We ought never to have signed the Declaration of Independence unless we were willing to take the consequences. The United States is by virtue of that document a world power. The shafts of ridicule aimed at William McKinley fall at his feet like bouquets of admiration." Referring to the prediction of Macaulay that universal suffrage would wreck the United States during the twentieth century, he said that this prediction was made twenty-five years before the Republican Party came into existence.

One of the most stirring speeches of the evening was made by Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, ex-Minister to Spain, who was loudly cheered when he rose to speak. Gen. Woodford began by saying that Queen Victoria had done more than all the statesmen in England to keep peace between that country and the United States during the civil war. In regard to the Philippine Islands he said:

"Whether the Constitution follows the flag or not, or whatever the Supreme Court may decide, the civilization and the progress for which the flag stands will remain. I know not whether the flag by the rules of logic ought to have gone to Hawaii or not. Gen. Harrison can tell you more about that.

"I know not whether our troops ought to have gone to the Philippines or not, but if they had not gone there they could not have gone to Pekin in time to effect the rescue of the legationers and the United States would not stand to-day as the exemplar of Christian patriotism."

At the conclusion of Gen. Woodford's speech the diners gave three cheers for him, and then three cheers for the Republican Party.

BIRMINGHAM REALTY CLAIM.

Settlement of Morris-Elyton Case Clears All Dispute to the Title.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 25.—The settlement of the case of Morris vs. Elyton Land Company yesterday removes all shadow from the title of the Birmingham Realty Company to its $4,000,000 worth of Birmingham property.

The realty company is the successor of the Elyton Company, and the latter the successor of the Elyton Land Company, the founder of Birmingham and the original company. Morris was the last of the holders of stock in the original company not consenting to the transfer to the Elyton Company, and was of that class of security holders with reference to whom the Alabama Supreme Court decided that the transfer was null and void.

The compromise of this case makes the various transfers legal and enables the realty company to forward, develop, and dispose of its properties after troublesome litigation of seven to eight years.

ELECTION BILL MUDDLE.

Senator Raines to Modify His Measure and Remove Some Defects.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Senator Raines will attempt on Monday night to clear up the muddle on the elections bills. The bills are now two in number, one introduced by Senator Stranahan and the other amendments to the general election law introduced by Senator Raines. Senator Stranahan's bill provided for appointment of an election board by the Mayor of New York, the board to be bi-partisan, but the objection raised to that bill was that it was not drawn closely enough to compel the Mayor to appoint from the Republican and Democratic Parties.

To Senator Raines's bill the objection was raised that, in addition to providing for an election bureau, it also contemplated changing the election districts by compelling redistricting whenever a district showed over 400 votes.

That feature of Senator Raines's bill which provided for election of the bi-partisan board was commended, because it took the matter out of the Mayor's hands, but a question arose as to the constitutionality of declaring two minority party men elected to the office. Senator Raines has prepared amendments to the bill which it is believed will meet all objections.

The amendment regarding re-districting will provide that on or before the first day of July in every year the Board of Elections of the City of New York shall divide the election districts in such cities which contain more than 600 electors, as shown by the registration of electors for the preceding year into election districts which shall be compact in form and shall contain as near as possible 500 electors, as shown by the registration of electors the preceding year.

Such election districts so established in the City of New York shall not again be changed until at some general election the number of registered electors therein shall exceed 600, except where changes are made necessary by a change in the boundaries of Congressional, Senate, or Assembly districts or ward lines, provided, however, that when the number of registered electors in any election district shall for two consecutive years be less than 250, such district may be consolidated with contiguous election districts in the discretion of the Board of Elections.

In order to meet the objection that a person receiving a minority vote cannot be declared elected, Senator Raines provides that each political party, as defined by the election law, shall have the right to nominate two qualified persons as candidates for Commissioners of Elections, and the two persons so nominated by the political party who shall receive the greatest number of votes shall be the Commissioners of Elections. The two electors receiving the second highest number of votes, as shown by the official canvass, shall be appointed by the city Board of Canvassers to be the other two members of the Board of Elections. No elector shall vote for more than two candidates for the office of Commissioner of Elections, and any ballot that shall contain more than two votes for such office shall be void as to that office, and shall not be counted.

TO EXTEND PAROLE SYSTEM.

Bill Proposed to Apply It to the State Prisons—A Convict's View.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—A bill will be introduced in the Legislature within a few days extending the parole system to the State prisons. The bill will provide for a State Parole Board, and will amend the present parole law so that all prisoners committed to State prisons for terms other than for life shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Board of Parole; that the board shall be authorized to parole such convicts in its discretion under proper restrictions; and providing that in the execution of this law the definite term for which the convict has been sentenced shall be treated as the maximum term for which he can be imprisoned.

The proposed legislation is indorsed by the State Superintendent of Prisons and the State Prison Commission. The convicts confined in the State prisons are taking a deep interest in the parole question. Hundreds of letters have been written by them on it. Convict No. 25,673 of Auburn has written a long letter, from which the following is an extract:

"The man under parole is given a chance to fight destiny and conquer fate, better equipped for the contest than before he entered prison. To be eligible for parole it is necessary, day after day, for a stipulated length of time, to exercise the strictest surveillance over actions, and even thoughts. This is imperative, or else there is danger of an unthinking action leading to an unintentional infraction of the rules of discipline.

"This constant watchfulness over self promotes the growth of qualities of character that once developed stamp the man for what he is, not for what he has been. The incentive to persistent efforts along these lines is the same as influences the purposes of men in many of life's affairs—the prospect of a reward."

TO STOP EXORBITANT CHARGES.

Bill to Enable the Controller to Cut Rates Above Market Price.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Assemblyman Morgan to-day introduced a bill the purpose of which is to shut off the perquisites which certain New York office holders are said to enjoy from the making of agreements for work or for furnishing supplies involving an amount for which no contract is required. The bill is the outgrowth of a recommendation of Controller Coler, who has shown that the city is out many thousands of dollars every year through the payment of excessive wages upon work or for supplies for which officials of the city are allowed to make private agreements.

Some of the bills which have been turned in under these private agreements have been so excessive upon their face that the Controller has at various times held them up, but he was finally forced to pay them because the law authorized the making of the agreements by the officials without any check upon them.

The bill introduced by Mr. Morgan to-day provides that no agreement for work or supplies, involving an amount for which no contract is required; for the payment of wages or of prices in excess of the current market rates at the time of the agreement, shall be valid or binding; provided, that all such agreements shall be subject to revision or reduction by the Controller, and when reduced by him to the existing market price that they shall be valid and binding.

The bill gives to Controller Coler the power to see to it that the city is not charged exorbitant rates for supplies in order that a dishonest official who has the purchasing power may get a "rake-off" from the dealer.

THE STEVENS PURE BEER BILL.

Examination of Breweries and Bottling Works Is Provided For.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Assemblyman Stevens of Franklin to-day re-introduced his Pure Beer bill of last year, which caused a deadlock and an all-night session of the Senate last Winter. The bill differs in some respects from the Burnett bill, which includes corn and wheat as ingredients in the manufacture of pure beer.

The Stevens bill provides that the ingredients to be used in the manufacture of beer, ale, or porter must not be other than pure hops, pure extract of hops, pure barley, pure yeast, pure water, and pure rice. In case of other substances being used, the casks, kegs, barrels, bottles, packages, or other receptacles containing such product shall be labeled with the word "inferior."

A new feature of the bill makes it the duty of the State Excise Commissioner, or his deputies, agents, or employes, to make periodical visits and examinations of all breweries, manufactories, or bottling works where beer, ale, or porter is brewed, manufactured, or bottled, and also examine the books. For this purpose an appropriation of $5,000 is asked for.

Senator Maiby will introduce the bill in the Senate.

MISCELLANEOUS BILLS.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—The following bills were introduced to-day in the Assembly:

Mr. T. P. SULLIVAN—Repealing the act which permits the teaching of physiology, hygiene, and narcotics in the public schools; also providing for the election of School Directors in towns and prescribing their powers and duties.

Mr. M. E. LEWIS—Appropriating $25,000 for a lift bridge over the Erie Canal at the village of Fairport.

Mr. VACHERON—Amending the code of criminal procedure by providing that counsel assigned by the Court to defend prisoners charged with murder, first degree, shall not charge more than $500 for services, and not more than $50 in any other case.

Mr. PLANK—Prescribing the qualifications of persons eligible for the office of School Commissioner, who must hold either a college certificate, a State certificate, Normal School diploma, or a Commissioner's first grade certificate.

Mr. VACHERON—Repealing the act which provides for the appointment of a Clerk in the Surrogate's Office of Queens County, whose duties are to look after the collateral inheritance tax.

Mr. BRILL—Providing that water companies in small villages not incorporated under the laws of the State shall be exempt from all assessments and taxes, where the expenses of the water system are defrayed by an assessment and tax upon all of the taxable property within the bonds of said incorporated village.

Mr. HATCH—Exempting laundry corporations from taxation under the general taxation law.

Mr. DE GRAW—Repealing Section 41 of the penal code relating to candidates filing election expenses.

These bills were introduced in the Senate:

FOREST, FISH, AND GAME COMMISSION—Adding a section to the fish and game law "that whenever possession of fish or game is prohibited, reference is made equally to fish and game taken without the State."

Senator MALBY—Amending the highway law to remove from Commissioners of Highways power to rebuild and repair highways and bridges where such repairs or work costs more than $2,000; the powsr in that case shall be vested in town boards.

To Regulate Installment Insurance.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Assemblyman Juengst to-day introduced a bill which adds a new section to the existing law relating to insurance companies. It provides that any company issuing policies the premiums on which are paid or collected in weekly installments shall not withhold from any agent any money due him as commission or salary nor charge against his account any lapse of forfeiture of any policy that has been in effect for one year, or on which premium dues have been paid for one year. Nor shall any such company withhold money due an agent because of the failure of any person to pay such agent money due as premiums upon any policy. No such company shall declare forfeited any such policy by reason of non-payment of premiums until such holder or assignee has been notified to that effect. The failure of an agent to turn in money which he has collected as a premium shall not justify forfeiture without notice.

For Free Textbooks in Schools.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Assemblyman T. P. Sullivan to-day introduced a bill providing for free textbooks in the schools of this State. The bill provides that the Boards of Education may purchase textbooks and other necessary school supplies out of the school fund of the district, and, when so procured, the necessary books and school supplies shall be furnished free of cost for use in the schools. Such textbooks shall not be superseded by the purchase of any other book within a period of five years from the time of such purchase, except upon a three-fourths vote of the Board of Education. After Sept. 1, 1901, all textbooks and necessary school supplies shall be purchased by the State from money annually appropriated by the Legislature for the purpose.

Wants Action on 75-Cent Gas Bill.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Senator Patrick F. Trainor this morning called on Senator Goodsell, Chairman of the Committee on Miscellaneous Corporations, and demanded immediate consideration of his bill establishing the price of gas in cities of the first class at not more than 75 cents per thousand cubic feet. Senator Trainor said that he wished to have a hearing on the bill, and Senator Goodsell has issued a call for a special meeting of the committee next Tuesday afternoon for the consideration of the gas bill.

Assembly Bills Passed.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—The following bills were passed in the Assembly this morning:

Mr. VACHERON—Removing the exemption for the construction of railroads on Broadway in Jamaica.

Mr. DOUGHTY—Fixing the bond of the Receiver of Taxes of the Town of Hempstead at not less than $50,000 and providing for his salary.

Mr. BURNETT—Legalizing certain deeds of conveyance arising out of tax sales heretofore made by the Treasurer of Ontario County.

LEGISLATURE'S PROCEEDINGS.

Senator Raines Wants Report on United States Deposit Fund.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—The usual serenity of the Friday morning session of the Senate was disturbed to-day by the breeze created by the introduction by Senator Raines of a resolution calling on the Controller to report as soon as possible all facts concerning the United States Deposit Fund.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Controller be respectfully requested to report to the Senate at the earliest moment possible the amount of United States Deposit Fund in the hands of Loan Commissioners for each year since and including 1880, the amount of losses and expenses incurred for each year by the Loan Commissioners, and the interest received each year on said fund.

Also, to report for the same period the amount of United States Deposit Fund in the hands of the Controller, the commissions, premiums, clerical and other expenses incurred in the investment thereof each year, and the amount of interest received thereon.

Also, the net rate of interest received from the funds in the hands of the Loan Commissioners for the period and the net rate of interest received on the fund in the hands of the Controller for the same term.

Senator Grady, leader of the Democratic minority, immediately entered objection, expressing the opinion that the resolution should be printed before it was voted on.

Senator Raines arose to explain and said that a bill had been introduced in the Assembly providing for the transfer of the United States Deposit Fund, which amounts to several million dollars, from the Loan Commissioner to the Controller. He wished that the Senate should be in possession of the full facts of the matter before it was called on to pass on the merits of the bill introduced at the suggestion of and favored by the Controller.

"I think," said Senator Raines, "that this report from the Controller will show that the earnings and interest on the deposit funds have been greater while they have been in the control of the Loan Commissioners than while they were handled by the Controller."

Mr. Raines's resolution was adopted.

Senator Maltby of the Committee on Codes reported favorably on the Donnelly bill relative to the powers of a temporary administrator as to real property in Surrogates' Courts; also the Ellsberg bill relative to the issuance of letters of administration with will annexed.

Senator Krum introduced bills taxing the surplus of trust companies and banks' shares identical with those introduced in the Assembly by Mr. Lewis.

In the Assembly several bills were passed, after which adjournment was taken until Monday at 8:30 P. M.

LOCAL CLERGYMEN PROTEST.

Oppose the Pending Bill Reorganizing the State Board of Charities.

The clergy of New York, representing all creeds have forwarded to Gov. Odell a protest against the enactment of the proposed bill reorganizing the State Board of Charities in such a way that instead of twelve unpaid Commissioners there shall be one salaried Commissioner, aided by two Constitutional officers elected for other duties, and to be appointed by the Governor as nominal associates for the acting Commissioner.

New York, Jan. 16, 1901.

To the Governor of the State of New York:

We, the undersigned, ministers of religion in the City of New York, having at heart not only the wellbeing of the private charities with which we happen to be connected, but the public good as well, venture to remonstrate against any material change in the present organization of the State Board of Charities.

It is our belief that a body of men sufficiently numerous to represent the different portions of the State, and men, moreover, chosen with special reference to their fitness as experts to handle questions of poor relief, are more likely than a solitary Commissioner would be to do justice to the large interests involved, even though, to satisfy the requirements of the Constitution, such Commissioner were to be given two or more nominal associates.

The present board represents eight judicial districts, and is thoroughly non-partisan as respects both politics and religion. To legislate such a board out of existence at a time when more insistently than ever before the community is crying out for competent men who will serve it from high motives, looking to no compensation other than public approval, would seem to us a course of action unwise, uncalled-for, shortsighted, and, in the true sense of the word, impolitic.

SALARIES OF COMMISSIONERS.

Attempt May Be Made to Raise That of Head of Charities Board.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Those who believe in the continuance of the existing system of administering the State's charities are hopeful of defeating the bill providing for the abolishment of the State Board and the substitution of a single Commissioner. But if they find they cannot bring influence enough to bear to have the Governor's recommendations ignored, they will then insist that the salary to be paid the single Commissioner be raised to a figure which will be an incentive to a man of standing to take the place.

The Commissioner of Charities will have the distribution of millions of dollars annually. To pay such a small salary as $2,500 for the exercise of such a great responsibility would be, it is asserted, a temptation to wrongdoing.

The seeming absurdity of providing that the single-headed Commissioner of State Prisons shall receive a salary of $2,500, and that his secretary shall receive a salary of $3,000, has caused no little comment. No one appears to be able to advance a satisfactory reason for the disproportion. The present Secretary of the Prison Board is George McLaughlin of Sullivan County. Mr. McLaughlin is the Republican leader in his county, and is a warm friend of Senator Platt's.

STATE PRISON COMMISSION.

Proposition to Abolish It Meets with Strong Opposition.

The Prison Association of New York is opposed to action which would abolish the State Commission of Prisons as at present constituted, and the views of its Executive Committee on the subject, as set forth in the fifty-sixth annual report of the association, advocates the retention of the board of eight Commissioners, who serve with but nominal compensation, and reject the proposition to have a single-headed paid commission.

The report advocates the enlargement of the powers and duties of the commission to give it not only the authority to discover abuses, but the power to correct them. The whole prison system, it is claimed, needs to be more thoroughly co-ordinated in the interest of uniformity, efficiency, and economy. As to the economy of a single-headed commission, it is maintained that the economy of any prison system depends much more upon how it is organized and administered than upon saving a few thousand dollars from the traveling expenses and per diem allowance of a commission of citizens chosen for their public spirit, business experience, administrative capacity, and familiarity with the problems of charity and crime. Such a commission as the present one, the committe claims, is a check on extravagant and corrupt administration.

The existing commission, it is urged, has made recommendations to the Legislature in regard to prison industries which, if adopted, would save thousands of dollars by employing prisoners now idle. A single Commissioner would have to do the work of eight in inspecting prisons and jails. His work would be so multifarious that his inspections would not be adequate. The employment of salaried Inspectors would make this service more costly than at present. In carrying out its work the Prison Association has been hampered by the cost of making inspections, which is defrayed by private contributions, and the lack of any power beyond that of recommendation, while the creation of the existing commission led to the expectation that it might furnish the nucleus for a much-needed concentration of power in the management of the State's penal institutions.

The recommendations of the association to the Legislature are: All State penal institutions to be under the control of the commission, a new classification of prisoners, extension of the indeterminate sentence to misdemeanants, in connection with a reformatory sytem for all who may be fit subjects; adoption of a probation law, with probation officers; removal of all restrictions on prison labor, and the consideration of detailed suggestions made by the association's committees of inspection in regard to penal institutions.

SLOT MACHINE MEN FINED $500.

Judge's Punishment Startles New Jersey Saloon Keepers.

PHILLIPSBURG, N. J., Jan. 25.—Judge Shipman at Belvidere to-day threw consternation into the ranks of the saloon keepers of this town when he sentenced those indicted for keeping slot machines in their places of business.

Fifteen of them were fined $500 each, eight of whom paid the fine. The others are in the custody of the Sheriff and will be sent to jail unless they pay to-day.

HID PLUNDER IN BIBLES.

Milkman Burglar of Chicago Caught After Many Thefts.

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—With the plunder of a score of burglaries hidden in hollow Bibles and other books, Charles Ohman, a milkman, was detected and arrested last night. The thefts cover a period of three months and were committed when Ohman was delivering milk in the early hours of the morning.

The books in which the plunder was found had each been reduced to a shell by cutting away the inner part of the leaves. In these supposed books were found money, watches, chains, gold rings, numbers of pairs of cuff buttons, and other articles of jewelry.

THE VICE CRUSADE IN NEWARK.

Mayor Seymour Orders His Subordinates to Take Vigorous Action.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 25.—Mayor Seymour, in the crusade against vice in this city, and after a conference with the Excise Commissioners, License Inspectors, and Chief of Police, gave orders that these departments must work in harmony to stamp out vice in concert halls and cafés where women are employed as waitresses.

Chief Hopper coincided with the Mayor, but added that there are other saloons run by persons convicted of being disorderly characters, which should also be stamped out. Such places the police have complained of frequently and tried to have licenses refused, but the Excise Board ignored the objections and the places were permitted to continue. Excise Commissioner Dimond suggested that the only way to do was to treat all these people alike.

WANTED TO HALF-MAST FLAG.

Inebriated Newarker Arrested and Fined $5.

Policeman Bradley of the City Hall Station caught sight of a man trying to shin up one of the white pillars of the City Hall at an early hour yesterday morning.

"Hi, there, young fellow," he shouted, shaking his night stick; "whatcher tryin' to do? Steal the cupola?"

"Just wanted half-mast the flag," hiccoughed the "young feller," good-naturedly, as he was hauled back to the ground; "don't yer know Queen Victoria is dead? Shame flag's not at half-mast."

To Magistrate Peol in Centre Street Court the prisoner said his name was Herman Skinner of Newark, and that he was a British subject. He imbibed too much "Jersey lightning," he said, and didn't remember trying to haul down the flag that Mayor Van Wyck refused to lower. He was fined $5.

Charge Against a Bookkeeper.

Theodore Neiteler of 343 East Forty-ninth Street was held in $1,000 bail for trial in the Yorkville Police Court yesterday afternoon on the technical charge of retaining $19.12, collected from John Harre of 874 Third Avenue on Dec. 10. It is alleged that Neiteler, who was bookkeeper and cashier for the New York Consolidated Drug Company branch at 178 Avenue A, has been misappropriating collections for the last two years, and that he has kept $2,000 a year.

Statuary for Buffalo Exposition.

Carl Bitter, the sculptor, yesterday shipped from Hoboken two carloads of statuary for the Pan-American Exposition grounds at Buffalo. Among the statuary was "The Age of Enlightenment," designed by Herbert Adams, consisting of six figures, which had to be taken apart on account of the size of the group, and "Mineral Wealth," a group of seven figures, designed by Charles Niehaus.

One New Smallpox Case.

Eldridge Whitfield, thirty-seven years old, a colored cook, living at 332 West Thirty-seventh Street, was removed to the Reception Hospital yesterday afternoon, suffering from smallpox.

REGISTER HOWE'S GIFT

The Monument, a Duplicate of the Mills Statue at the Capital, Will Cost $50,000.

When James R. Howe took the office of Register of Kings County a year ago he surprised the politicians and Brooklynites generally by announcing that he would devote the surplus fees of his office to some public purpose. Mr. Howe, however, declined to make known just what he proposed to do with the money and his intentions in the matter remained an interesting secret. Yesterday the secret was revealed by Mr. Howe in a public statement announcing that it was his intention to give Brooklyn what it now has not—a statue of George Washington. He proposes to have erected at the junction of Bedford and Division Avenues, in the Eastern District, where Mr. Howe lives, a duplicate of the fine statue of the first President now standing in Washington Circle, at the west end of Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C. This statue was erected by an act of Congress in 1858, $50,000 being appropriated for the purpose. The statue to be erected by the Register will cost at least as much.

Mr. Howe made a statement a short time ago in which he said that besides giving $8,000 to a hospital, he had accumulated more than $45,000 in fees during his first year in office. He could have made much more out of the office, he declared, had he run it on less liberal lines. To build the statue, it is regarded as apparent that Mr. Howe will have to devote at least a year's earnings of his office to the purpose.

Mr. Howe, after speaking of the disposition of his fees for the purchase and referring to the location of the statue, says:

The statue will be patterned after the one now standing in Washington Circle, at the west end of Pennsylvania Avenue, in Washington, D. C.

This statue is the work of the late famous sculptor, Clark Mills, and was erected by act of Congress in 1858. Washington is represented as he appeared at the battle of Princeton, Jan. 3, 1777, when he checked the retreat of Mercer's wavering forces of militia and turned defeat into victory. The portrait is from Houdon's bust made from life. The horse was modeled from one captured from a wild herd on the prairie, near Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

An imposing statue of Gen. George Washington will be an inspiration to our school children as they pass the square and also to those who come to our land from foreign shores, seeking the freedom and the opportunities which this grand and glorious country holds out to all law-abiding humanity.

In order to properly perfect the building of the statue I have appointed and respectfully request the following prominent citizens of Brooklyn to act as a committee to begin this work at once and carry it forward to completion with as little delay as possible.

The entire cost of this statue to be paid by me.

I respectfully and earnestly request the following to act as a committee:

Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff, Joseph W. Kay, Dr. St. Clair McKelway, Dr. Thomas H. Hull, Borough President Edward M. Grout, Charles A. Schieren, Francis H. Wilson, Thomas P. Peters, ex-Senator George Brush, E. Dwight Church, Henry Tiebout Hibbert, B. Masters, Col. D. Baird, William Berri, Bert Reiss, Henry E. Roehr, Hubert G. Taylor, I. F. Fischer, and David S. Gifting.

It has not been decided as yet when the work will be begun. Mr. Howe intends to leave further details to the discretion of the committee he has named to act for him.

OLD BANK CASHIER A FORGER.

James Lascelle, Now Homeless, Admits His Guilt.

James Lascelle, sixty-three years old and homeless, who was once cashier of the Keystone Bank of Philadelphia, which failed sensationally some time ago, pleaded guilty yesterday to three indictments alleging forgery in the second degree, in General Sessions.

Lascelle was arrested last week with Charles H. Gardner charged with disposing of spurious notes to which the name of Edward Rafter, a wholesale grocer, was signed. The men are said to have in their possession worthless paper calling for several thousand dollars.

Gardner is still in the Tombs.

NEW DEMOCRATIC CLUB.

Bronx Tammany Men Are Now Engaged In Forming One.

Tammany Hall Democrats in the Borough of the Bronx are forming a new Democratic Club in that section of the city. More than one hundred well-known Democrats and business men of the district have already signified their willingness to become members. A meeting of those interested was held yesterday in the office of Thomas Farley, One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street and Boston Road.

"The formation of this club," said Mr. Farley, "has been under advisement for some time. It is our intention in time to make this club the headquarters of the Democracy not only of the Thirty-fifth Assembly District, but of the entire Borough of the Bronx. The present district headquarters are situated on Third Avenue, are inconvenient to a majority of the members of the organization, and are entirely unsuited for club purposes.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST.—Fair and colder, brisk northwesterly winds.

The storm yesterday morning, central off the New Jersey Coast, moved to the eastward of southern New England. Other disturbances were central north of North Dakota, over eastern Colorado, and off the South Pacific Coast. Generally fair weather is indicated in the Atlantic and east Gulf States and southern portion of the west Gulf States, and occasional rains in the northern portion of the west Gulf States, the Ohio, Lower Missouri, and Central and Lower Mississippi Valleys; rain or snow in the lake regions, and snow or rain in the Upper Missouri Valley and middle slope. Lower temperatures are indicated for New England, and the Middle Atlantic States, the northern portion of the west Gulf States, and the slope and plateau regions, and higher temperatures in central and upper Mississippi and Ohio Valleys and the lake regions. Brisk to high northwesterly winds, diminishing in force, are indicated for the New England and Middle Atlantic and North Carolina Coasts, and fresh to brisk north to west winds on the South Atlantic Coast.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES'S thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau is as follows:

CHIEF JUSTICE DEPUE RESIGNS.

Has Been Nearly Thirty-five Years on the New Jersey Supreme Court Bench.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 25.—Chief Justice Depue of the Supreme Court, who was reappointed last week, will retire from the bench on Nov. 16 next, when he will have completed thirty-five years on the bench. His resignation, which was filed with Gov. Voorhees yesterday, will enable the Governor, before he retires from office, to appoint another Republican as Chief Justice. Justice Gilbert Collins of Jersey City is regarded as the most likely candidate for the position.

Chief Justice David A. Depue was born at Mount Bethel, in Northampton County, Penn., Oct. 27, 1826. His family comes of Huguenot ancestors, and were among the early settlers and founders of Pasquarry, in Warren County, this State. When the present Chief Justice was fourteen years old his parents decided to leave Mount Bethel, and returned to Warren County, whose history their forefathers had helped to make, settling in Belvidere.

He entered Princeton College when but seventeen years of age, and was graduated with the class of '46. Three years later he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of law in Belvidere. He prepared for the bar examinations in the office of John M. Sherrerd.

In 1866 he received his appointment to the Supreme bench, being named by Gov. Ward to succeed Justice Haynes. He was reappointed at the expiration of his term in 1873 by Gov. Parker, in 1880 by Gov. McClellan, in 1887 by Gov. Green, and in 1894 by Gov. Werts. On May 20 of last year he was appointed Chief Justice to succeed Chief Justice Magie, who was elevated to the Chancellorship. The appointment was made ad interim and was confirmed last Tuesday by the Senate for the full term of seven years.

He has twice received the honorary degree of LL. D., from Rutgers College in 1874 and from Princeton University in 1890.

Saturday OFFERINGS for MEN

CLOTHING

For Large and Small Men Medium-size Men and Boys

Large men seem to be scarce and at a premium. We're willing to pay our share to bring them to this store to-day; and here is news enough to make it a very profitable trip for all who come. Read on:

SUITS in sizes 42 to 46 in. chest measure—
Of all-wool blue and black cheviot, with sack coat; regular size men had to pay $12 and $15, and couldn't match them elsewhere for that. Large men share them to-day for

Ten Dollars a Suit

OVERCOATS in sizes 40 to 46 in. chest measure—
Heavy winter weights, of blue and black kersey, and Oxford-mixed cheviot; made up in faultless manner. Regular $15 kinds at

Ten Dollars Each

And the big man gets more than the little man got for a half more.

OVERCOATS for all sizes of Men—
Winter Overcoats and Raglans—two hundred in all—in popular Oxford mixtures. Regular $20 and $25 kinds at

Fifteen Dollars Each

Sizes for all sorts of men.

CUTAWAY FROCK SUITS—All sizes.
Of all-wool black Thibet, and rough-faced cheviot; lots are broken, but complete selection of sizes, in the group. Regular prices, $12 to $20; now $10.

BOYS' LONG-TROUSER SUITS—
For boys of 13 to 19 years, and small men. About a hundred and fifty suits in all; of all-wool fancy cheviots; reasonable at $10 to $15; now at $7.50 a suit.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

COLLARS and NECKWEAR

Two offerings of constant needs of men, that have been matched previously in this store, but not outside of it. Men who missed the previous chance, as well as those who wish additional supplies will find the opportunity to-day.

LINEN COLLARS, 55c a half dozen—
Best styles—we dictated just what we wanted, and had five thousand dozens made to our order. There are high turndowns, straight standing collars and Piccadillies. The sizes are accurate, and we guarantee the linen. Shapes and looks you can judge of for yourself. All fresh and perfect; put up in boxes of a half dozen of a size, and sold only by the box. Six for 55c.

MEN'S $1 and $1.50 SCARFS at 50c—
Most of these have just come from a manufacturer who selects only silks of elegance and refined taste. The most particular men will find that they can be perfectly pleased for half a dollar. Just 60 dozens in the lot, in imperials, squares and Tecks.

The GLOVE SALE

Was the price too low—the bargain too great? More people came yesterday than long aisle counters could serve comfortably—and we don't like to make you uncomfortable even when buying bargains.

Still quite a quantity to pick from to-day. Men's Gloves still complete in all sizes, mostly in the dollar value. Women's Gloves badly broken in sizes in many sorts; still good quantities in all but sizes 6¼ and 6½.

65c a pair

SILK WAISTS
Under-Price

Over two hundred Silk Waists are in to-day's offering. They are in pretty styles, made of excellent taffeta, in black and various desirable solid colors; with full front corded in clusters and trimmed with gold-mixed braid; fitted back with two clusters of cording; bishop sleeves. Regular value $4.75; to-day at

$2.75 Each

All sizes.

Second floor, Tenth street.

SHIRT WAISTS

A display of new spring styles that will be of wide interest. A fair proportion of this gathering is of imported waists—very effective styles and wholly different from anything yet shown. Handsome effects—both Paris and New York products—in lace and embroidery trimming.

The new white lawn—many dainty, elegant styles, at 85c to $10.50.

Colored lawns, madras, percales, dimities, all the light summery fabrics are represented—in a wide variety—though the task of collecting the best styles has just begun. 75c to $12, for these new colored waists.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Muslin Underwear

Twenty-one busy selling days had cut down these mountains of snow-white garments tremendously; yet even to-day there is such variety here as is unmatched elsewhere; and at prices that even we must battle hard to duplicate again.

Night Gowns—
75c—Of cambric; 2 styles: V neck trimmed with torchon lace and insertion, or neat embroidery and hemstitched lawn ruffle.
85c—Of muslin or cambric; 2 styles: High neck trimmed with neat embroidery and insertion, and fine plaits in cluster, or square neck trimmed with lawn ruffle and torchon lace.

LACE CURTAINS
Sale Should End With the Day

They're priced with that purpose—to distribute them quickly. And the curtains are all, of whatever class, so desirable in every respect, that priced as they are there's little doubt as to the results. Fresh, clean, worthy, and in tasteful designs. And there's so wide a variety—you can't fail to find just the pattern you like. In many of the styles there are but single pairs---take them at half price. The two-pair lots are reduced a third in price. Can't give a full list of the styles and prices. This summary, however, will give an idea of the extent of assortment, and the savings offered early choosers.

White Irish Point Lace Curtains—
There are 9 styles of these, mostly in two-pair lots, at $3.25 to $7.75, instead of $5 to $11.50.
And 9 styles, of which there are only one pair in each style. These are exactly half price. $2 to $6.25, instead of $4 to $12.50.

Ivory Irish Point—
Two-pair lots in 10 styles—$4 to $9 a pair now. They were $6 to $13.50.
Single pairs in 10 styles—half price. $1.85 to $6.65; were $3.65 to $13.75.

Renaissance—
Eight styles, and in few are there more than two pairs of a style. Handsome patterns—there'll hardly be any more beautiful this season. $6 to $19.50 a pair now—were $9 to $29.
A few single pairs at $2.65 to $12.50—were just double.

Point de Arabe—
Exquisite designs, 7 styles, all two-pair lots. Priced now at $7 to $53 a pair. Were priced very moderately at $10.50 to $80.
Half dozen styles of which there are only one pair each. $2.85 to $13.35. Were just double.

Tambour Lace Curtains—
Two-pair lots in 6 styles. $3 to $7 a pair; were $4.50 to $10.50.

Ruffled Muslin—
One lot of 7 patterns, at 80c a pair, instead of $1.10. And another group comprising 6 patterns, at 95c a pair, instead of $1.25.

Ruffled Net—
Some almost brand new curtains are $1.20 a pair, though $1.65 was a very fair price. Five other styles, up to $2, though they were good values when priced up to $2.75.

Third floor.

The GINGHAMS
At Half Price

These are bright Novelty Corded Ginghams, of a quality equal to the imported goods; fine and soft in texture, and in beautiful colorings. Then they are 32 inches. All were made for this present season; and will be sold in good stores everywhere at double to-day's price. Now—

12½c a yard, instead of 25c

The selling was rapid yesterday in spite of the weather; but we had 60,000 yards; and each of the sixty different patterns is here in ample supply to-day.

This is one of the most remarkable offerings of fine new Cottons we have ever made. A really wonderful fabric to buy at 12½c a yard.

A Busy Saturday in the Under-price Store

Plans are all laid for such an occasion to-day. It will be strange, indeed, if they go agley. Preparations are noted below—that is, some of them. These are only the very newest lots of merchandise sent to the Under-price Store. Numerous other interesting offerings will be found.

An Important Sale of Silks—
Numerous weaves and qualities and colorings go to make up this basement offering of silks. There's the opportunity in this sale of procuring silk for a new gown or waist at one-third original price. In no case will the price be more than two-thirds. And they're all good, desirable kinds, in 20 to 24 in. widths, among which will be found fancy Louisines, colored Satin Mousselines and Duchesse, Peau de Soie, Satin Regence, Brocaded Paillet de Soie and French Poplins. Values 75c to $1.50 a yard. Now 50c a yard for any sort you choose.
Besides the above, there's a lot of remnants of pretty silks, in 1 to 12 yard lengths. Only a few hundred ends. Half prices on all of these.

Dress Trimmings Sharply Reduced—
They are wanted styles, perfect, too, and are only sent to this Under-price Store because the quantities have become too small to bother with upstairs. Among the various lots are black and colored silk mohair and velvet guimps, colored bead guimps, colored spangled guimps, and black and colored braids. The prices are now 3c to 50c a yard—regularly 9c to $1.50.

Boys' Waists and Blouses—
They are of opera and twilled flannel, in sizes for children of 2½ to 14 years. One lot contains waists and blouses in blue, red, brown and gray, that were regularly priced $1 to $1.35. Prices now are 50c and 75c. Another lot of higher grade garments, in same sizes, values $1.75 to $2.25, all now at one price—choice at $1.25.

Couch Covers Again Reduced—
All that we have on hand now of these brilliantly colored Italian silk couch covers, or slumber robes, as they're also called, at just half price. Some show the handling they've received. Not enough, however, to warrant a change in price like this: $1, instead of $2.

Little Books at a Little Price—
All good reading and in good binding. The printing is likewise good. Size about 4¼ x 6½ in. There are about 75 titles in this lot, some of which are Hamlet, Elizabeth and Her German Garden, Idle Thoughts of An Idle Fellow, Paradise Lost. 20c was a little price. 15c each now.

Women's COATS

Ten Dollars for choice of all that remain now of the $15 to $26 winter coats. They comprise some of the handsomest styles of the season. All the best and most favored fashions are represented in this collection, but there are only a few of a kind. Numerous jaunty short jackets, a fair proportion in the popular three-quarter length and some of the very stylish box coats. Of kersey, ottoman, melton and cheviots, in various desirable colorings,—the majority, however, are in black.

Many are imported garments. The remainder are the best of domestic makes. The lowest regular priced coats are those that were very reasonably priced at $15. From that they range up to good $26 values.

Choice Now at $10

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Girls' COATS

These are warm and stylish winter coats for girls of 6 to 16 years. Each garment is refined in style and beautifully made. There are none better shown to-day; but it is time for them to be in service, so we remove all obstacles in the matter of price, as these details tell.

At $4.50—Box reefers of boucle and pebble cheviot, in most wanted shades. Some have velvet collars, others trimmed with braid. Sizes 6 to 12 years. Values $6 to $8.50.
At $7.50—Three-quarter military reefers of chinchilla and kersey, in navy blue; lined with guaranteed satin. Sizes 6 to 12 years. Value $15.
At $12.50—Imported box coats of handsome, soft, warm, plaid-back cloth, in black, red, navy blue, tan and gray. Sizes 14 and 16 years. Values, $20 to $25.

Second floor, Ninth street.

UMBRELLAS

Very exceptional bargains in high-grade umbrellas for men and women. They are various lots of finest kinds that remain from stocks specially gathered for the holiday trade. Duplicates in a few kinds—though mostly in only one-of-a-kind styles.

The women's umbrellas are all of pure silk. A splendid assortment of beautiful handles. Ivory-and-silver, pearl-and-silver, pearl-and-gold plate, horn, shell and gun metal, and some with tiger-eye and crystal settings. $5 to $12 were the reasonable prices.

Choice at $3.50 and $5

The men's umbrellas are also all of fine silk, and these have stylish handles of ivory, shell and horn, and silver-trimmed natural wood. Values at $5 to $12.

Choice at $3.50 and $5

A few fine specimens of carved ivory cane handles remain. $5 each now—they were $10 to $15.

Broadway.

Boys' CLOTHING

Some values better than others, but this store is full of good ones. These four mentioned below belong to the better-than-others class. They're not full lines, else these absurdly little prices could not be offered at this time:

Boys' Reefers, at $3.50—Of all-wool frieze, in tan, gray and brown; stylish, serviceable; sizes 3 to 8 years. Value $6.50.

Boys' Double-Breasted Suits, at $3.25—Just 80 of these, mostly all sizes from 12 to 16 years. Values $5 and $6.

Boys' Three-piece Suits, at $5—Of all-wool blue cheviot; sizes 11 to 16 years. Value $7.

Boys' Cheviot Trousers, 75c—Several hundred of these. Excellent values. Sizes 3 to 16 years.

Second floor, Ninth street.

All Around the Store

Sofa Pillows Reduced. Attractively covered with tapestry of pretty designs and colorings, from the past season's stock; with good down filling; newly priced at $1.75, though $2.50, $2.75 and $3 have been their prices until now. Other pillows with covering of Java prints, ruffled, filled with floss, are now 85c; formerly $1.25.

Men's Trousers. Excellent kinds, of black or blue cheviot, which have been left over from suits, are now priced at $2.50, instead of $3.50 to $5, as usually.

Vose Pianos. The Piano Store has just received some splendid specimens of these excellent pianos, in handsome cases.

Light Dress-suit Cases. Both men and women appreciate the comfort of a stiff, staunch traveling bag, that is, withal, lightly built. These dress-suit cases are especially designed to meet this combination of requirements. They are 22, 24 and 26 in., of strong cowhide leather, with stiff steel frame, sewed corners, brass locks, and straps with glove button snap on inside of case and cover. $7.25, $8 and $8.75.

The Picture Gallery. Those who know this quiet resting place on the Fifth floor, with its well-chosen representatives of modern art, will be interested in the new accessions to the collection. Those who haven't made its acquaintance will find it worth while to do so.

Silk-covered Eiderdown Comfortables, one side plain, the other figured, are reduced to $9 each, from $12. These luxurious bed coverings were exceptionally good value at their former price, and are now particularly attractive.

Turkish Bath Sheets. Here is a remarkably interesting offering of these comfortable accessories to the bath. They are of snowy white cotton, 50x80 in., and, though fully worth $1.50, a fortunate purchase enables us to price them at $1 each.

Boys' Ulsters. These eminently seasonable coats are of blue or Oxford frieze, with hood and belt, and are snugly lined throughout with red flannel. Sizes 4 to 12 years. $8.50.

Shirt Cases. A new and most convenient idea for the benefit of the man, who, when traveling, wishes to keep his linens in proper condition. They are of red, tan or green morocco, handsomely lined with moire silk, and will carry a supply of shirts, collars, cuffs, handkerchief and gloves, for all of which there are separate receptacles. Prices are from $9.75 upwards.

Writing Portfolios. These are foreign fancies—the cover is of figured velvet, the lining of brocade silk. Price, $1 each. Some children's writing sets comprise a desk pad, blotter, paper rack, ink-stand and other accessories, in green, red and blue leather, sterling silver mounted. Price, $3.75.

Lace Paper Mats. Perhaps you didn't know that the Candy Store has a rich assortment of these decorative aids to the dainty serving of a dinner—in a variety of designs in round, square and oval shapes. Sizes range from 3½ in. to 20 in.; prices from 3c to 35c a dozen.

Travelers' Soap-boxes. Handsomely finished soap-boxes, of quadruple plate, with beaded edges, are $1 each. A useful addition to one's traveling outfit.

Parlor Chairs Reduced. Some pretty parlor chairs are priced much below regular. Frames are of mahogany or with veneer of mahogany, inlaid; French legs; full spring seats; upholstered in the best manner; covers of tapestry or damask. Prices range from $8, reduced from $12, to $16.50, reduced from $33. There are only one or two of a pattern.

The Embroidery Sale. There's still good choosing among the embroideries—an importer's sample lots—the 25c to 30c kinds, at 12½c yard and the 35c to 45c kinds at 15c a yard, in particular.

Refrigerators. The re-arrangement of space has made it possible for the refrigerators to descend from their former isolation on the fifth floor to a dwelling in the basement worthy of the extensive variety that we show of them. Among them are the Puritan, the Eddy and the beautiful Wilkie Tile Refrigerators.

THE NAVY IS AFTER BLACKWELL'S ISLAND

Secretary Long's Suggestion for a Park and Parade Ground.

Capt. Taylor and Chaplain Chidwick Lay the Proposition Before Mayor Van Wyck.

Secretary Long wants the city to cede to the United States Government a part of Blackwell's Island to be used as a parade and drill ground for marines and sailors. The promise of the Navy Department is to maintain a marine band, build docks, and establish on the island a National park to be used by the people the same as other parks, except the limitations as to the drill ground.

A personal request was made on Mayor Van Wyck yesterday by Capt. H. H. Taylor of the receiving ship Vermont and the Rev. Father Chidwick, Chaplain in the navy. The navy officials came to the City Hall yesterday, accompanied by Corporation Counsel Whalen. Capt. Taylor said to Mayor Van Wyck:

"The authorities in the Navy Department have been for some time looking for a place in New York City suitable for the uses of the navy so that the enlisted men stationed here could have a drill ground. We have looked at many places, but have finally decided on one place. This is Blackwell's Island. We are told that the northern portion of the island is to be vacated in April, and that by May 1 the buildings will be vacant. It is extremely necessary that the navy should have a place for the sailors to drill. The Cob Dock, in the navy yard, is becoming smaller and smaller as buildings are being erected, and we must look for a larger place. Such a park would benefit the citizens of this great metropolitan city more than it would the navy.

"The portion referred to would eventually be turned into a beautiful park, the primary use, of course, being for the navy, but the citizens would have free access to it. We would guarantee that no storehouses or unsightly buildings would be erected upon the island. The idea of the authorities is to beautify this portion of the island and to eventually erect monuments and other objects which would make it beautiful. There are now 800 enlisted men in the navy yard who must be drilled. Besides the drills there would always be stationed there the Marine Band of the navy yard, and concerts would be given. Other plans would probably be thought of to make it both a National and municipal park."

Chaplain Chidwick said the Navy Department would be responsible for all expenses and would pay for all improvements. He said if the institutions now on the island were to be removed and the inmates transferred to other reformatories, the wish of the Navy Department was to acquire all of Blackwell's Island and make of it a noteworthy National park which would be a delight to the navy and to the citizens of New York as well.

The following is the letter of Secretary Long presented to Mayor Van Wyck:

Having learned that the northern part of Blackwell's Island will be vacated in a few months and the patients now quartered there removed to another portion of New York City, I beg to inquire whether the Navy Department may be permitted to make use of that portion of the island temporarily as a place for the recreation, exercising, and drilling of the seamen and recruits at present quartered aboard the receiving ship Vermont at the Navy Yard.

The area at present available in Cob Dock for the purpose of a recruiting and receiving station will soon in a great measure be occupied by the new structure necessary for Navy Yard purposes, and it is probable that the receiving and recruiting centre must soon be removed to some other point in New York or its immediate vicinity.

In case this privilege is granted the Navy Department would look upon the island, or that part of it which would thus be temporarily occupied, as a naval park, to be kept in order by the navy, and would have at that point a naval band of music in connection with the Vermont and allow the public to be freely admitted, subject to such restrictions only as are customary in the other parks of New York. The present receiving ship Vermont would in that case be moored alongside the sea wall of the island at a convenient point and continue, as at present, to be the quarters for the men and officers.

I understand that similar use for drilling and exercise was made by certain of the Government troops of the Kings County Parade Ground, which falls under the Park Department.

This request of the navy is for the temporary use of the north end of Blackwell's Island when it shall be available next Spring, pending the selection by the department of a permanent location for the recruiting and receiving stations. If, however, the city should favor the idea of a distinctly naval park in Blackwell's Island at some future time, I do not doubt that your Honor will agree that it is a most suitable place for the use hereinbefore referred to, and for naval movements, commemorating important events in our country's history, and for a naval museum to contain naval relics, models of ships, and other objects of interest to the people of the great maritime city of the United States.

Mayor Van Wyck at the close of the talk said that he would give the matter his immediate consideration.

Capt. Taylor was commander of the Indiana during the war with Spain and Father Chidwick was Chaplain on the Maine when she was destroyed in Havana Harbor.

VETERAN MASONS MAKE MERRY

Celebrate the Twenty-ninth Anniversary of Their Association—Their Average Age and Weight.

Old-time Masons gathered in great numbers at the twenty-ninth annual banquet of the Masonic Veteran Association at the Hotel Marlborough last night. Not one of them had been a Mason for less than twenty-one years, for that is an inexorable condition of membership in the association. Joseph Lichtenstein, the oldest man in the room, has seen his ninety-first birthday, while Abraham Lyon, with fifty-eight years of Masonry, was the man of longest standing in the order. According to statistics carefully compiled and presented to the diners by Brother Stephen D. Afflick, the average age of those present was fifty-seven years, while their weights, taken before dinner, ranged from 108 to 275 pounds, the average being 170.

President George W. Arnold presided over the dinner. Many late applicants for places at the tables had to be turned away, as the room would only accommodate 240, and the membership now exceeds 900. Brief addresses were made by P. W. James of the Philadelphia Association, Charles A. Shaw of Brooklyn, and James Milligan of Boston, and then William Sherer, manager of the Clearing House, spoke to the toast, "The Veteran in Purple."

"Masonry is on a higher plane and doing more good than it ever did before," he said. "Our past is something to be proud of, but I believe the time will come when the historian will write that, of all that went to make for the best interests of the Republic, no greater moral influence was ever exerted than that of the Masonic body."

Ex-Postmaster Charles W. Dayton playfully objected to the title "venerable" applied to the members of the association, saying that he believed in the philosophy of the youth of old age, and Derrick Brown of Poughkeepsie told of the condition of Masonry in the Orient, where he has traveled extensively, and suggested that the Masons of the United States subscribe $12,000 to build a temple in Jerusalem, where the order is supposed to have originated. The Rev. Cornelius R. Twing spoke on "The Ladies," and referred to the whole city as mourning for Queen Victoria, "except a small section down town."

MRS. NATION SPARES SALOONS.

HOPE, Kan., Jan. 25.—Mrs. Carrie Nation, whose crusade of destruction against the saloons has made her the terror of the Kansas "jointists," arrived at midnight from Enterprise, determined to attack the two saloons in Hope as she had those in Wichita and Enterprise. Mrs. Nation apparently was much disappointed at the failure of local support, and this morning announced that she had decided not to damage the saloons here because she was alone. She refused to eat breakfast because she feared being poisoned, and instead talked temperance to a crowd in front of the hotel.

ABILENE, Kan., Jan. 25.—All Mrs. Nation's assailants at Enterprise were tried today, found guilty, and fined $1 each. The saloons reopened and did a big business. Injunction suits were begun against eight saloonkeepers of the county to close their places. The owners of the buildings are included in the action. The county temperance union has begun a crusade to close all saloons in the county.

Old Butler Killed by Train.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 25.—John H. O'Fake, colored, eighty-five years old, who for half a century was butler for the family of Col. F. H. Wright of this city, was struck at the Avon Street crossing of the Pennsylvania Railroad here to-night and instantly killed.

"TRISTAN UND ISOLDE."

Wagner's Canticle of Love at the Metropolitan.

When the saddening rumors that Jean de Reszke had lost his voice came from London the lovers of the most poetic of all dramas, the most passionate of all love songs, the most subtle of all musical expressions of the human heart, said one to another, "Who will be our Tristan now?" But, fortunately for them, the evil hour was not yet, and their beloved singer came back still able to sing Faust and Tristan with equal beauty, an achievement in which he has surpassed all singers of time. It was not till last night, however, that the wonderful drama was brought forward this season. Then it was sung with Jean de Reszke as Tristan, Edouard de Reszke as Mark, David Bispham as Kurvenal, Mühlmann as Melot, Jacques Bars as the sailor, Mr. Hubbenet as the shepherd, Miss Ternina as Isolde, and Mme. Schumann-Heink as Brangäne.

This is an admirable cast and could not be equaled in any other opera house in the world. It is worthy of note at this time that the silly prejudices of Bayreuth have prevented such a cast from being known there, while the opposition to the employment of the German text has up to the present time made Mr. de Reszke's plan to give the work in Paris impracticable. Berlin has never heard such a cast, and we can find no record of such another anywhere. With the Tristan of Mr. Jean de Reszke we are obliged to compare those of Ludwig Schnorr and Albert Niemann, Schnorr's Tristan must accede chiefly on the word of Wagner, who declared that it realized his ideal. We may be pardoned for doubting, however, that Schnorr, a singer trained in the German school, ever brought out the marvelous witchery of the melody as Mr. de Reszke does. Niemann's splendid dramatic impersonation will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it. But it, too, was weak just where Mr. de Reszke's is strongest. King Mark has never had such a representative as the big Polish bass. The other members of the cast have had their equals, but so far as the principals are concerned few superiors.

The performance last night was pitched at the outset in a high key by the superb work of Miss Ternina in the first act. And she sustained the level on which she set out. Her interpretation of Isolde last night was deficient perhaps in power of voice, but the glorious amplitude with which it filled every other requirement more than atoned for that. In pose, gesture, and especially in facial expression Miss Ternina's acting was noble. Added to that was a vocal delivery which was ravishing in its depths of expression, in the simplicity of its style, and in the loveliness of its moods. It needed only the Tristan of Mr. Jean de Reszke to provide the proper companionship for such a piece of work. The great artist was in splendid form, and he gave us one of his warmest and most beautiful interpretations of his favorite part. To praise adequately the singing of the great duet by him and Miss Ternina would be to seem to indulge in hyperbole.

The other members of the cast followed the lead of the two central figures in their sincerity. Mr. Edouard de Reszke's King Mark was as imposing as usual. Mr. Bispham's Kurvenal has always been distinguished by its expression of the affection and fidelity of the esquire, and it did not fall behind its usual effectiveness last night. Mme. Schumann-Heink's Brangäne is a performance of more than ordinary merit at all times, and last night the contralto sang with better tone and juster intonation than she has of late. Mr. Damrosch's conducting showed the same great forward strides as it has shown in other Wagner works this season. His reading of the vorspiel and the performance of it by the orchestra were notably fine. At times in the drama the enthusiasm of the strings was a little too great, and there was too much tone, and there was a want of the languorous mood in the love scene of the second act but on the whole the orchestral part of last night's representation deserves warm praise along with the rest of it. The audience was one of the largest of the season, and its enthusiasm was great. There were many calls for all the artists after each act.

STUART ROBSON IN NEW HAVEN.

Appears Before a Large Audience in "She Stoops to Conquer."

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 25.—Stuart Robson was seen here to-night for the first time as Tony Lumpkin in "She Stoops to Conquer."

Mr. Robson was greeted by the largest audience of the season, composed largely of university men, who frequently applauded the comedian.

The supporting cast included Maud White, Ellen Mortimer, Beaumont Smith, Harry A. Weaver, V. E. Hallam, and Stephen Grattan. To-night the New England tour of the company closes.

MISS BOXALL'S RECITAL.

Miss Avise Boxall, harpist, gave a recital at Mendelssohn Hall yesterday afternoon, assisted by Gwilym Miles, baritone, and Bruno S. Huhn at the piano. Miss Boxall played Spohr's fantasia in C minor, an air with variations, by Mozart; a reverie and "The Spinning Wheel," by John Thomas, and several traditional Welsh melodies. Mr. Miles sang Tschaikowsky's "No Tidings Came from Thee," "Pilgrim's Song," and "Don Juan Serenade"; Korbay's "Where the Tisga's Torrents" and "Shepherd, See Thy Horse's Foaming Mane," and four traditional Welsh songs, with harp accompaniment.

Miss Boxall's technic is fairly well developed, but she seemed anxious at times yesterday to extract an inordinately large tone from her bass strings. But after all it is not a serious matter. The harp is a pretty instrument, and it affords a woman opportunity to appear in a graceful pose, but the orchestra is the best place for it. As a solo instrument it lacks the vital qualities of a singing tone, and no cleverness on the part of writers for the instrument has ever been able to cover up this defect. Certainly Spohr, who was animated by affection for his wife and pride in her harp playing, tried hard enough to accomplish this end, but he failed, and no one else can be said to have succeeded. In accompaniments the harp is useful, but it cannot replace the piano. Nevertheless there are persons who enjoy the glassy tinkling of the harp, and many of these were present yesterday to applaud Miss Boxall.

Mr. Miles is a familiar singer, and his songs, with the exception of the Welsh melodies, were also not unknown. He sang with plenty of voice, which he sometimes pressed too hard, and with intelligence. The Welsh music had an antiquarian interest, and some of it was worth hearing for its own sake.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

The first of the Wednesday matinées at the Casino will take place Wednesday next, when the entire Weber & Fields' stock company will attend the performance.

Ethaline Terriss and Seymour Hicks will appear in New York next Autumn as Alice and the Mad Hatter in the merry dramatization of "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland."

"A Message from Mars," Richard Ganthony's fanciful comedy, which has had a two-years' run in London, will be acted in New York next season by Charles Hawtrey and his company.

Irma Hinton Perry, wife of the well-known sculptor, Roland Hinton Perry, will be in the cast of "La du Barry" when David Belasco produces that historical pageant next September, with Mrs. Leslie Carter in the title rôle.

The negotiations which have been pending between the management of the Herald Square Theatre and Klaw & Erlanger were closed yesterday, through which Joseph Haworth and his play "Robert of Sicily" will be presented at the Herald Square on March 4.

The scenery for "Hamlet," to replace the set destroyed at the Grand Opera House fire in Cincinnati, loaned by Henry Miller, was forwarded to Detroit yesterday, where the tour will be continued next week. A telegram to Daniel Frohman from Mr. Sothern yesterday said:

Sir Henry Irving and Miss Terry will begin their next American tour at the Knickerbocker Theatre in September of this year. Their first play will be Shakespeare's "Coriolanus," with Irving as the proud Roman and Miss Terry as his mother, Volumnia.

"My Lady," which will be produced at the Victoria under the management of A. H. Chamberlayne, after the short run of "The Night of the Fourth," is a travesty of the various dramatizations of "The Three Musketeers." Charles Ross will be the d'Artagnan. The piece is said to be amusing and to contain some very pretty music.

If possible, express through press my thanks and those of Mrs. Sothern to the great number of people who have sent us offers of assistance and sympathy. It would take me a week to reply to them all. One philosophic friend soothingly declares that such disasters as we have met with this year are "merely milestones on the path of glory," while another assures me that "ill luck is the name applied by the ignorant to matters beyond their comprehension," two phrases which should dissipate the conviction that fortune is frowning upon us. We are all well and happy. Escape from fatalities makes loss quite insignificant.

DR. LYMAN ABBOTT'S LECTURE.

He Discusses Rights of Man, Touching Single Tax, Isthmian Canal, Subsidy Bill, and Other Topics.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 25.—Dr. Lyman Abbott delivered the fourth of his Lowell Institute lectures on "The Rights of Man" tonight. His evening topic was "Industrial Rights," and he held his big audience closely for an hour and a quarter.

He came out in favor of the single tax, American public control of the Isthmian Canal, strongly against the Subsidy Shipping bill and centralization of capital. He insisted that special legislation for special classes of whatever sort is unjust. Speaking of the Subsidy bill, he said:

"The Subsidy Shipping bill is a form of special legislation. It has some argument in a monarchy. If the United States people are children and Congress is a wise father there may be some excuse for Congress to take care of our earnings. Then let us subsidize theatres, the press, authors, and the like. This bill is a relic of the old time when the Government took care of the people instead of the people the Government."

Concerning the Nicaragua Canal Dr. Abbott said:

"To-day we are confronting the question of the isthmian canal, and I hope it will be owned, controlled, and operated by the United States alone. [Applause.] I hope it will belong to no corporation, no private company, but to the United States, as the Mississippi River belongs to the whole Nation."

Dr. Abbott scored the action of labor unions in preventing a man working when, where, for whom, and for what wages he chooses. He said: "Not for an instant in a free State would the people tolerate legislation allowing this thing. But it is much worse when enforced by the laws of labor guilds. Thus it is the first duty of society to protect every man in his natural right to labor and enjoy the product of his labor."

Dr. Abbott then explained the single tax theory and advocated it strongly, because he said it taxes only unimproved land, not the fruits of a man's own labor. "It takes nothing from industry, nor does it involve confiscation; for it will not come about, if at all, by instant action."

"We should levy taxes on income and possessions rather than on expenditure," he went on. "Levying taxes on expenditure means that those of moderate means pay the taxes. The millionaire can wear but one suit of clothes at a time."

KILLED IN SHOOTING PLACE.

Tragedy in a Bowery Gallery Believed to Have Been Accidental.

George Dressel, thirty-five years old, of 35 Bowery, was shot through the heart and killed instantly last night in Lane's shooting gallery, at 21 Bowery. Walter J. Kelly, thirty-five years old, of 11 Chatham Square, who held the rifle from which the bullet was discharged, is a prisoner at the Eldridge Street Police Station. He is charged with murder, notwithstanding the expressed belief of the police that the shooting was purely accidental.

Dressel was the pointer in the place. A moment before his death he was standing six feet from the counter, painting on the side wall the sign: "Come and Shoot Three Birds for Five Cents."

Kelly was the acting manager of the place. His work consisted in handing the guns to customers, taking the money, &c. A customer asked for a rifle to shoot at one of the clay birds and Kelly picked up a .38-calibre weapon. He stood sideways adjusting and trying the mechanism as he had done thousands of times before. Then he inserted the cartridges and turned to hand it to the patron. As he turned the rifle was discharged. Kelly looked to see what had happened and saw Dressel throw up his hands and heard him cry:

"My God! O God! I'm dying!" He sank to the floor and expired.

Kelly's shouts could be heard two blocks down the Bowery. The man was frantic at the result of his clumsiness. A policeman heard him calling for aid and ran to him. A great crowd gathered. Some insisted that it was a case of wanton murder. Others took Kelly's part, particularly the man who had seen how it all happened. Kelly was so unstrung that he could give little or no information. He protested that he had not pulled the trigger, and thought it must have caught his coat sleeve. That seemed probable enough, as his coat was ragged and old.

Policeman Bever placed Kelly under arrest, and had the body taken to Eldridge Street Station. Detective Delaney went to work on the case at once. Both men were found to have been on friendly terms, and no sound cause for trouble could be discovered.

PRISONER OBJECTS TO ELMIRA.

Gives Temper as an Excuse and Makes a Plea for State Prison.

Cornelius Kelly, alias Henry Tobias, convicted of stealing a trunk containing $1,600 worth of dresses and other apparel from Mrs. Cordelia Terrell of 10 West Thirtieth Street, has served one term in the Elmira Reformatory, and for reasons best known to himself objected vigorously to returning when Recorder Goff was about to send him there yesterday.

"I've got such a bad temper, your Honor," said he, "that I don't think I could get along well at Elmira. I'd rather have you send me to State prison."

"Elmira," said the Recorder, ending the prisoner's plea.

When taken to the Tombs Kelly made a last attempt to be sent to State prison by sending word to the Recorder that he had lied in giving his pedigree, and that he was already a convict.

"I've already been sent up for felony, Judge," he said, "and if you send me to Elmira I'll have to stay the whole five years."

He said that the Recorder himself had sent him to prison in 1895 for three and a half years. This time his sentence is four years and six months.

NO RISING AMONG INDIANS.

Lieut. Dixon Reporting to Gen. Lee Says Reports Are Exaggerated.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 25.—Gen. Lee to-night received a telegraphic report from Lieut. Dixon, commanding the troop of cavalry sent to the scene of the Greek Indian troubles. He states that he has not yet made a full investigation, but has learned enough to warrant his saying that the reports of an uprising have been greatly exaggerated. Thus far he has encountered no Indians, and from civilians he learns there has been no violence on the part of the Indians, and he anticipates none. The report from Lieut. Dixon comes from Henrietta, which place he reached during the forenoon.

CHECOTAH, I. T., Jan. 25.—H. G. Turner of Brush Hill, where the Snake band of Indians are supposed to be in camp, was in Checotah this morning, and says there is no truth in the report from Eufaita of an Indian uprising. The Indians, he says, who are supposed to be indulging in the war dance are at work. It is true that a few Indians are attempting to enforce some of their old laws wherein members of their own tribe are concerned. Checotah is in no danger of attack.

Leak in a Watermain.

The discovery that a twelve-inch pipe leading from the thirty-six-inch water main was open, and that Croton water was flowing into the sewer, by men employed in the rapid transit tunnel at Lafayette Place and Fourth Avenue, yesterday, created a great deal of talk. It was thought at first that the leak had been going on for a year or more, and that a great deal of water had been wasted. Upon inquiry, however, several of the officials of the Water Supply Department denied that the leak had continued long.

An Elderly Man's Long Sentence.

John Sweet, sixty-two years old, who pleaded guilty Wednesday to killing Robert Elkins in Wooster Street in November last for spitting on the prisoner's shoes, was yesterday sentenced by Justice Fursman to twenty years' imprisonment in State prison.

A Two-Year Sentence for Williams.

Joseph Williams, also known as "Scar-faced Hennessy," an ex-boxer, convicted in General Sessions recently of aiding and abetting false registration in the Twentieth Assembly District during the recent election was sentenced yesterday by Judge Newburger to two years in State prison.

"SIR RICHARD CROKER" SCORED

City Democracy Expresses Distrust of His Committee of Five in a Series of Resolutions.

There was an enthusiastic meeting of the City Democracy last evening in the headquarters, 1,481 Broadway. Henry Mann presided. Resolutions denouncing Richard Croker were passed. The speakers were applauded whenever they spoke of mismanagement in the City Government. The resolutions adopted follow:

Whereas, On Nov. 15, 1900, just seventy-one days ago, the long-distance reformer of Tammany Hall, Sir Richard Croker of Wantage, England, appointed a special committee of five to act with any citizens or body of citizens for the purpose of investigating the moral conditions of the city and for receiving and suggesting remedies for the correction of abuses; and

Whereas, The people of this city have all along doubted the sincerity of the motive of Sir Richard Croker and have no faith whatever in the labors of a committee named to divert the honest movement for reform from its true purpose; and

Whereas, The members of the Tammany Hall Committee of Angels cannot look each other in the face without smiling when their Chairman works himself into the hypnotic belief that he and his colleagues are "on the level," and

Whereas, The Tammany Hall Committee of reformers and informers have been hunting for something they do not wish to find, are discredited by all decent citizens, have been rightly repudiated by reform organizations, have had their worthless evidence rejected by the new and honest District Attorney; therefore be it

Resolved, That the attention of the Tammany Hall Purity Committee is called to the fact that corrupt politics have fostered wide-open vice and that the committee has an opportunity to prove the sincerity of its mission by investigating the leadership and the inside workings of a political machine which is directly responsible for our demoralized municipal government and the blackmailing of corporations and law-breakers. The suggestion is hereby made to the Committee of Five that the only way to have a clean government, clean politics, and to clean out vice is to have clean rulers, whether they rule over the City Government or over political organizations. The Committee of Five is reminded of the action of the English Jockey Club in examining the betting books of Sir Richard Croker. Perhaps the committee should follow this foreign precedent and examine the accounts of the Chairman of the Finance Committee of Tammany Hall. Why should not the committee go to the top to get at the bottom facts in the search for the responsibility for vice and immorality?

Resolved, That it is the belief of the New York City Democracy that no moral reform is possible excepting through political reform. Moral reform depends upon political reform, and this idea is respectfully submitted to all good citizens and reform organizations and committees. Resolutions and speeches will never defeat Tammany Hall. Organization, unity, and a determination to redeem our great city from the control of political brigands will meet with overwhelming success. All foes of corruption and all friends of honesty must get together to elect the next Mayor of Greater New York.

Ex-Sheriff James O'Brien made a speech declaring that the Tammany Mayoralty ticket would be defeated this Fall.

It was decided to establish Harlem headquarters of the City Democracy at 50 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street.

ANTI-CROKER CAMPAIGN.

Brooklyn Democrats Organizing Under ex-Senator Michael J. Coffey.

The Brooklyn branch of the anti-Croker Democratic organization which is being formed in Manhattan is getting ready to make its bow across the bridge.

Ex-Senator Michael J. Coffey, who broke with Willoughby Street in the Fall of 1899 because of the nomination of J. Morissey Gray for County Register, is the leading spirit in the movement in Brooklyn. Otto Kempner, who made a stand for the nomination of Controller Coler for Governor at the Saratoga Convention; Warden Patrick Hayes, and other local Democrats of prominence who are opposed to Willoughby Street will join with Mr. Coffey on the theory that if Tammany is overthrown the Kings County machine will go down also.

A meeting of those interested in the movement in Brooklyn will be held in a few days, it was said yesterday, at which a committee of twenty-one, one member from each Assembly district, will be chosen to raise a fund for starting campaign work and perfecting an organization.

PLATT AND THE MAYORALTY.

Reiterates His Liking for J. D. Crimmins as an Acceptable Candidate.

Senator Thomas C. Platt again declared last night his belief that John D. Crimmins would prove a most acceptable anti-Tammany candidate for Mayor of New York. The Senator spent a few minutes in the rotunda of the Fifth Avenue Hotel last night, and a reporter remarked:

"I see, Senator, that you are throwing bouquets at John D. Crimmins."

"Why shouldn't I?" the Senator replied. "Mr. Crimmins is a very good man. He is a loyal and independent citizen, and enjoys the respect of everybody."

"Will you see Gov. Odell to-night?" the Senator was asked.

"I don't think so," was Mr. Platt's answer. "He has two dinners on hand, and I shall retire early."

"The fact," suggested a reporter, "that the Governor did not call on you this evening will probably be used by some as indicative that there is a serious break between you and Mr. Odell."

"Oh," replied Senator Platt, with a smile. "Let people who so will hug that delusive idea to their hearts."

CALIFORNIA'S ELECTORAL VOTE

The ceremonies at the meeting of the Electors of California, at Sacramento, were unique. The programme was very elaborate, and the ballots were printed in red and blue on white paper. The box in which the ballots were deposited was constructed of California woods mounted with 14-karat gold. Rising from each of the four corners was a column of manzanita, with base and capital of heavily chased gold. Resting upon these columns forming the top was a combination of California buckeye, madrone, and manzanita, the upper part opening as a lid, hinged, and fastened with a gold padlock, the key of which was secured by a chain.

On the front face of the base, in gold, was a reproduction of the great seal of California, and on either side was an American flag enameled in colors, entwined with laurel leaves in relief. On the sides of the box were gold shields suitably inscribed. The whole was placed in a rich morocco case, the bottom of which, when the cover is removed, serves as a pedestal.

Before and after the casting of the ballots there were speeches by notable individuals, vocal and instrumental music, the ceremonies concluding with the singing of "America."

THE SENATORIAL CONTESTS.

SALEM, Oregon, Jan. 25.—The Senatorial vote to-day resulted as follows: Corbett, 28; McBride, 18; Herman, 6; Fulton, 2; Smith, 26; F. A. Moore, 2; Lowell, 2; Williams, 2. Paired, 2; absent, 2.

Both houses adjourned until Monday.

DOVER, Del., Jan. 25.—To-day's ballots for two United States Senators in the deadlocked Legislature showed no material change from those of previous days.

HELENA, Mon., Jan. 25.—The vote for United States Senator to-day resulted as follows: Mantle, (Rep.,) 22; Frank, 22; J. J. Quinn of Silver Bow, 11; Maginnis, 10; scattering, 19.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 25.—The eighth joint ballot on Senator to-day resulted: Allen, (Fusionist,) 55; W. H. Thompson, (Fusionist,) 41; Hitchcock, (Fusionist,) 17; Crounse, 6; Currie, 21; Hainer, 4; Hinshaw, 15; Meiklejohn, 32; Martin, 6; Rosewater, 16; D. E. Thompson, 36; scattering, 12.

Gov. Odell May See Platt To-day.

Gov. Odell came to the city yesterday. He said there was no truth in the published statements that he would while here give the Committee of Fifteen a hearing on the single-headed Police Commission bill. No such request had been made to him. It is expected that Gov. Odell will have a talk with Senator Platt at the Fifth Avenue Hotel to-day.

The Prairie's Cargo in Good Condition.

Commander William Smith of the cruiser Prairie, which arrived from Havre Thursday night, reported to Admiral Barker, commandant of the navy yard, yesterday that the Prairie's cargo, which consists of the Government exhibit at the Paris Exposition, is in good condition, notwithstanding a very rough passage across the Atlantic. Included in the exhibit are some of the finest of the Government paintings, the models of the warships, the New York Yacht Club models, and many other of the American exhibits at the exposition. It is said that a considerable portion will be taken to Buffalo for the coming Pan-American Exposition in that city.

GATHERING OF THE CLANS

New York Scots Celebrate Robert Burns's Birthday.

Their Mirth Tempered by Sorrow at the Death of Victoria—A Message and Toast to Edward VII.

In bumpers of wine and with speech and song the Associated Scottish Clans of New York last evening celebrated at the Marlborough Hotel the one hundred and forty-second anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns, Scotland's immortal bard. But in the midst of their expressed loving loyalty to their poet the Scotsmen did not forget the gloom that hangs over all English subjects.

Frequently during the speaking the Queen's memory was referred to. At the conclusion of the banquet the following cablegram was sent to the Home Secretary of England:

The Associated Clans of New York respectfully convey to His Majesty Edward VII. the sincere sympathy of all Scotchmen in New York in the great loss they have sustained in the death of their beloved Queen.

Dr. FARQUHAR FERGUSON, Chairman.

King Edward VII. was also toasted during the evening.

Nearly 200 clansmen, representing the four big societies in this city were present. A dozen pipers in the costumes of the clans were a feature of the evening. Dr. Farquhar Ferguson acted as Chairman.

Among the toasts and those who responded to them were "The Ruler of Great Britain and the President of the United States," Mayor Leslie Sutherland of Yonkers; "The Genius of Burns, the Poet of Humanity," the Rev. Dr. Donald Sage Mackay; "America, the Land We Live In," Bird S. Coler; "Scotland, the Land We Left," James Kennedy; "Order of Scottish Clans," Peter Kerr, and "Kindred Societies," Donald E. Cameron.

In responding to the toast, "America—the Land We Live In," Controller Coler said:

"Recently we had the funeral of an Alderman in this city. When the Board of Aldermen got through with that funeral they put in a bill to the city for $1,000 expenses. The bill was sent to me, and before I got through with it I had cut it in half.

"Then the committee from the Board of Aldermen waited on me and protested. I told them that $1,000 was too much for the funeral of one Alderman, but if they would go back and bury the whole lot I would raise the price.

"We have almost too much government. As matters stand, it is now impossible to place the responsibility for errors in municipal government. If the new charter goes through, this will be remedied and we will be better off."

Mayor Sutherland, in responding to his toast, said that under the circumstances it would be unfitting to propose a toast to the late lamented Queen. He proposed, however, that the Scottish song, "Flowers of the Forest," be played by the pipers in honor of Victoria. Mr. Sutherland said that this country could learn a lot in government from the old country.

He said that the President of the United States was the head and front of the greatest Government yet constructed by mankind; a Government entirely in the hands of the people. In years to come a republican form of Government would rule the world and uplift the human race.

The Rev. Dr. Mackay said: "It is a great thing to be a Scotchman to-night, but it is a better thing to be a Scotch-American." Of Scotland he said that no nation possesses national songs that are so pathetic, so romantic, so touching.

"In the great constellation of bards," he continued, "we find there the man who passed through life's tempest a fixed and settled polar star. That man was Robert Burns. His is not the memory of departing genius, but the memory of an ever-leading power. He was the poet of humanity."

Besides the speaking, Scottish songs were sung by Donald E. Cameron, James Thomson, W. S. Boyle, P. Campbell Donald, George Fleming, and John Dick.

ESCAPED PRISONER CRUSHED.

Fatally Hurt While Stealing a Ride on New York Central Train.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 25.—William F. Kelly, a patient in the Hudson River State Hospital, twenty-eight years old, escaped from the institution last night.

As Kelly was considered harmless by the doctors he was assigned to the infirmary, where he acted as a helper. He forced a bar off one of the windows and jumped to the ground. He made his way to the New York Central Railroad, and boarded a south-bound freight train, riding on the bumpers between two cars.

At Fishkill the train stopped to put on a car and the jolting caused by the coupling knocked Kelly from his perch and the train passed over him. The flagman in the caboose heard him scream and stopped the train. Kelly was found, horribly mangled, but alive. He was carried to the Fishkill Hospital, where he begged for a revolver to end his suffering. At midnight he died, and an examination of his clothing revealed his identity.

Kelly was committed from Albany Aug. 15, 1899. He had been a tramp and was arrested in Albany, where it was found that he was insane. So far as the authorities know he had no friends.

Boys Kicks a Mule; Four Mines Close.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSTON, Penn., Jan. 25.—Because little Tommy Jones kicked a mule to-day, four collieries of the Pennsylvania Coal Company are obliged to shut down, and 2,000 men are idle. Tommy was discharged, sought sympathy, and got it. Every other breaker boy struck, demanding that Tommy be reinstated. The request was refused, and as the collieries cannot be operated without the boys they were closed.

THE CUBAN CONSTITUTION

As Submitted by the Central Committee to the Convention.

No Mention of the United States—Native Congress Can Declare War and President Arrange Treaties.

HAVANA, Jan. 22.—The text of the Cuban Constitution, as submitted by the Central Committee to the convention, at public meeting yesterday, has the following preamble:

We, the delegates of the Cuban people, having met in assembly for the purpose of agreeing upon the adoption of a fundamental law, which, at the same time that it provides for the Constitution into a sovereign and independent nation of the people of Cuba, establishes a solid and permanent form of government, capable of complying with its international obligations, insuring domestic tranquillity, establishing justice, promoting the general welfare, and securing the blessings of liberty to its inhabitants; we do agree upon and adopt the following Constitution in pursuance of the said purpose, invoking the protection of the Almighty and prompted by the dictates of our own conscience.

1. The People of Cuba shall be constituted into a sovereign and independent State, under a republican form of government.

2. The territory of the republic comprises the Island of Cuba and the islands and keys adjacent thereto which were under the jurisdiction and control of the General Government of the Island of Cuba while it was a Spanish possession.

3. The territory of the republic shall be divided into six provinces, the boundaries and names of which shall be those of the present provinces as long as not modified by the laws.

The second section relates to requirements for citizenship, methods of losing and regaining it, and the duties of citizens. It is as follows:

The following are Cuban citizens:

1. All persons born within or outside Cuban territory of Cuban parents.

2. The children of foreign parents born in the territory of the republic, who, after arriving at their majority, inscribe themselves as Cubans in the proper register.

3. Those persons who were born outside of Cuban territory of Cuban parents who had lost Cuban citizenship, provided that on attaining their majority they inscribe in the proper register.

4. Those foreigners who have belonged to the liberating army, and who, residing in Cuba, claim Cuban citizenship within six months following the promulgation of the Constitution.

5. Those Africans who may have been slaves in Cuba, and also those who were emancipated and referred to in Article 11 of the treaty between Spain and England, June 28, 1835.

6. The Spaniards residing in Cuban territory on April 11, 1899, who shall not have inscribed themselves as Spaniards up to April 11, 1900.

7. Foreigners who have been domiciled in Cuba since Jan. 1, 1899, provided they demand Cuban citizenship within six months following the promulgation of the Constitution, or, in case of minors, within six months after attaining majority.

8. Foreigners after five years' residence in the territory of the republic who obtain naturalization papers in accordance with the laws.

Grounds for Forfeiting Cuban Citizenship:

1. By securing naturalization papers in a foreign country.

2. By accepting a position under another Government without the consent of Congress.

3. By entering into the military or naval service of any foreign power without the aforesaid consent.

Cuban citizenship may be regained in accordance with the provisions which the law may establish.

Duties of all Cuban Citizens:

1. To service in arms according to the requirements of the law.

2. To contribute to public expenses in the manner established by the laws.

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

The third section deals with rights guaranteed by the constitution and is as follows:

1. All Cubans shall have equal rights under the law.

2. No law can have a retroactive effect, except in penal matters, when the new law is favorable to the delinquent.

3. Obligations of a civil character which spring from contracts or from the acts or omissions which produce them cannot be altered or annulled by any posterior act, neither by the Legislature nor the Executive.

4. No person shall be arrested, except in the cases and manner prescribed by law.

5. All persons arrested shall be either placed at liberty or delivered to the judicial authorities within twenty-four hours after their arrest.

6. All persons arrested shall either be placed at liberty or committed to prison within seventy-two hours after having been delivered to the competent Judge or court. The party interested shall be notified of the order for discharge or commitment within the same period.

7. No person shall be arrested, except by virtue of a warrant from a competent Judge; the writ directing the issuance of the warrant of arrest shall be ratified or amended after the accused shall have been given a hearing, within seventy-two hours following his imprisonment.

8. All persons arrested or in prison without due legal formalities, or in cases not provided for in the Constitution and the laws, shall be placed at liberty at their own request, or at that of any citizen. The law shall determine the method of prompt action in such cases.

9. No person shall be tried or sentenced, except by a competent Judge or tribunal, in consequence of laws existing prior to the commission of the crime, and in the manner that the latter prescribe.

10. No person shall be required to testify against a wife or husband or against relatives within the fourth degree of consanguinity or second degree of affinity.

11. The privacy of correspondence and of other private documents shall not be violated; and the same shall not be examined, except by orders of a competent authority and with the formalities prescribed by the laws, and in this case all points therein not relating to the matter under investigation shall be kept secret.

12. The expression of thought shall be free, be it either by word of mouth, by writing, by means of the public press, or by any other method whatsoever, without being subject to any prior censorship, and under the responsibility determined or specified by the laws.

13. No person shall be molested by reason of his religious opinion nor for engaging in his special method of worship. The Church and State shall be separate.

14. Every individual or association will have the right of petition.

15. The inhabitants of the republic shall have the right to meet and combine peacefully without arms for all licit purposes.

16. All persons shall have the right to enter and leave the republic, travel throughout its territory, and change their residences without requiring a safeguard, passport, or any other like equivalent, except what may be required in the laws governing immigration and by the rights of the administrative or judicial authorities in cases of criminal responsibility.

17. The penalty of confiscating of properties shall not be inflicted, and no person shall be deprived of his property except by the competent authority for the justified reason of public benefit and after being paid the proper indemnity therefor. Should this latter requirement not have been complied with, the Judges shall give due protection, and should the case so demand, they shall restore possession of the property to the person who may be deprived thereof.

18. Private dwellings shall be held inviolate, and no person may enter therein at night without the consent of the occupants, excepting for the purpose of taking aid to victims of crime or disaster, nor in the day time, excepting in the cases and manner prescribed by law.

19. No person shall be obliged to change his place of dwelling except by orders of competent authority.

20. No person shall be obliged to pay any tax or contribution of any kind whatsoever, the collection of which has not previously been legally decided upon.

21. Every author or inventor shall possess the ownership of his work or invention for the time and in the manner as may be determined by the laws.

22. Every man shall be free to learn or teach whatever science, profession, industry, or work that he may deem fit. The law will determine what professions need proper degrees or qualifications and how such degrees and qualifications shall be granted.

23. The guarantees mentioned in Paragraphs 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 15, 18, and 19 of this section cannot be suspended in any part of the Republic except when the safety of the State requires this suspension, in case of the invasion of the State, territory or grave perturbations of order so as to threaten the public peace.

24. The territory in which the said guarantees may be suspended will be ruled, during the suspension, by the laws relating to public order, dictated in former times. But neither in the law relating to public order, nor in any other law, can other guarantees but these mentioned be suspended. Only those acts characterized as crimes by the formerly existing penal laws can be considered crimes during said suspension, neither can new punishments be inflicted save those provided by said laws, nor can the executive power be authorized to banish or transport citizens, nor to remove them more than twenty kilometers from their place of dwelling, nor to arrest citizens except for the purpose of delivering them to the judicial authority; but no citizen can remain so arrested for more than fifteen days, nor can they be so arrested more than once during the suspension of the said guarantees, nor shall citizens be confined elsewhere than in special departments of public establishments designed for the detention of those accused of common misdemeanors.

25. The suspension of said guarantees can only be ordered by means of a law; or by means of a decree of the President of the republic if Congress be not sitting. The President cannot decree such suspension for more than thirty days or for an indefinite space of time without convoking Congress in the same decree, and in every case he must give an account to Congress of the suspensions ordered, in order that Congress may resolve what it thinks of it.

RIGHTS OF FOREIGNERS.

The fourth section deals with the rights of foreigners. It is as follows:

1. Foreigners residing in the territory of the republic have equal rights with Cubans in regard to the following matters: Protection of their persons and property; enjoyment of all rights mentioned in the preceding section, with the exception of those referring exclusively to native Cubans; exercise of civil rights; observance of laws and decrees; being bound by decisions of the courts and other authorities; obligations contributing to public expenses.

The fifth section declares that the national sovereignty shall be vested in the people of Cuba, from whom shall emanate the public powers.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.

The sixth section declares that the legislative power shall be exercised by two elective bodies, to be named "House of Representatives" and "Senate," and conjointly known as "Congress."

The seventh section relates to the Senate, its members, and inherent powers. It is as follows:

1. The Senate shall be composed of six Senators from each of the six departments of the republic, elected for a period of six years by Electors, whom the Ayuntamientos shall name in the manner prescribed by law.

2. One-third of the Senators shall be elected every two years.

3. To become a Senator the following qualifications are necessary: To be a native-born or naturalized Cuban citizen, the naturalized citizen to have been such for a period of not less than eight years, to have attained the age of thirty years, and to be in the full enjoyment of civil and political rights.

4. The inherent powers of the Senate shall be as follows:

First—To try, after they have been accused by the House of Representatives, the President of the republic and the Governors of the departments, for which purpose it shall constitute itself into a court of law, to be presided over by the President of the Supreme Court, without the right in this case of imposing any other penalty than that of removal from or disqualification to hold office. After the charges have been filed with the Senate the latter shall order forthwith the suspension of the President from office. Should the President be proved criminally responsible, he shall at once be placed at the disposal of the Supreme Court. In any case whatsoever, except infraction of the Constitution, to impeach him the consent of the Senate shall be necessary.

Second—To confirm or not the appointments that the President of the republic may make, of Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, of diplomatic representatives and Consular agents, and of such other functionaries required by law.

Third—To authorize Cubans to accept employment or honors from another Government.

Fourth—To judge the Governors of the provinces, when accused by the Provincial Assemblies or by the President of the republic. When the accusation is made before the Senate, the Senate can order the suspension of the Governor, but cannot impose any other penalty but dismissal from office.

The eighth section, "The House of Representatives and Its Inherent Powers," follows:

1. The House of Representatives shall be composed of one Representative for every 25,000 inhabitants or fraction of more than 12,000, elected for a period of four years by direct vote and in the manner prescribed by law.

2. One-half of the House of Representatives shall be elected every two years.

3. To be a Representative the following qualifications are required: To be a native born or a naturalized Cuban citizen, the naturalized citizen to have been such for a period of not less than eight years, to have obtained the age of twenty-five years, and to be in the full enjoyment of all civil and political rights.

4. The inherent powers of the House of Representatives shall be as follows:

First—To file an accusation before the Senate against the President of the republic for violation of the Constitution or of the laws committed in the exercise of his duties, provided that two-thirds of the Representatives so resolve in secret session.

The ninth section, dealing with regulations common to both co-legislative bodies, is as follows:

1. The positions of Representatives and Senators shall be incompatible with the holding of any paid position and appointment of the Government.

2. The Representatives and Senators shall receive from the nation a pecuniary remuneration, alike for all, which shall not be increased nor diminished during the period of their representation.

3. The Representatives and Senators shall not be held responsible for the opinions that they may express in the exercise of their duties.

4. Representatives and Senators shall not be arrested nor tried without the consent of the body to which they belong, except in the case of being discovered in the act of committing some crime, in which case and in that of their being arrested or tried when Congress is not in session, report thereof shall be made there as quickly as possible to the body to which they belong for its information and proper action.

5. Congress shall meet and organize at their own option; both houses shall open and close their sessions on the same day; they shall be established at the same place, and neither of them shall move to any other place nor suspend its sessions for more than three days without the consent of the other; neither shall they commence their sessions without two-thirds of the total numbe. of their members being present, nor shall they be allowed to continue their sessions without an absolute majority of the members being present.

6. Coogress shall decide as to the validity of elections and as to the resignation of its members; and none of the latter shall be expelled except by vote of two-thirds of the members at least of the respective legislative bodies, in which case it shall be decided in a like manner whether the expulsion is temporary or final, and if therefore the position should be declared vacant or not.

7. The houses of Congress shall adopt their respective rules and regulations and elect their Presidents. But the Senate President will only occupy the position in the absence of the Vice President of the republic or when the latter is discharging the duties of President of the same.

THE POWERS OF CONGRESS.

The tenth section is headed "Congress and Its Powers." It reads:

1. Congress shall meet in regular session every year on the first Monday in November and shall remain in session for at least ninety consecutive days, excepting holidays and Sundays. And it shall meet in special session whenever the President may issue a call therefor in accordance with this Constitution, in which case it shall solely treat of the express object or objects of the call.

2. Congress shall meet in joint session to proclaim, after rectifying and counting the electoral vote, the President and Vice President of the Republic, at which act the President and Vice President of Congress, respectively, shall be the President of the Senate and the President of the House of Representatives.

3. The powers of Congress shall be as follows:

First—To examine into and approve annually of the general budget of the Nation. Should a vote not be able to be taken prior to the first day of the fiscal year, the preceding budget shall continue in force.

Second—To decide as to the issue of loans, at the same time voting the necessary permanent incomes for the payment of interest thereon and for its redemption.

Third—To regulate domestic and foreign commerce, postal and telegraphic services, and railroads.

Fourth—To declare war and to make treaties of peace.

Fifth—To coin money, specifying the weight, value, and denomination of the same, and to regulate the system of weights and measures.

Sixth—Establish rules or procedures for naturalization of citizens.

Seventh—To grant amnesties.

Eighth—To organize naval and military forces.

Ninth—Establish taxes, duties, and contributions of National character.

Tenth—To regulate the establishment and service of roads, canals, and ports.

Eleventh—To decide who shall be President in case the President and Vice President should be removed, dead, resigned, or incapacitated.

Twelfth—To prepare the National codes, to establish the electoral for the election of Congress, Governors, Governors of provinces, and the provincial and municipal corporations; to dictate laws for the guidance of the general administration.

The eleventh section, "The Preparation, the Sanction, and Promulgation of the Law," is as follows:

1. The initiative action of all laws pertains to either of the two co-legislative bodies, except in the cases specified in the Constitution.

2. Every project of law that may have received the approval of the Senate and the House of Representatives shall be, before it becomes a law, presented to the President of the republic. Should the latter approve the same he will sign it; if not, he shall return it with his objections to the co-legislative body that recommended it, which body shall, in turn, spread the same objections in full upon the minutes and will again discuss the project. If, after this second discussion, two-thirds of the members of the co-legislative body should vote in favor of the project, it shall be sent, together with the objections of the President, to the other body, which shall discuss it in a like manner, and if the latter should approve it by a like majority it shall become a law. In every case the vote shall be taken by recording the names of members. If within ten days (excluding holidays,) the President shall not have returned the project of the law presented to him, the same shall become a law, in like manner as if the President had signed it. Whenever Congress should take a vote upon any law within the last ten days of its sessions and the President should have objections to sanction the same, he shall be under obligations to immediately notify Congress thereof, in order that the latter may remain in session until the aforesaid period has expired, and should he not do so, the law shall be considered as sanctioned.

3. No project of law after being wholly rejected by one of the co-legislative bodies may be again presented at the sessions of that year.

4. Every law shall be promulgated within five days immediately following its approval.

THE PRESIDENT.

Section 12 is entitled "The Executive Power. The President of the Republic. His Powers and Duties." It follows:

1. The executive power shall be exercised by the President of the Republic.

2. To become President of the Republic the following qualifications are required: To be a Cuban citizen by birth or naturalization, and, in this latter case, to have served with the Cuban army in its wars for independence, ten years at least; to have attained the age of forty years, and to be in the full enjoyment of all civil and political rights.

3. The President shall be elected to serve a term of four years. No one can be elected President for three consecutive terms.

4. The President shall be elected by direct votes, and an absolute majority thereof cast on one single day in accordance with the provisions of the law.

5. The President, on taking possession of office, shall swear or affirm before the Supreme Court to faithfully discharge the duties thereof, complying with and causing to be enforced the Constitution and laws.

6. The President shall receive from the public a pecuniary remuneration which will be fixed by law, and which shall not be increased or diminished during the Presidential term.

7. The powers and the duties of the President shall be as follows:

First—To promulgate the laws and execute the same.

Second—To issue calls for special sessions of Congress.

Third—To suspend the sessions of Congress when, in the matter relating to their suspension, no agreement is possible between the co-legislative bodies.

Fourth—To present to Congress at the commencement of each session and as often as he may deem proper a message referring to the acts of the Administration and to the general state of the Republic, recommending the adoption of measures that he may deem necessary and useful for the country.

Fifth—To send to Congress all the necessary data of all kinds for the preparation of the budgets and furnish the information that said Congress might ask for concerning matters or business that do not require secrecy.

Sixth—To direct diplomatic negotiations and make treaties with foreign powers, submitting them for confirmation to the approval of Congress.

Seventh—To appoint, with the approval of the Senate, the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of Justice, diplomatic representatives, and Consular agents of the Republic, he having the right to make provisional appointments of said representatives and agents when the Senate is not in session and vacancies occur.

Eighth—To freely appoint and remove his consulting secretaries that the law may provide him with, reporting actions in the premises to Congress.

Ninth—To appoint to positions established by law all other functionaries whose appointment does not specially pertain to other functionaries and corporations.

Tenth—To command and direct, as Commander in Chief, the naval and military forces of the Republic, being under obligations in case of invasion of the territory, or sudden attack thereon, to forthwith adopt the necessary means of defense and call Congress to session without delay to inform it of the facts.

Eleventh—To receive diplomatic representatives and admit Consular agents.

Twelfth—To pardon convicts in accordance with the laws.

Thirteenth—To suspend the action of Departmental Assemblies and of Ayuntamientos, in the cases specified by the Constitution.

8. The President shall not be allowed to leave the territory of the Republic without the express consent of Congress.

THE VICE PRESIDENT.

1. There shall be one Vice President of the republic, who shall be elected in the same manner as the President, conjointly with the latter, and for a like term.

2. To become Vice President the same qualifications as those established by the Constitution for President are necessary.

3. The Vice President shall be President of the Senate, but shall not vote except in cases of a tie.

4. Through accidental absence of the President of the republic, the executive power shall be executed by the Vice President. In case of an absolute vacancy in the office of the President, the Vice President shall assume charge thereof until the termination of the current term.

5. The Vice President shall receive from the republic a pecuniary remuneration which shall be decided by law, and which shall not be increased nor diminished during the period of his administration.

THE JUDICIARY.

The fourteenth section deals with judicial power and provides that it shall be exercised by the Supreme Court of Justice and such other courts as may be established by law, which shall regulate their respective organization, their rights, methods of exercising the same, and qualifications that the individuals composing them shall possess.

The fifteenth section, dealing with the Supreme Court of Justice, details the qualifications for the associate Justices and provides that it shall be the inherent right of the Supreme Court of Justice:

First—To have cognizance of appeals in conformity with the laws.

Second—Decide questions that may arise between the courts of law immediately inferior to it as to their relative rights and jurisdiction.

Third—To have cognizance of interadministrative suits concerning the nation or which are litigation between the departments or the municipalities.

Fourth—Decide as to the constitutionality of legislative acts that may have been objected to as unconstitutional.

Fifth—Decide as to the validity or nullity of decisions of Departmental Assemblies or Ayuntamientos that may have been suspended by the Government or complained of by private individuals in such cases as the Constitution laws establish.

The Sixteenth Section is devoted to "General Dispositions Concerning the Administration of Justice." It provides that:

1. Justice shall be administered gratuitously.

2. The courts shall have cognizance of all civil and criminal and inter-administrative suits. They shall also have cognizance in cases, specified by the laws, of the questions relating to the exercise and possession of political rights.

3. No judicial commissions nor extraordinary courts of justice of whatever kind shall be created.

4. All hearings shall be public, unless in the opinion of the Court and for special reasons they should be secret.

5. No judicial functionary shall be suspended from nor deprived of his position except for crime or other serious cause duly proved after his defense shall have been heard.

6. Judicial functionaries shall be personally responsible for all violations of the law that they may commit.

7. The remuneration of judicial functionaries shall not be changed within a period of less than five years, a general law being necessary for the purpose.

8. Courts having cognizance of maritime and land matters shall be governed by their special organic law.

The seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, and twenty-second sections refer respectively to the departmental régime, the departmental assemblies, the Governors, the municipal régime, the Ayuntamientos, and the Mayors.

REVOLUTIONARY DEBTS.

The twenty-third section is headed "The National Treasury, Its Properties and Duties." It reads:

1. The Republic of Cuba does not recognize nor will not recognize any debts or compromises contracted prior to the promulgation of the Constitution. From the said prohibition are excepted the debts and compromises legitimately contracted for in behalf of the revolution, from and after the 24th day of February, 1895, by corps commanders of the Liberating Army until the same, on which the Constitution of Jimaguayú was promulgated, and those which the revolutionary Governments contracted, either by themselves or by their legitimate representatives in foreign countries, which debts and compromises shall be classified by Congress, and which shall decide as to the payment of those which in its judgment are legitimate.

The twenty-fourth section, dealing with constitutional amendments, reads:

The Constitution cannot be changed in whole or part except by two-thirds vote of both legislative bodies. Six months after deciding on the reform a Constitutional Assembly shall be elected, which shall confine itself to the approval or disapproval of the reform voted by the legislative bodies. The will continue in their functions independently of the Constitutional Assembly. The members in this Assembly shall be equal to the number of the members in the two legislative bodies together.

The twenty-fifth and last section is entitled "Concerning Transitory Dispositions." It is as follows:

1. The Senate on being organized for the first time, the Senators shall be divided into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year. Lots shall decide which Senators shall belong to each class for each one of the departments.

2. Ninety days after the promulgation of the electoral law that may be prepared and adopted by the convention the election of the functionaries provided for in the Constitution shall be proceeded with for the transfer of the Government of Cuba to those who may be elected, in conformity with Order No. 301 from the headquarters of the Division of Cuba of July 25, 1900.

3. All laws, regulations, orders, and decrees which may be in force at the time of the promulgation of the Constitution shall continue to be observed until they are replaced by others.

PIKE HEIRS' INDIAN CLAIM.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—There was considerable debate in the Senate to-day on a committee amendment to the Indian Appropriation bill providing for the payment to the heirs of Gen. Albert Pike of $75,000 by the Choctaw Nation for services rendered in the collection of about $3,000,000 from the United States.

Mr. Gallinger (Rep., N. H.,) brough out the fact that already the Choctaw Nation had paid $900,000 as attorneys' fees in the collection of its claim of $3,000,000 against the Government. He declared there ought to be a law against such rapacity as that, and denounced it as "outrageous and villainous in the extreme."

Mr. Jones (Ark.) maintained that the claim of Gen. Pike's heirs was perfectly just and reasonable.

Mr. Gallinger finally withdrew the point of order he had proposed against the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. McKinley Makes Nominations.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The President to-day sent the following nominations to the Senate:

Army—Cavalry: Second Lieutenants to be First Lieutenants—William Kelly, Second Cavalry; G. T. Summerlin, Eighth Cavalry.

Treasury—Henry T. Powell of Maryland to be a Second Assistant Engineer in the Revenue Cutter Service.

Naval Appropriation Bill.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The House to-day passed the Naval Appropriation bill after striking out the item appropriating $18,000 for new buildings at the Naval Observatory.

Defends the Measure in a Speech in the Senate.

The Only Thing, He Says, that Will Aid the Merchant Marine—Slow Boats Get Most Help.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Senator Chauncey M. Depew delivered a set address in the Senate to-day in favor of the Shipping Subsidy bill, which, he said, is the only remedy for the present stagnation in the merchant marine.

Senator Depew began with a survey of the country's first century of development, pointing out the immense material progress that had been made in agriculture and manufactures, how American exports had grown to $1,500,000,000 annually in excess of imports, and how the internal lines of communication had been developed into the most comprehensive in the world. But he insisted that the development of the country had been one-sided. While prepared to feed and clothe half of the world outside the United States, the country had developed its transportation system only to its own coast line, and had allowed the merchant marine to remain undeveloped, so that there was actually a greater tonnage of American vessels built in this country for the foreign trade in 1807 than in 1900.

Looking to the remedy for the present stagnation in the American merchant marine, Mr. Depew said the cry of "free ships" had long ago been discounted. It was not to be considered as a remedy, for it left out of the question the development of an American shipbuilding industry. The plan of discriminating duties, he said, was also impracticable. France had tried it and been forced to repeal her law within a year. No nation would submit to discriminating duties without retaliating, and no nation like this one, which is more of a seller than a buyer, can afford to provoke such retaliation and thus stimulate production in Russia, India, Egypt, and Asia against American cotton and American corn. The speaker's conclusion was that there remained only the subsidy as a practical solution of the problem. He continued:

"All nations are agreed that their merchant marine can be built up only by bounties. The bounties paid last year by the different maritime nations were $26,000,000 in round numbers, against $1,000,000 in round numbers by the United States. Within the past few years the German Government has been increasing directly its subsidies, has indirectly been giving rebates to the steamships over the State railways, and has lent every possible Government encouragement to the enlargement of German shipyards and the construction and operation of German steamships. The result has been that Germany has stepped into the second place among maritime nations, although she has so little coast and so few ports. The advance of Japan by the same processes has been almost incredible, in fact, so great that she is now reaching out for the control of the commerce of the Pacific.

"The present Subsidy bill creates no favors, it fosters no interests, but it lays down universal rules by which the capital and enterprise of the people can demand their share of the subsidy. It is restricted to no class of vessels, but is given upon a scale adjusted after most careful consideration to every kind and every tonnage of steamship, to the sailing ships, and to the fostering and encouragement of our fisheries, which are the nurseries of our seamen.

"Of the three principal objections raised against the bill, the first is that the existing lines will get all the money. Of the $9,000,000 per annum, the amount which the American Line can earn is $1,100,000, being the sum which passed the Senate in the original Postal Subsidy bill. The amount which can be received by the ships of that company and all other 21-knot steamers hereafter built combined can not exceed $2,000,000 a year.

"Another objection is that the bill does not give sufficient encouragement to the tramp steamer; in other words, to the slow or ten-knot or eleven-knot steamship. Figures show that the excess of compensation under this bill to the ten-knot or eleven-knot steamship over the cost of operation and maintenance is greater than for the high-speed steamer. It costs eight times as much to run a twenty-one-knot steamer as it does a ten-knot steamer. It is the middle-class steamer of from fourteen to seventeen knots speed which builds up commerce. It carries few passengers. Its main cargo is freight—cereals from the farm and the heavy machinery from the factory.

"We must not forget in this discussion the fact which it is almost impossible for an American to comprehend, that while the sea power is acknowledged now by all statesmen to be the controlling element in the world's affairs, we must build ours up from the bottom. We have no ships; we have totally inadequate shipyards; we have no routes of commerce; we have no banking facilities in foreign ports; we have few agents in foreign countries for promoting the sale and advocating the merits of American productions.

"It is estimated that there is paid by American producers to foreign shipowners in freight charges at least $175,000,000 a year. Four per cent upon this would give us an American merchant marine and the expenditure of the greater part of this money in our own country. It is estimated that if our tonnage was carried in American bottoms, and the money paid to American ships and American shipyards enlarged to meet the demands of American construction, there would be direct employment given to nearly 200,000 men.

"While we were isolated geographically, diplomatically, and commercially we could have sentimental relations, useful for international compliment and laudatory addresses on festive occasions, but now we have no friends. National sentiment of enmity or friendship speedily makes its way to citizens or subjects. The officers of foreign ships, the bankers and agents, also foreigners, who now conduct our export business will grow more and more hostile with advancing years in their feelings, and feelings are reflected in actions.

"With the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, which will be completed within the next few years, the necessity for an auxiliary fleet and a merchant marine becomes still greater. Whether we look at this question as a matter of National defense in time of war or consider it as one of the factors in the solution of our industrial problems as they arise from time to time, or sum up the possibilities for the American farm and factory and mine in the wants present and potential of the millions in the Orient, the beneficent influence of this measure becomes more real."

Upon the conclusion of Mr. Depew's speech he was the recipient of cordial congratulations from many Senators.

HOUSE ADOPTS ARMY BILL.

Accepts the Conference Report by Vote of 133 to 100—Two Democrats with Majority.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The House to-day adopted the conference report on the Army Reorganization bill. The report was submitted by Mr. Hull, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. Richardson, (Tenn.,) the minority leader, requested that the report be allowed to lie over until to-morrow. The report had not been printed, he said, and members should have an opportunity to examine it. Mr. Hull would not agree to this. He said the conference had been full and fair in the presence of the minority representatives, and while they did not agree to the principle of increasing the standing army they had agreed to the result. The Army bill, he said, should have been a law three weeks ago. It had been held up.

"It has not been held up here," observed Mr. Richardson.

"Not here," replied Mr. Hull, "but it has been outrageously delayed in the Congress of the United States." Proceeding, Mr. Hull explained in detail the concessions of the two houses on the various items. In the course of his statement he had a sharp exchange with Mr. Richardson.

Mr. Hull made a strong appeal to both sides of the House in favor of the provisions designed to retire Gen. Shafter as a Major General and Gens. Lee and Wilson as Brigadier Generals, provisions which the House had stricken out. He passed a glowing eulogy upon Gen. Shafter, whose Santiago campaign, he declared, would pass into history as one of the greatest planned and fought in any age. He was closely questioned about various features of the conference report. In reply to Mr. Adams, (Rep., Penn.,) he said the House conferees had made very little effort to retain the House provision for a veterinary corps.

Mr. Hay (Dem., Va.,) explained that he had not favored a number of provisions agreed to by the conferees, but he had been voted down. Upon the advice of a Democratic Senator who had served twenty years that it was his duty to do so he had signed the report.

The previous question was then demanded, and the roll was called, upon the adoption of the conference report. It was adopted, 133 to 100. Two Democrats, Clayton (N. Y.) and Livingston, (Ga.,) voted for the report.

In the Senate Mr. Hawley, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, stated that an agreement had been reached by the conferees upon the Army Reorganization bill, and he requested that the bill be printed for the use of Senators. After a brief colloquy the request was agreed to with the understanding that the report was not presented formally to the Senate.

FILIPINOS WANT SPOONER BILL.

Federal Party Says It Is an Urgent Necessity—Others Urge Passage of the Measure.

MANILA, Jan. 25.—The Executive Committee of the Federal Party has filed a petition requesting the Philippine Commission to urge upon President McKinley that the passage of the Spooner bill by Congress is an urgent necessity. The reasons given for this step are that the progress of the archipelago demands an authority which can legislate and control the incorporation of concerns, regulate mining claims, dispose of public lands, and perform other functions not vested in either the military or legislative authorities.

The petitioners state that the time is ripe for a general civil government, the establishment of which will win over those favoring the insurrection, while, at the same time, it will encourage the natives who are subscribing in favor of a settled government in the Philippines under American sovereignty. Therefore, they urge that the Spooner bill, which empowers President McKinley, in his discretion, to declare the insurrection ended and to establish a civil government, be passed by the present Congress.

The officials of the Manila Chamber of Commerce and other persons express their intention of cabling to President McKinley to the same effect.

Secretary Root has advised the commission to inform inquirers that the ports in the southern islands will not be closed.

WANTS FIGHTING TO STOP.

Senator Towne's Resolution Demands Cessation of Hostilities in Philippines.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Senator Towne (Minn.) offered the following joint resolution:

"That justice, the public welfare, and the National honor demand the immediate cessation of hostilities in the Philippine Islands, upon terms recognizing the independence of the Philippine people and conserving and guaranteeing the interests of the United States."

Mr. Towne asked that the resolution lie on the table and gave notice that on Monday next he would address the Senate upon it.

OPPOSES DOCK PURCHASE.

Admiral Endicott Pronounces Against Accepting Spain's Offer.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Spain offered to sell to the United States the floating steel dry dock at Havana, the price fixed being $250,000. Admiral Endicott, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, has now reported adversely to the purchase.

He finds that the dock needs repairs, which will cost $220,000. If it is desired to bring the dock to the United States it will cost $60,000 more to get it ready for a sea trip, bringing up the cost to $280,000, in addition to the $250,000 asked by the Spanish Government. Admiral Endicott reports that a new dock can be built for less than that. He has therefore reported that the purchase should not be made, and Secretary Long to-day approved the recommendation.

Consular and Diplomatic Salaries.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, carrying something over $1,700,000, was completed to-day by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and reported by Chairman Hitt. It provides $20,000 for purchasing land at Peking for the United States Legation there, Minister Conger having advised the extension. Other changes made by the bill are: Salary of Minister to Bolivia increased from $5,000 to $7,500; Consulate established at Niu-Chwang, China, at $3,000, and at Moscow, Russia, at $1,500; Consulate at Chung-King, China, abolished; Consul General at Constantinople made United States Agent at Sofia, Bulgaria, and salary raised from $2,500 to $3,000. Several of the minor Consulates receive a slight increase in salary.

Lieut. Col. Ingalls Retired.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Lieut. Col. James M. Ingalls, Third Artillery, was placed on the retired list to-day. He joined the army in 1864 as a private, and was promoted gradually until May, 1865, when he was made Lieutenant. In 1872 he was transferred to the artillery arm, becoming a Captain in 1880 and Major in 1897. He was made Lieutenant Colonel last year.

His retirement results in the promotion of Major E. Van Arsdale Andruss, Fourth Artillery, to be Lieutenant Colonel of the Third; Capt. Frank Thorp of the Fifth Artillery to be Major of the Fourth; First Lieut. J. E. McMahon of the Fourth to be Captain of the Fifth; Second Lieut. Fox Conner, Second Artillery, to be First Lieutenant, Fourth Artillery.

War Revenue Reduction Bill.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The report that the Senate committee in the amendments it suggested to the War Revenue Reduction bill removed the tax from cosmetics, perfumeries, chewing gum, and sparkling wines is erroneous. The committee reduced the tax on some medicinal preparations and removed it from others, but left it on the articles mentioned as in the existing law.

Congressional Notes.

The Senate yesterday passed a bill to establish, at an expense of $10,000, a lobster hatchery in the State of Maine.

The House Committee on Invalid Pensions has reported favorably the bill for the creation of a Court of Appeals for the final adjudication of pension cases.

The Senate yesterday passed a bill granting to the employes of naval stations, navy yards, arsenals, and gun factories fifteen days' leave of absence each year.

The President pro tem. of the Senate has appointed Mr. Bacon (Dem., Ga.,) to read Washington's Farewell Address in the Senate on Washington's Birthday.

The House yesterday passed seventy-seven private pension bills. One of the bills aroused the ire of Mr. Talbert, (Dem., S. C.,) who declared it was an outrage that men who deserted their flag should have their records cleared. He served notice that if he could prevent it, no other bill to remove the charge of desertion should pass so long as he was a member of the House.

Representative H. O. Smith of Michigan yesterday introduced a bill for a "National Freight Commission" to fix, adjust, and regulate freight rates. The commission is to be composed of twelve members, appointed for life, who are to have general supervision, regulation, and classification of freight, and to determine how freight rates shall be divided between railroads, &c.

RELIGIOUS NEWS AND VIEWS

New York Churches Will Honor Queen Victoria.

State Convention of the Y. M. C. A. to be Held in Sections—Evangelizing City Prisons.

In almost every church in New York tomorrow some ceremony, more or less formal, according to the church, will be observed in commemoration of the death of Queen Victoria. In the majority of the churches these services will be very slight, and will consist of little more than a reference to the life of the Queen in the prayers and in the sermon. In the Episcopal and Presbyterian churches the services will be more elaborate than in the churches of other denominations. A special memorial service will be held in the Metropolitan Temple, at Fourteenth Street and Seventh Avenue, to-morrow afternoon at 4. The Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and other members of the parish staff will deliver addresses. In St. James's Episcopal Church, at Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street, special mention will be made in the service to-morrow of the Queen's death.

Prayers will be said for her and for King Edward VII. Special prayers will also be said in the Scotch Presbyterian Church, at Central Park West and Ninety-sixth Street, and in Grace Church, at Broadway and Tenth Street. Plans have been made for further commemorative services at St. James's and the Scotch Presbyterian Churches, to be attended by British societies. Announcements of the services will be made to-morrow. A service may be held in St. George's, but at present the rector is absent and nothing is known of the details. A week from to-day a requiem for the especial benefit of the English members of the parish will be held in the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, at Forty-sixth Street and Seventh Avenue. The service in Trinity Church, at Broadway and Wall Street, which will occur at about the same hour as the Queen's funeral in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, will be probably the most impressive of any of the services to be held in this city.

The Young Men's Christian Association of this State will hold its State convention this year in three sections. The first section will be at Watervliet, from Feb. 8 to Feb. 10; the second will be at Lockport, from Feb. 15 to Feb. 17, and the third will be at Utica, from Feb. 22 to Feb. 24. Mr. S. M. Styford, the evangelist, will preside at each of the meetings. Special conferences will be held for the student and railroad delegates, and the whole convention will be a business men's gathering for the discussion of practical topics in the various departments of the association.

The Bowery Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association will observe its twenty-ninth anniversary to-morrow.

A popular meeting of the Gospel Mission to the Tombs, at which the Rev. Roderick Terry, D. D., President of the mission, will preside, will take place to-morrow evening at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, at Madison Avenue and Fifty-third Street. The Rev. George T. Purves, D. D., of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church will speak on the importance of evangelizing our city prisons.

PROF. JACKSON GOES TO INDIA.

Will Act as Arbiter on Religious Questions Between Parsees and English.

On the Cunard steamship Lucania, which sails for Europe to-day, will be Prof. A. D. W. Jackson of Columbia University, who goes to India on six months' leave of absence to engage in original research in connection with the ancient sources of Zend and Sanskrit literature. While in India Prof. Jackson will incidentally settle a question in dispute between the Parsees of Bombay and the Government of Great Britain.

In Bombay Prof. Jackson will be the guest of the Parsees, at whose invitation it is said he has undertaken to decide the several religious questions that will fix definitely the relations between their Church and the English Government. The reason for the selection of Prof. Jackson as arbiter is his wide reputation as one of the foremost Sanskrit scholars of the world. Indeed, his published work on Zoroaster, which is regarded as a standard, has caused him to be recognized as the highest authority on the religion of that founder.

A farewell supper was given Prof. Jackson at the University Club on Thursday evening, at which a number of professors and graduates were present. Among these were Profs. Woodbury, Price, Pupin, Butler, Peck, and Crucker, the Rev. John Peters of St. Michael's Church, and John Kendrick Bangs of Harper's Weekly. Prof. Hopkins of Yale University, who is to occupy the chair of the late Prof. Whitney, and is himself an eminent Sanskrit scholar, was also present.

Prof. Jackson is now thirty-eight years of age. He is a graduate of Columbia, having taken his degree from that institution in 1883. He was a classmate and is a brother-in-law of Prof. Pupin, the inventor of ocean telephony.

At the New Jerusalem Church.

"The Report of the Spies" will be the subject of the Rev. Julian K. Smyth's sermon to-morrow morning at the New Jerusalem Church, Thirty-fifth Street, east of Park Avenue.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Notes of the International Series Selection for Feb. 3, 1901.

Copyright, 1901, by John R. Whitney.

SUBJECT.—Parable of the Ten Virgins.—Matthew, xxv., 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Watch, therefore; for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein The Son of Man cometh.—Matthew, xxv., 13.

The incident of this lesson occurred, probably, on the same day as the one which we considered last week—on our Tuesday, in the afternoon. But the instruction was not given in the same place, or addressed to the same people. That was in the Temple, and was spoken particularly to the chief priests, scribes, and Pharisees, with the multitude and the disciples standing by. This was spoken on Mount Olivet, and when Jesus was alone with His disciples. It was addressed especially to them. This is an important key to its understanding.

When Jesus had met the questions of the Herodians, the Sadducees, and the Pharisees that day, so completly silencing them that "after that they durst not ask Him any questions at all," (Luke, xx., 40.) He turned from them, and speaking "to the multitude, and to His disciples," He said, "The Scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat; but all their works they do for to be seen of men. They make broad their phylacteries, and love the chief seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi." (Matthew, xxiii., 1-7.)

Then apparently turning from "the multitude" and addressing Himself particularly "to His disciples," He said to them, "But be not ye called Rabbi, for One is your Master—even Christ; (and all ye are brethren." (Matthew, xxiii., 8-12.)

Having given them this admonition, He again addressed Himself to the whole company and depicted the "woes" that should come upon the "Scribes and Pharisees," and all "hypocrites." (Matthew, xxiii., 13-39.) There is perhaps no passage in the Gospel narratives more sorrowful, more solemn, and at the same time more terrible than this, and it is the more terrible because it is so sorrowful. Many, however, have looked upon it as not being at all a sad lament, but only a bitter and righteous denunciation of the most deadly and damning form of evil prevailing in His age, or that can prevail in any age—religious hypocrisy—and as such it forms a necessary part of the Righteous One's witness-bearing in behalf of the truth." (Bruce.)

THE MISSION OF JESUS.

All this and probably much more is undoubtedly true, and would be a perfectly satisfactory explanation, if Jesus' mission was simply intended to make men better in their relations to one another. This is a very common, but a very low and insufficient view to take of His work. For He was far more than a mere man, and His work a far more important one than a life-long protest against the hypocrisy, the selfishness, the pride, and all the forms of unrighteousness which we see in men. He was the Son of God, and His work was to bring men into right relations to God and His law.

He was, in fact, in Jerusalem at that time, on purpose to complete this work by giving Himself as a sacrifice for our sins. He knew and realized as no man could possibly know everything involved in that completion, not only in regard to Himself, but in regard to all others. But as our Sin-Bearer, His great thought was not for Himself. It was for those whom He came to redeem. It was so all through His ministry, but it was especially so during these "six days." So when He entered Jerusalem, we do not find Him rejoicing with those that rejoiced, for He knew how mistaken they were, but His whole heart went out toward those who were rejecting Him, saying, even with tears, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes." (Luke, xix., 42.)

All of His teaching at this time was pitched in this same minor key. It was a sorrowful setting forth of this rejection, and it was illustrated by the parables of "The Two Sons," (Matthew, xxi., 28-32.) "The Wicked Husbandmen," (Mark, xii., 1-12.) and "The Marriage of the King's Son." (Matthew, xxii., 1, 14.) When they answered Him, therefore, with their petty questions concerning taxes, and marriage, and quibbles about the law, how very significant was His inquiry, "What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is He?" That was the all-important question.

This they would not answer, for they were not willing to confess Him, and He saw clearly the fearful doom that awaited them in consequence. It must have filled Him with unutterable sadness. They had persistently failed to meet the expectations which were warranted by their privileges, and now—like the fig tree in the way—He saw them doomed to be "dried up from the roots" by the judicial sentence of God's judgment. As He contemplated the results of their rejection of Him, it must have been a fearful sight that presented itself to His mind, and we cannot conceive how He could say "Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites," in any but the tenderest tones of unrequited love. Evidently it was in such tones that He closed the discourse and said, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." (Matthew xxiii., 38, 39.) The whole discourse must have been in the same tone. It was not a denunciation, but a lamentation, as sorrowful and as loving as that of David over Absalom. (Second Samuel xviii., 33.)

THE WIDOW'S MITE.

As He finished His discourse and turned to leave, His attention was arrested by seeing "a certain poor widow casting two mites" into the treasury, while the rich cast in but little from their abundance. (Luke, xxi., 1-4.) Pausing for a moment to commend her, He left the Temple and never entered it again. Neither did He ever again address the chief priest, and Scribes, and Pharisees," or even "the multitude," in any other place. Henceforth His instructions were confined entirely to His disciples.

As He went out of the Temple, His disciples, filled with the admiration for it, common to all Jews, called His attention to its magnificence. "how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts." (Luke, xxi., 5.)

Master," said one of them, "see what manner of stones and what buildings are here!" (Mark, xiii., 1.)

"Seest thou these great buildings?" (Mark.) Jesus sadly replied, "Behold, the days will come in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." (Luke.)

That Jerusalem might be destroyed, they could understand and appreciate, but such a catastrophe as the destruction of the Temple was an impossibility. It was utterly beyond their comprehension. For the Temple was the dwelling place of God, and to their minds it was as eternal as He. So they walked on in silence.

Crossing the brook Kedron, they slowly ascended the Mount of Olives. When opposite the Temple (Mark xiii., 3,) they sat down to rest. The last rays of the setting sun were lighting up its golden roof, and they were wrapt in the contemplation of the panorama spread before them. But the strange words of their Master still greatly troubled them. "Peter and James, and John and Andrew," (Mark,) especially could not restrain themselves. So they "came unto Him privately," (Matthew,) "and they asked Him" (Luke) "privately" (Mark) "saying, Master, but when shall these things be? And what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass?" (Luke.) "Tell us, when shall these things be?" (Matthew,) "And what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled?" (Mark.) "And what shall be the sign of Thy coming and of the end of the world?" (Matthew.)

To their minds, the fulfillment of Daniel's vision, when he saw that "One like the Son of Man came with the clouds of Heaven"—(Daniel, vii., 13)—the end of the world—and the destruction of the Temple—would be all at one and the same time. It would be when "the great and terrible day of the Lord," spoken of by the prophet, should come. (Joel, ii., 31.)

So Jesus, accommodating Himself to their ignorance, answered their questions as they themselves understood them. It has always, therefore, been a difficult matter to determine with any exactness the particular application of each part of His answer. Every part of it, however, related to a coming judgment which was altogether uncertain as to time, but absolutely and terribly certain as a fact. It was associated with His coming again. For this judgment, whatever it might be, and whenever it might come, He bade them to be prepared. "For The Son of Man," He said, "is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch." (Mark, xiii., 34-37.) "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that you may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before The Son of Man." (Luke, xxi., 36.)

To enforce and illustrate this exhortation "to watch" that they might be ready at any time "to stand before the Son of Man," He used the three very striking and significant parables recorded in the twenty-fifth chapter of St. Matthew. They are as striking and significant and as connected as the three which mark the fifteenth chapter of St. Luke. Those were addressed to the unbelieving multitude, and set forth the riches of God's grace in seeking and saving the lost. These, however, are addressed to His believing disciples, and set forth the conditions, and obligations, resting upon them. They are the parables of "The Ten Virgins," "The Talents," "The Sheep and Goats," or "The Judgment." They declare of God's children that:

All are now waiting.
All should be working.
All must be judged.

The first of these three connected truths is set forth in the parable of "The Ten Virgins." In this parable, the number "ten," as we saw in the parable of "The Pounds," does not refer to any small group, but "all who are enrolled as the disciples of Christ. The term is not specific, but general, and implies—complete—fullness. The instruction, therefore, is not only addressed to all who have named the name of Christ, but it is needed by all, for "he is not a Jew," neither is he a Christian, "which is one outwardly. But he is a Jew," and he is a Christian, "which is one inwardly, whose praise is not of men, but of God." (Romans ii., 28, 29.)

THE JUDGMENT SEAT.

While it is perfectly true, therefore, that "when the Son of Man shall come in His glory, before Him shall be gathered all nations," (Matthew, xxv., 31, 32,) it is particularly true that "before Him shall be gathered all" professed believers. This the Apostle declares with emphasis when he says of himself and his brethren, "We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ," and "then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." (Romans, xiv., 10-12.) Then it will be clearly and forever revealed whether we have been His "inwardly" or "outwardly." And this parable—and those with which it stands connected—were all told by our Lord to admonish those who profess to be His disciples, lest the same judgment should come upon them as upon the openly rebellious, whose end He had just set before them with so much sorrow. If He grieved over them, how much more would He grieve over those who had once called themselves His, and were not!

Thus, in this company of His disciples there are always found those who are "wise" and those who are "foolish," those who build "upon a rock," and those who build "upon the sand." (Matthew, vii., 24, 27.) For a profession of faith in Christ is such a mark of social respectability, and has such beautiful moral attractions, and is such a balm for a troubled conscience, that it is made by very many, especially in our day, who have never truly realized either the holiness and justice of God, or the exceeding sinfulness of sin, or the need of an atoning Saviour, or experienced the renewing of the Holy Ghost. Even in the little company called "the twelve" there was one who made a fair appearance at the first, but who in the end was found to be "a thief" (John, xii., 6,) and "a devil." John, vi., 70.)

How and when the discovery is made as to who are "wise," and who are "foolish," is the emphatic point in this parable. It is very graphically presented to us under the conditions of Oriental weddings. These marriage festivals lasted sometimes several days, but the period of greatest public interest was that when the bridegroom conducted his bride from her parents' house to her future home. This was usually done at night when the parties, accompanied by their respective friends, joined in a glad procession, and the scene, lit up by countless torches, and enlivened by choral songs, or instrumental music, was peculiarly exciting and delightful." (Right Rev. William Bacon Stevens.) To fittingly receive this procession and to give the bridegroom a glad welcome into his own house with his bride, some or his friends, with their lamps in their hands, waited his coming and all who were prepared entered with him into the joy of the marriage supper.

So the professed friends of the true Bridegroom—the true, and the nominal friends of Christ—go forth. To the outward eye there is no difference between them; no one can tell who are "wise" and who are "foolish."

Both are called by the same name.
Both go forth with the same expectations.
Both make the same professions.
Both await the coming of the Bridegroom.
Both fall asleep in death.
Both awake at the resurrection.
Both appear to be ready for His coming.

But now a difference is seen.

The "wise" have an abundance of the "oil" of divine grace.
The "foolish" have none.
The "wise" are filled with light and joy.
The "foolish" are in darkness and are confounded.
The "wise" go in to "The Marriage Supper of the Lamb."
The "foolish" go away.
The "wise" are shut in, and are forever safe.
The "foolish" are shut out, and are forever lost.

Thus, as in the figure, these "Foolish Virgins" said, "Lord, Lord, open to us," and he replied, "I know you not," so, in fact, our Lord Himself says—"Many will say to Me in that day—Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils? and in Thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them—I never knew you; depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." (Matthew, vii., 22-23.)

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

When was the instruction of this lesson given, and to whom was it addressed?

What did Jesus say of the Scribes and Pharisees, and what admonition did He give His disciples?

How is it shown that the "woes" He pronounced upon "the Scribes and Pharisees" was a lament, and not a denunciation?

What was Jesus' last act in the Temple, and what is said in connection with it?

What did He say concerning the Temple, and how did it affect the disciples?

What questions did they ask on the Mount of Olives, and what is said of Jesus' reply?

How did He enforce and illustrate His exhortation to watch, and what did His three parables declare?

What truth is set forth in the parable of "The Ten Virgins," and to what does the number "ten" refer?

What is particularly true of Jesus' disciples, and what is said of it?

Why is it that there are the "foolish" as well as the "wise" among Jesus' disciples?

What is the emphatic point in this parable, and how is it illustrated?

How are the "wise" and the "foolish" contrasted, and when will the difference between them be clearly revealed?

SAYS LAWYER OVERCHARGED.

Referee Recommends that Edward Devoe Be Ordered to Make Restitution.

Ex-Judge Nelson Smith, as referee, filed a report in the County Clerk's office yesterday which is liable to cause a most bitter legal fight. His report finds that a lawyer of this city has taken over $2,000 in addition to the fees allowed him by the Court, and he recommends that the lawyer be ordered to return these fees at once. The lawyers has announced his intention to fight the case clear up to the Court of Appeals.

The case in which this complication arises is that of Matilda Davies of Mountain Grove, Mo., against Edward Devoe.

Some time ago Miss Davies found out that she was one of the heirs to the estate of Henry Van Axte, who died in this city some thirty years ago. She retained Mr. Devoe, and he caused a partition of the estate, and under this partition Miss Davies was entitled to $12,486.72, but she received $2,186.72 less than this amount. Mr. Devoe claiming that he had a percentage agreement with Miss Davies.

She later retained Robert P. Noah to look after her interests, and he instituted the present proceedings. The referee found that there was no agreement between Miss Davies and Mr. Devoe, and, as he had received $2,000 special allowance from the Van Axte estate as his fees, he was not entitled to anything further.

Mr. Devoe still claims his rights to the money retained from the sum recovered for Miss Davies, and declares he will fight the case all the way through to the highest courts. Meanwhile Miss Davies's lawyers are not idle, and they will make a motion in the Supreme Court to-day demanding that Mr. Devoe pay the costs of the reference and take up the report for final confirmation.

$260,000 FIRE IN MONTREAL.

Insurance Rates on Business Buildings Increased One-half Owing to Many Fires.

MONTREAL, Quebec, Jan. 25.—D. A. McPherson and Hodgson Brothers, dealers in butter and cheese, were burned out this morning. About 25,000 boxes of cheese are said to have been destroyed. McPherson's loss is about $250,000; insurance, $232,000. Hodgson Brothers' loss is about $10,000, fully covered by insurance. William Johnston and Nicholas Pitt, two other dealers, also suffered a small loss.

Owing to the recent fires, it is announced that insurance rates will be advanced at once. The rates on all risks on buildings and contents, except dwellings, is increased by one-half. On dwelling houses in the central part of the city the rate is increased by one-fourth. The average first-class commercial risk throughout the business portion of Montreal has been 75 cents for every $100 of value up till now.

Colored Mission's New Building.

A new five-story building will be erected on the lots 225 and 227 West Thirtieth Street, for the New York Colored Mission, by which organization the property has just been purchased. The mission is now located at 135 West Thirtieth Street. The President of the mission is Dr. Joshua L. Barton, and it receives substantial support from the Society of Friends. The site for the new building was bought from Mandelbaum & Lewine, real estate operators, through Brokers Collins & Collins.

Morning Newspaper Advertising.

From Printers' Ink.

"The pre-eminent success of the Wanamaker business," said Mr. Hotchkin of the New York branch to a reporter of a Printers' Ink contemporary, "is due to the fact that the most masterful methods of merchandising have been constantly coupled with the highest order of advertising." Talking of morning and evening papers, Mr. Hotchkin said:

"The question of preference for morning or evening papers is one of opinion and price. Few homes in these days of penny papers are without papers in the morning. The statement that a woman will allow her husband to carry off the paper when he goes down town is an insult to her intelligence as well as his interest in his family. Men are called 'lords of creation,' but I should be loath to believe that American men are so selfish and utterly lacking in regard for their wives as such an argument suggests. My personal belief is that papers bought on the way down town are additional to those left at home. When you consider that, on a conservative estimate, two morning papers are published for every family in Greater New York, this should indicate that two copies are provided for the majority of homes, after allowing the necessary percentage for foreign circulation. This theory is the only way of accounting for their distribution. Thus the evening papers become an additional proposition, duplicating as they do and probably exceeding the combined morning circulation—providing four or five papers for every house, flat, and apartment in the entire greater city. If at times evening papers of a certain class seem to bring most spontaneous returns for special offerings, the morning papers contribute an influence of more permanent value, on a clientele less fickle and spasmodic. I should say that a broad store that appeals so fully to all classes, as does the Wanamaker store, cannot afford to ignore either media for its announcements of merchandise news."

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

It is a funny little tempest in a teapot that is agitating Boston. There has been a theory—in the newspapers at least—that the Queen of Boston's social world was Mrs. "Jack" Gardner. Whether with or without reason, the world at large has come to believe that her social position was assured and akin to that of Mrs. William Astor in this city. Yet the Boston Skating Club has recently, and for the second time, rejected Mrs. Gardner's application for membership. Coming as it does on the heels of her announcement that she was to give to Boston as an art museum the Italian palace she has imported and re-erected in the swamps of the Back Bay district, this affront to Mrs. Gardner's position as a social leader has created a lot of talk. New Yorkers seem as much interested, perhaps more so, than do the residents of the Hub, who for a fact have come to be a little tired of the exploitation of Mrs. Gardner in the sensational journals of their town as a patroness of musicians and animals in the traveling "zoos." Mrs. "Nat." Thayer is one of the leading spirits of the Boston Skating Club, and it is said that she and her friends have decided that there has been almost too much attention paid to Mrs. "Jack," and that it is time to call a halt. Whether the following of the much-exploited Boston social lioness will now taboo the skating rink is the question uppermost in the minds of the socially elect of that town. The latest gossip from there, as noised about in this city, is that there will be two factions hereafter in Boston—the "Mrs. Jacks" and the antis. Blood, grandfathers, and incidental wealth will rule in the latter set, while the "Mrs. Jacks" will depend on their wealth and ability to entertain lavishly as the means for sustaining their leadership. Here seems at last a chance for "Copper" Lawson and his family to get into the swim with the latter crowd. If he does so, he will turn up his nose at the Cohasset set, who would not permit him to get a cottage site among them, and give them the merry ha! ha! while waving the pennant of an America's Cup defender under their noses, and casting the perfume of the Lawson pink all about the interior of the sacred home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. With Lawson's millions and her old following back of her, it is thought by the onlookers here that Mrs. Gardner is sure to have none the worst of it in the long run. But there will first be a tremendous social upheaval such as Boston has never before known.

Dealers in tobacco leaf have as an interesting bit of speculation just now the possibility of growing Sumatra tobacco in the Connecticut River district, where for several years past a lot of Havana wrappers have been raised. Sumatra tobacco has never been grown with any marked degree of success in this country save in one district in Florida. In the extreme northwestern part of the State, in and about Gadsden County, there has been a rather successful production of that leaf, but that has been practically controlled by one firm of manufacturers having headquarters in this city. The bulk of the Sumatra tobacco used here for cigar wrappers is just what it has pretended to be. Last season, under Government supervision, tobacco from the Sumatra seed was grown in Connecticut on quite a stretch of territory. It was raised under cover, the simulation of the conditions of the torrid zone being attained by the use of cotton sheeting rigged on poles and making a long tent about six feet in height. Artificial irrigation, constant attention, and the quality of the soil in the location experimented on, resulted in the obtaining of a leaf that at least looked well, and, so far as handlers can tell now, promises to make a fair substitute for the Sumatra leaf. How well it will stand the test cannot be told until the leaf has been made up into cigars and subjected to the only actual test—smoking. It is well satisfied is one large tobacco grower in the district. Ariel Mitchelson of Tariffville, that he has announced that he is going into the experiment of raising the Sumatra leaf on a large scale. Experts have decided that he has the right sort of soil in one of his fields. So he has placed an order for 15,000 yards of the strongest sort of cotton cloth from which the protecting tents will be constructed. Under these tents several acres of plants will be set when the weather permits, and a serious attempt be made to see how the experiment will turn out from a practical point. Dealers here have little faith in a successful result, as there are so many natural conditions operating against the grower, though they would be pleased to have success crown his efforts. That would open up a new and a possibly cheaper source of supply for the sort of leaf most cigarmakers must have in order to supply light-colored cigars.

A letter from a New York attendant at the races in California speaks in very glowing terms of Lester Reiff, the American jockey who has been riding with such marked success in England during the past two years. Of him he says: "Reiff has less trouble from a 'swelled head' than any jockey I remember who has met with such success as he has had. He still remains a modest, self-contained chap with a lot of good, sound common sense, though he has certainly had success enough to turn his head. But he seems made of different stuff from most of them. Last week he went down to the San José district and bought an orange ranch for which he paid a little upward of $20,000 in cash. This he has made over to his father and mother as a home for them for the rest of their days. They tell me there are about forty acres in the ranch, with a good lot of orange, lemon, and olive trees in bearing, and some pecan trees that will soon be ready to shed a good yearly crop. Reiff has bought a few cattle and a couple of horses for the old man, and his parents will be installed in their new home before he starts back to Europe. Lester says he wants to be sure that his folks are cared for, as he cannot tell what may happen him. Now that shows up the character of the boy, just as he is. No one knew what he was up to until the whole deal was completed, and then the story leaked out by accident. It is a shame that we are not able to keep such a gentlemanly level-headed chap as he is here in this country. A few of his sort would do a lot to raise the standard of the whole bunch of jockeys, for he is a living example to the rest of them of how well it pays to be honest and keep shy of that gang in the ring that raises the deuce with most of the boys. Racing out here is of the very 'doggy' sort; form is at a discount, and things have a frequent smell of jobbery. Old man Caldwell is starting, and doing some of the worst work with the flag that ever happened. If any of the boys have any intention of coming on here tell them to stay at home. The game is hard to beat, worse than it used to be at 'The Gut,' and it is as safe to play them in the rooms as it is here with the best of information."

Enforcement of the game laws and preservation of game are always live topics when a party of men interested in hunting and fishing get together. "Now, what in thunder is the use of a close season," said one of them yesterday, "when you can pick up a paper from any of the game districts and read a paragraph about like this: 'Mr. Frank S. Harrison, a sportsman widely known throughout the country, was at his father's home, in Cocoa, Fla., last week, and, in company with his worthy sire, killed 125 fine ducks in a couple of days'? I don't happen to know Frank S. Harrison, I am happy to say, but I deny that he is a sportsman. He strikes me as being what you newspaper men occasionally refer to as 'a game hog.' There is an utter absurdity in passing laws to protect game for men who like to hunt a little without turning the woods or waters into slaughter pens, when a couple of men can go out and kill such a lot of ducks as these two are reported to have done. It is impossible for them to eat such a lot of game, and, from what I happen to know about Cocoa, there are not people enough there to make way with such a string before the birds spoil. I suppose Frank S. Harrison would object to being called a pot hunter and a merciless destroyer of game simply for the sport of killing, but that is the way the thing looks here in New York. It is such people who call themselves 'sportsmen' who need to be suppressed. If these slaughterers could be reached, we would need no Lacey law to prevent you and me from getting a bit of game from a market if we want it. Think of a flock of ducks being exterminated by men who had no use for the birds and no possible way of disposing of them away down there in the wilds of Florida! The Southern papers will give you a hundred such incidents as the one I have read every week, I feel certain, from the few that I see. Yet we wonder why there is a scarcity of ducks and howl for legislation to protect them. Florida would not enforce a good game law if it had it. It has always been a slaughter house for visitors and feather hunters, and there are not many more egrets, herons, or alligators there now than there are in Central Park, just because the woods are full of men from the North of the Frank S. Harrison type."

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

RAILROAD DISCHARGES MEN.

Scores of New Haven and Hartford Employes Fail in Examination.

Special to The New York Times.

WINSTED, Conn., Jan. 25.—During the past few weeks the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad has discharged scores of employes, among the number some of their oldest and most reliable hands, because of their failure to pass examinations required by the company.

Engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, station agents, section foremen, gatemen, and others have either been dismissed outright or reduced to the ranks because of poor vision, inability to distinguish and read writing, and defective hearing.

Brief Railroad Items.

The question of adjusting differential passenger rates between New York and Chicago will be taken up at the next meeting of the Trunk Line Passenger Association.

The Grand Trunk Railway is adding one new passenger coach a week to its equipment. These cars are of the vestibule order, 68 feet long and weigh 72,100 pounds. Each car is fitted with a large smoking room, and has the latest improvements.

The anthracite coal roads are suffering from a scarcity of cars which seriously hampers the transportation of the output of the mines. It is not, therefore, expected that the anthracite tonnage for January will be as large as in December, when it aggregated 5,075,089 tons.

The report of the Central Passenger Association, just issued, for the year 1900, indicates great prosperity among the railroads, members of that organization. The number of interchangeable mileage books was 188,318, a large increase over 1899, when 156,974 books were sold.

Announcement was made yesterday of the resignation of Henry Budge from the Directory of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Company, as well as from the Executive Committee of that road.

MUST RETURN MONEY TO STATE.

Question of Fees of State Officials Decided by New Jersey Courts.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 25.—The New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals to-day affirmed the decision of the Supreme Court which held that ex-Secretary of State Henry C. Kalsey should return to the State about $20,000 which he had collected in fees, and which he claimed on the ground that the law gave him the fees in addition to his salary. The fees were collected for Mr. Kalsey's services as Clerk of the Prerogative Court, a duty which the State Constitution imposes upon the Secretary of State.

The Supreme Court this morning in another case decided that the estate of George S. Duryea should return to the State $12,000 which Mr. Duryea while Bank and Insurance Commissioner collected for fees from insurance companies and retained on the ground that the law give him the fees in addition to his salary.

The law in both cases provided for the collection of the fees by the officials named and the question was purely a legal one as to whether the fees belonged to the officials or to the State.

AN INTERESTING MUSICAL EVENT

SPECIAL PIANOLA RECITAL
Wednesday, January 30th, at 3:30 P. M.

GUSTAV DANNREUTHER, Violinist
EMIL SCHENCK, Violoncellist.

For fifteen years Mr. Dannreuther and his associates have given annually a series of concerts in New York, in which they have had the assistance of pianists of international reputation, and the programmes have invaded the entire field of chamber music.

That the Pianola is capable of being played satisfactorily in such a programme as the one given below, and that its performance in this rôle is acceptable to artists of such standing as Messrs. Dannreuther and Schenck, are subjects for the serious consideration of all music lovers.

The Pianola allows every one to play the piano at will, irrespective of musical training.

PROGRAM:

Sonata, Op. 100,
For Pianoforte and Violin .....Brahms
Celebrated Largo .....Handel
Pianoforte, Organ, Violin, and Violoncello.

Sonata in D Major, Op. 18
For Violoncello and Pianoforte....Rubinstein

Trio in C Minor, Op. 66
For Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello
Mendelssohn

NOTE—Admission will be by ticket, which can be obtained without charge by letter, enclosing a two-cent stamp for return postage, or by calling in person at the Æolian Company's Warerooms, 18 West 23d Street.

As the entertainment will be one of great popularity, the number of tickets issued can supply but a small part of the demand. Those who do not wish to run the risk of being disappointed are advised to send in their application as soon as possible.

LIGHT IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The President has sent to Congress a special message on the Philippine situation.

It submits a report of Secretary ROOT and a report of the Taft Commission under date of Nov. 30 last. The substance of the report of the commission is that the condition of the islands is such that in many parts civil government may now be established with advantage, and the general preservation of order be turned over to the agents of such government with the co-operation of the army instead of the present substantially complete military control.

For this purpose, however, legislation is necessary. The recommendation is made that the Spooner bill, with one valuable amendment, be adopted. The Spooner bill practically delegates to the President the authority to legislate as soon as insurrection ceases. The amendment suggested is that this delegation of authority shall take place as soon as the President shall decide that in any portion of the islands the conditions warrant the establishment of civil government.

Of course, the answer of the anti-imperialists to this suggestion will be that there is no authority in Congress to delegate the power to legislate to the President or to any other department of the Government. In theory that proposition is not without force. It has lately been examined with much care by a former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, and we shall take an early opportunity to discuss his conclusions. In the meanwhile the country will be thankful for the more detailed information communicated in the President's message on a matter of such grave importance as to which it has not felt itself at all clear.

LOOT AND INDEMNITY IN CHINA.

The more one blames the Chinese Government the more he must pity the Chinese people. That is almost an axiomatic statement of the case of any human people whatever which has been betrayed by evil rulers into an untenable position of which enemies have taken advantage. Experts report that Chinese are somewhat more stolid and apathetic, in their calm contemplation of any human suffering not their own, than the inhabitants of the Western World. It is possible that they may even be more stolid than the Russians. But ordinary human experience convinces ordinary human beings that some sympathy is necessary to keep any framework of human society in operation, or even in existence. Mohammedans have not a very good name for humanity. But one of the most impressive statements of the universality of kindness in the human race is nevertheless that of the Koran: "He made you having compassion on one another."

Assuming that the Chinese are human beings, we must admit that they have themselves been far worse treated than the Western missionaries and their Chinese converts have been treated by them. The Russians in their massacres in Manchuria; the Europeans, under the command of Field Marshal the Count von WALDERSEE, in their various unprovoked and unpunished acts of murder, arson, robbery, and rape, do not shine by the contrast with the Boxers. It is rather the Boxers who shine by contrast with them. That the Russians and the Europeans who have taken part in the punitive expeditions should assume such a superiority for their religion, or their civilization, as entities them to demand that China should consent to receive without remonstrance the missionaries of that civilization, is one of those grim jokes which amuse or sicken the beholder, according to his individual temperament. The point of it is heightened by the fact that the Christian missionaries themselves are understood to be the most vociferous plauditors of the operations, the most implacable demanders of Chinese blood.

The Chinese plenipotentiaries have not taken this view. All that they have thus far demanded is that the murders and other crimes committed under the direction of the Commander in Chief of the Allied Forces in China shall be allowed as a set-off against the murders of Christian ministers and converts. That seems an entirely fair proposition, since it does not include the necessary hostilities and homicides which were permitted in the endeavor to rescue the beleaguered legations, and which were, on account of their objects, legitimate acts of war. They also demand that the various buildings and articles wantonly destroyed or looted by the allied forces shall be allowed as a set-off against the claim for pecuniary indemnity. That also must strike the impartial mind as a fair proposition, the more because all the accounts that have reached us have represented the missionaries as having been as active in the looting of Chinese property as they had been in instigating the promiscuous taking of Chinese lives.

It will be interesting to see what the associated representatives at Peking of the kind of Christian civilization which has been illustrated by the allied forces will do with these propositions. The propositions themselves are undeniably fair. But the acceptance of them would apparently entail the disagreeable practical consequence that, upon the whole account, China owes the Western World no indemnity, but that the Western World has collected its damages and very much more, as it went along, inasmuch that the balance is against it, and that it owes China something. That is really not the case, because the Western World was forced to interfere for the protection of its missionary and diplomatic representatives who were endangered by the perfidious action of the Chinese Government. "Security for the future" the Western World is entitled to seek. But as for "indemnity for the past" it should moderate its demands, inasmuch as it has already done China, in lives and property, immensely more damage than was done to it by China. At any rate, every citizen of the United States who has any humanity, to say nothing of Christianity, must by this time be inclined to be grateful for the wisdom of his Government, which has kept him out of the frightful predicament into which greed of blood and greed of money have plunged the nations which continue to adhere to the "concert," after the legations had been rescued, and after the Commander in Chief of the Allied Forces had arrived in China and taken charge of operations.

THE PEOPLE AND THE SUBSIDY.

A Boston correspondent, in a most courteous spirit, sets forth the evidence which convinces him that we were in error in saying that the Ship Subsidy bill has no serious popular support and is not demanded by the shippers. We gladly call attention to his letter and the facts cited by him.

That the bill, even in its first and most offensive form, did obtain the indorsement of a considerable number of commercial organizations, is true. That in the case of some of these, as the one in Boston, referred to especially by our correspondent, this indorsement was given after discussion, is also true. But we cannot see that the action of such organizations is conclusive evidence of serious popular support. Our correspondent refers to the analogy between the action of these bodies in this matter and their advocacy of the gold standard. But surely it will not be claimed that there is anything like the same popular opinion aroused for this particular subsidy scheme as for that by which the gold standard was sustained. The mere mention of the two movements shows on what different bases they rest. The one was broad and just and without the slightest taint of favoritism for any class, much less for selected individuals. It was designed to establish and promote the rights and interests of all equally and permanently, and the richest man or corporation in the land could not derive a particle of unfair advantage from it. The ship subsidy certainly cannot so be described. Even its most enthusiastic admirers concede that whatever its ultimate benefits may be for the many, they go first and exclusively to the few.

In saying that the subsidy scheme was not demanded by the shippers, we did not have in mind solely those engaged directly in the shipping business, though this important class includes many opponents of the scheme. We referred chiefly to those whose commodities are shipped to foreign markets, the farmers and manufacturers of the country. Of these, and particularly the former, there is only a very small proportion in favor of the Hanna plan, for the simple and conclusive reason that it is impossible to see how they are to get any substantial benefit from it. It is not designed to promote the cheap shipment of freight. If it were, the bounties would be paid on freight. They are instead to be paid on the mere capacity to carry freight, whether the thing is there or not, and they are to be paid still more liberally on speed with only the slightest reference to freight-bearing capacity, and still less to actual carriage of freight. It is for this reason that many who are not opposed, as we are, to bounties for any class, are opposed to these bounties for the further enrichment of selected individuals.

THE CUBAN CONSTITUTION.

In the first draft of the Constitution by which it is proposed to establish the Island of Cuba as a free, independent, and sovereign nation, it will be observed that the federal system provided for is only in form comparable to ours. There is a central Government, with its President, Congress, and judiciary, and there are department Governments, with their Assemblies and Governors, corresponding to our States with their Legislatures and Governors. But the sovereignty resides in the whole people, not in the departments. There is nothing corresponding to our original sovereign States, which still retain all powers not surrendered to the Federal Government in the adoption of the Constitution.

The impress of Spanish forms of law and of the Spanish public system is visible throughout the instrument. There is much that we should say does not belong at all to the organic law, but should be left to legislative enactment. The liberty of the citizen seems to be protected by reasonable guarantees modeled on our own Bill of Rights, but with no such admirable compactness of expression.

It is evidently the intention of the convention that Cuba shall enjoy all the attributes of sovereignty, including the receiving and sending of diplomatic representatives and the concluding of treaties. There is apparently no thought of intrusting the foreign relations of the new republic to the supervision of the United States. If it is the intention to establish its relations with us upon a basis differing from that established for other nations, that intention is not foreshadowed in the provisional draft. The call for the convention authorized the delegates to determine that matter, however.

BRITISH TACT.

The individual Briton has not approved himself, except to himself, as a man of tact. The landlords and servants and fellow-travelers of the Continent of Europe, whose undying hatred it is his pride and pleasure to deserve, would not admit his sensibility at all. Throughout Europe, in fact, the British tourist is in the position of HORACE'S miser, whose consolation it was, when the populace hissed him, to applaud himself. And it must be admitted that, on this side of the Atlantic, the British tourist has been known to give rise to the same class of emotions with which he is regarded in Europe.

But, on the other hand, we have to admit that the proceedings in the public life of England, on grave occasions, are characterized by the exemplary dignity and moderation which in such matters are only other names for tact. The new sovereign has long been known and distinguished as a man of tact, even in circles in which that is a general possession. But he has never made this possession clearer than within these last few trying days. Nothing could have been in better taste than his speech to the Privy Council. Nothing could have been in better taste than his reply to the condolences of the President, as we have also on our part the satisfaction of knowing that nothing could have been in better taste than the matter and manner of the President's message to him. And yesterday the proceedings in the House of Commons were very edifying.

Mr. BALFOUR had a particularly difficult task to express what was in all men's minds, and to do it without approaching a hysterical or even an extravagant expression. It is not less important, upon such an occasion, that a tribute shall be measured and guarded than that it shall be sincere. In fact, we may say that the whole official proceedings taken since the death of Queen VICTORIA and in relation to it have been appropriate and dignified. That is only another way of saying that they have amounted, so far as they went, to a vindication, and even a triumph, of British tact.

GERMAN AND AMERICAN CITIES.

We published Sunday morning an interesting table of the cities of the German Empire having a population in 1900 of more than 100,000, with the increase since 1895, when the last census was taken. They were 32 in number and the increase varied from 7 per cent. to as high as 60 per cent. in the five years. The smallest city in population was Cassel, with 105,055, and the largest was Berlin, with 1,884,345. The total population of the 32 cities was in round numbers 9,000,000.

Considering that the total population of the empire is only a little over 52,000,000, and that its area is only 211,000 square miles, this is a remarkable showing. It will be better understood by a brief comparison with the United States. This country had a population in 1900 of 78,000,000 and an area of nearly 4,000,000 square miles. It had 38 cities of more than 100,000 each. The total population of these cities was in round numbers 14,250,000. It will be seen that the difference in total population and in population of cities of this size bears about the same proportion as in Germany. In each case we have some 50 per cent. more than Germany.

The tendency in the United States, however, toward larger cities is much more pronounced than in Germany. The number of cities in each country having a population of less than 500,000 is about the same; but the United States has three cities between 500,000 and 1,000,000 and three cities of over 1,000,000, while Germany has but one of each class. The six cities of the United States of over half a million have a total population of 8,000,000, while the two cities of the same class in Germany have a total of only 2,588,000. It would seem that the tendency of native population in each country toward urban life is of about the same force.

THE LAW AND THE SPITTERS.

There is a very general impression that the ordinance of the Health Board against spitting in a public conveyance cannot be enforced, because no penalty is affixed by law to the commission of the offense. This impression is a mistaken one. There is a definite and pretty severe penalty provided by law, quite sufficient, if applied, to check all but the most reckless, and sufficient to deter even them from a second offense. If the case is tried in Special Sessions, the penalty is $50 fine or six months' imprisonment, or both such fine and imprisonment. If the accused is indicted by the Grand Jury and convicted the penalty is a fine of $500 or imprisonment for one year, or both the fine and imprisonment.

Undoubtedly the notices posted in the public conveyances would have much greater effect if they contained a statement in plain letters of the legal penalty. It is made the duty of the companies operating the railway lines to post notices of the ordinance in a conspicuous place in each car. We have already called attention to the fact that the Metropolitan Company has taken out the notices from some of its cars, or else is running cars in which the notice is not posted. This is the more remarkable because its are the lines in which the largest proportion of the passengere would desire the enforcement of the ordinance, and the smallest proportion would object to it. The company should be the first and most careful to use all the power it has to do away with this most disagreeable and dangerous nuisance. We trust that on all the lines of this and of all the other companies notices will promptly be displayed, giving the terms of the ordinance and the legal penalty for its violation.

Nor should the action of the companies stop there. The violation of an ordinance of the Health Board is a misdemeanor. A person guilty of such violation cannot be arrested by a private citizen, but can be proceeded against on complaint. It would be well if the railway companies should direct their servants, conductors or guards, as the case may be, to ask the name and address of each person violating the ordinance and also the names and addresses of two or three witnesses, in order that complaint may be made and prosecution be secured. If this simple precaution were taken, after the full notice with the penalty named had been posted, it would not be a month before the offense would become as rare as breaking the windows of the cars. The number of persons now offending willfully is not large; the offenders are for the most part either ignorant or careless; a few cases of prosecution would put an end to the practice.

Meanwhile we publish in another column a few of the many letters received by Mr. HARDON, who caused the arrest of an offender a few days since. The case is being prosecuted by the Health Board, and will come up in the Court of Special Sessions next Monday.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Several of our correspondents express doubts as to the utility of following our advice to make immediate, direct, and explicit complaint to the manager of any theatre where they have been treated with discourtesy by the ticket seller, and they support their doubts by detailing particular instances in which letters to managers have either gone unanswered or have only elicited replies that were in effect refusals to take any action on the grievances presented. This would be good evidence that we were wrong were it not for the fact that in each of the particular cases described the grievance seems to have been against some deliberately adopted policy of the theatre rather than against the manners of the man hired to carry that policy out; in other words, the manager was criticised, and not the ticket seller. It is in no sense the fault of the latter, for instance, if tickets are sold to more people than the theatre can provide with places from which the stage can be seen, nor is he to blame if he sends the tickets for all the best seats in the house to outside agencies and refuses to sell them to would-be purchasers at the box office—and at box-office prices. In matters of this sort the ticket seller merely carries out the manager's orders, and it is not at all remarkable that he is neither censured nor discharged for doing so. But no manager wants, and it is not possible that many will endure if they know of it, any insolent or impertinent treatment of the public by box-office employés. If there are any such managers, the theatregoer has the easiest of ways to bring them to their senses, yes, and to their knees. It is only necessary to refrain from patronizing those theatres and to announce in unmistakable terms the intention of spending no more money in them until the possibility of further insult is permanently removed. This remedy would be not less effectual for managerial sins than for those of the underlings, and the theatregoer can apply it without subjecting himself to any serious loss, or even to any appreciable inconvenience. And, by the way, are the sellers of theatre tickets any more unmannerly, as a class, than the receiving and paying tellers of banks, particularly of savings banks?

—Searching as they are in all directions for light on England's failure to keep the lead in the industrial procession, the London papers are making every now and then discoveries that are not less surprising to outsiders than painful to themselves. One of the most curious of these revelations is that of a London Mail investigator, who started out to ascertain why almost all the typewriters on sale in the English markets are of foreign make—of American make, to be explicit. The explanation he secured was that the British workman simply could not construct a good typewriter. A man familiar with the business is quoted as saying that some years ago an American firm making one of the standard machines endeavored to introduce the typewriter industry into England. Premises were opened at Coventry, and thousands of pounds were spent in endeavoring to produce a satisfactory machine, but in spite of the fact that the best American tools and materials were used it was found, after several years' work, that it was impossible to produce a good machine. In addition to being unsatisfactory, the machines that were made cost 20 per cent. more than those from America, even after paying freight and charges. It is also said that the late Col. NORTH spent much time and money in trying to get the public to take an interest in an English machine; but it is only recently that the machine has "caught on." Col. NORTH had great difficulty in training his mechanics, as only the best-skilled men, such as were used to clockmaking or had been apprenticed to scientific instrument makers, could be employed. This attempt to put the blame for Great Britain's industrial misfortunes on her workmen is just a bit suspicious. English artisans are regarded as competent enough when they secure employment in American shops and fall into American ways of using heads as well as hands in the performance of their duties. The British manufacturer is fond of telling his men that he pays them to work, not to think, and too careful in seeing that they do not get any recompense for the second form of activity. Thinking results in progress, and progress involves expensive changes. In this, probably, and not in the natural incompetence of the British workman lies the explanation of the American typewriter in English markets.

—A bill recently introduced in the Assembly prohibits gas companies in this city, under a penalty of $200, from making the deposition of a sum of money the only condition on which they will supply gas to a customer not already on their books. Judging merely from a brief statement of this bill's character and object, it is one thoroughly deserving enactment into law. This insistence upon advance deposits by the gas companies is a commercial anomaly without justification or excuse. Whenever there has been any real competition between different companies; that is, whenever the companies did not have the power to withhold from the would-be consumer what is practically one of the necessities of urban life, the system has been practically abandoned, only to be revived again at the end of each recurring "war." The pretense that the deposit is security for the meter is an absurd one; the real object is to secure advance payment for the gas used, and so to avoid to a considerable extent the possibility of making any bad debts. Incidentally, the companies get the use of an amount of money in the aggregate of no small size, and though they do pay interest when the deposit is called for, as a matter of fact, but little such interest has to be paid, because many of the deposits are forgotten, and the consumer who lives for many years in the same house does not, as a rule, think in all that time about either the deposit or the product. The gas companies, by treating, whenever they can, all their customers as persons who would dodge their debts if they could, simply ascribe to the general public the standard of morals which is, by common agreement, illustrated by the average gas bill. These bills being, as they are, remotely, if at all, related to actual amounts of gas consumed, it is no wonder that the companies will not, if they can help it, allow themselves to fall into the position occupied by the vendors of other merchandise. They see the vital necessity of making themselves preferred creditors, knowing well that the man who has already paid will not put up anything like so good a fight against extortion, or even against robbery, as he would if the payment were still to be made.

—People with a tendency toward skepticism are likely to search for a relation between these new condemnations of Sing Sing Prison as a place as unhealthful as it is unpleasant and the eager desire of the town's unconfined residents to rid themselves of their most famous institution. The suspicion is probably unjust, for the information in regard to the sanitary condition of the prison comes from a source that guarantees its accuracy, and it is of a nature at once so serious and so credible that it would receive attention whether the Sing Singers exploited it or not. The news that the old buildings are nests of infection, and that imprisonment in them is little less than a sentence of death by typhoid or consumption, gives the people living in their neighborhood an argument better than any they have used in the past, and possibly they will attain their desire at last, since it will probably be cheaper and easier to build a new prison somewhere else than it would be to put the old one in a fit state for habitation by human beings, even criminals.

THE TARIFF AND GERMANY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What a remarkable article that was in yesterday's TIMES—"German Protection against America!" You do not seem to know, or you do not want to admit, that Germany has no protection against America in any way comparable to the protection America has against Germany.

The German duty is about 17 per cent. on an average, while the American is 55 per cent.! American imports into Germany become from year to year larger, while German imports into America become from year to year proportionately smaller on account of our enormous, well-nigh prohibitive and altogether unjust import duty. The exports of America to Germany in 1899 amounted to 907,000,000 marks in value, while the German exports to America were only 377,000,000 marks in value.

And, yet you say: "There is a possibility that the United States will endeavor to emphasize the economic lesson to be thus learned by discriminating duties against German manufacturers." What, in the name of justice, do you want? Is it not enough that our brutal tariff law has closed our markets to a large lot of excellent foreign goods, and is compelling our people to pay excessive, discriminating prices for American goods which are sold in foreign markets, thanks to our unjust tariff, at much lower figure than at home? Why not prohibit importation entirely and be done with it? This would, at least, in a very short time, also stop exportation and make our deluded people understand how they are deceived and robbed by a masquerading lot of manufacturers and monopolists, who quickly absorb the wealth of the country under a tariff that only benefits them at the expense of the hard-working people.

A friend of mine in Germany wrote to me a short time ago to buy for him here a certain typewriting machine if I could buy it here at $60. I went to the office of the manufacturers and was informed that the machine cost $100 net. An exporter, whom I interviewed in the matter, told me that he could buy the machine in question at a discount of 25 per cent. for export to South America, but that he was not permitted to buy it to export it to Germany, as the manufacturers had a contract for that country, selling the machine there probably even at a lower figure than for South America, but certainly not higher than $75 against the $100 which Americans have to pay for it here.

And thus it is with hundreds of other articles that are protected by our monstrous tariff, which enables the manufacturers to undersell the comparatively unprotected German and the non-protected English manufacturers at the cost of the American consumer, who is quite defenseless against the ever-increasing greed of our pampered "baby industries" which have been overdoing this "baby act" to the infinite disgust of every impartial and just observer.

You say: "Germany is naturally a poor country. Much of her soil is sterile. * * * Her material resources are strictly limited." And yet you have not a word to say against the absurdity, yes, brutality, of a protective tariff against such a country by the United States, with its enormous, unlimited resources, with its unsurpassed natural wealth, and with the all-conquering ingenuity and industrial ability of its citizens. Truly, this is remarkable! And when you say: "The German people are our good friends, after all," you will permit me to say that this sounds strange to me, a close reader of THE TIMES for some fifteen years, and rather sophisticated. At least, I have been unable in the last two or three years to find in the editorial columns anything that I could construe to be friendly toward Germany.

TWO RELIGIONS COMPARED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Rev. Dr. MacArthur raises the issue of the superiority of Christianity over Confucianism. He cites the superiority of the treatment of women. Does the reverend gentleman refer to the theory or to the practice of Christianity? If the former, he is perfectly correct; if the latter, he errs to an unpardonable extent.

Wu Ting-fang takes the ground that Confucianism is more practiced in China than Christianity is in the West. Herein he is perfectly correct, for although Christianity demands a much higher standard of morals than Confucianism, the most simple child can point out that the Christianity of the lowly Jesus is a perfectly dead letter today.

In its place we have a reaching out for temporalities by a very large portion of the Christian church, accompanied by an autocratic domination by the clergy as far removed from what was taught by Christ as the East is from the West. Let any one etudy the Testament and then visit the churches and see how much of the true spirit of Jesus is taught.

Let him go into the world and try and practice it in a moderate degree, and it will not be long before he is put down as one of unsound mind. The church litany is a travesty upon Jesus' condemnation of long prayers and being religious overmuch. The accumulation of riches, so bitterly condemned by Him, is the one absorbing thought of Christendom to-day.

The full and just and heaping up measure advocated by Him is conspicuous by its absence. The doing unto others as you would be done by is literally changed to Do others or they will do you.

There is not a precept laid down by this greatest of moral teachers that is not more respected in the breach than in the observance. His command that every one shall work out his own salvation with fear and trembling is entirely set aside by the clergy, who tell you you can do nothing, as Jesus has done everything for you.

Consequently people gladly accept such manifest absurdity just because their daily life is such that morality is at a discount and second conditions force them into a wrong attitude whether they will it or not. The grave responsibility of the whole Christian clergy is immeasurable. They uphold a social system that engenders everything that is bad, condemning the criminal poor and passing by the criminal rich, in whom they stand in mortal fear. They substitute immeasurable prayers and hymns for the teachings of justice and righteousness. They deal in generalities and platitudes, and repudiate any responsibility for the building up of the rotten social system, ungodly from top to bottom, under which we are living, and of all men are the fiercest rejectors of economic truths, the knowledge of which to their millions of hearers would open their minds to a better order of things whereby it would be possible to try and be a Christian.

I think nothing in China will be found as bad as the vile sweaters' dens, that drive thousands of women and girls to destruction. Has China anything to equal the east side bakeries or the slave pens of North Caroiina, where children of tender years work the live long night through for ten cents? What have the clergy done to stand between the poor and their oppressors?

Yet He whom they are pleased to call the Master, single handed drove the gamblers and usurers out of the temple. We shall get Christianity some day, but not through its present representatives. In the mean time if we had some of the Confucian morality to go on with, it would not be at all amiss.

Emotionalism is not religion; praying and hymn singing are not religion; forms and ceremonies are not religion. The Scripture has defined it again and again.

This one little passage covers the whole ground: What doth the Lord require of thee? To do justice, to love mercy, and to walk humbly before thy God.

JUSTICE FOR THE CRIMINAL'S FAMILY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The verdict of murder in the second degree for the Paterson men who "done to death" Jennie Bosschieter is certainly good Jersey justice, and will afford general satisfaction. Society is obliged to protect itself, and it is the instrument of God to punish offenders and protect the innocent; but if, in so doing, it also injures the wife and children of the criminal, is it not bound in equity to see that innocent sufferers are compensated for the loss incurred while it is punishing the enemy? It is true that the Nation, or community, should punish the guilty. Should it not also, in equity, recognize the loss or misery of those who have been deprived of the support on which they depended for a living?

A railroad company pays a man as damages $5,000 for the loss of a limb, or the wife of one killed the same amount, because she is bereft of her means of support in that husband's death. Where, then, is the equity for the wife and children who are deprived of a husband's support when he is sent to prison for twenty years at "hard labor"? Who gets the benefit of this "hard labor"? Is it the State? There is always complaint against "convict labor," but would there be ground for complaint if one-half the result of such labor went to the support of the criminal's wife and family? And would not the criminal work harder and behave better if he knew he was still able to assist the loved ones in the home he had dishonored but had not forgotten for an hour since his incarceration? Of course this only applies to married men. When a man steals, it may be not that he is greedy of gain or too lazy to work, but that he may provide a loaf for his hungry family. The law cannot take into consideration motives and morals, although it sometimes does in petty offenses, which are left entirely in the hands of the Justice; but when a man, to put it straight, is at hard labor for years in a State penitentiary, is it right, or just, or wise to deprive his family of any share in that man's earnings?

It may be said that a man loses all his rights when he becomes a criminal. Well, if he does, he also gains some rights. The State contracts to feed and lodge him for ten or twenty years, and if he proves a good criminal he can shorten his sentence. The State has him in safe keeping, and he is assured of food, drink, and shelter. This is what the State does for the criminal. It arranges that he may have suitable labor for his exercise and diversion, and then complacently pockets the results of his hard labor to pay for his keep. But does this end the story? Is there no other factor in the equation? The State does not recognize any. Public opinion passes incongruity or wrong in the matter as it stands. And yet there is the lone, dishonored wife, the crying, shame-faced, hungry children. This is the other side of the equation. These have lost their head and their support, and there is no man to pity them or to have compassion on the worse than fatherless children.

The criminal is cared for, sheltered, and fed, but the wife is forgotten in her degradation and poverty. Can any one find justice in her being deprived of half of her husband's earnings by his "hard labor"? I may be in the wrong, but is there not a shade of injustice in things as they are? And if a shade or tinge dim the whiteness of the ermine, ought it not to be removed?

The State sets out to avenge its broken laws, and succeeds in running the criminal down and caging him for twenty years; but in doing this it deprives a family of its support. It allows the criminal to work and earn money to pay his own way, but has no thought for the sufferings of the innocent. It really punishes the innocent party more than the criminal. If wrong in my conclusion, will THE NEW YORK TIMES give me light? EQUITY.

THE SUPPORT FOR THE FRYE BILL

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As an earnest and able free trade newspaper, THE NEW YORK TIMES is naturally opposed to the Administration bill for the protection of American shipping, even though the American subsidy is in part offset for foreign subsidy. But is it fair to assert, as you do editorially, that there is "no real popular demand" for this measure—that the shippers of the United States "do not support" it?

Since the Frye bill was introduced two years ago it has been formally indorsed not once but again by mercantile associations whose influence THE NEW YORK TIMES has not been in the habit of flouting. The United States Export Association, made up of merchants in the foreign trade, has approved it. So has the National Association of Manufacturers, both at its annual meeting of 1899 in Cincinnati and its annual meeting of 1900 in Boston, its action in the latter case, at least, having been unanimous. The Frye bill has also been indorsed in formal resolution by the National Board of Trade, in session in Washington.

Nor need THE TIMES assume that this was a mere perfunctory procedure, which means nothing because the Board of Trade heard only one side. It heard both sides at that January meeting last year. Mr. Peabody and other gentlemen who are charterers of foreign ships, or interested in European shipping that will not be benefited by this bill, very bitterly opposed it. They set forth the same arguments which THE TIMES presents so lucidly against the protection of the American marine. They were listened to patiently, but they were voted down, and the resolution in behalf of the American ship was adopted.

On Feb. 1, 1900, the New York Chamber of Commerce, after a debate in which both sides were ably represented, passed a resolution indorsing the principle of the Subsidy bill. On Feb. 14 the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, also after debate, approved its general provisions. On Jan. 8 the bill had been formally indorsed at the one hundred and thirtieth annual meeting of the Marine Society of the City of New York.

Are not these New York merchants and shipmasters qualified to speak on the Shipping bill? And is not their testimony worthy of recognition by a New York newspaper?

Nor are New York shippers the only business men who have declared themselves. This proposed legislation has been approved by the Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, and Maritime Exchanges of nearly every important American port between Bath, Me., and San Francisco. On May 11, 1900, the Southern Cotton Spinners' Association, in session at Charlotte, indorsed the Subsidy bill; on Dec. 6, the Southern Industrial Convention at New Orleans did the same thing. On Nov. 24, the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore moved to take advantage of this bill. On Dec. 11 the Fall River Board of Trade approved it. On Dec. 17 the Executive Council of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade recorded its second indorsement. On Jan. 17 the bill was approved by resolution by the Trustees of the Boston Marine Society, and on the same day by the New England Shipowners' Association.

This list is very incomplete, but THE TIMES will discern in most of these associations an echo of those men forces that worked hard in 1896-1900 for the success of gold standard legislation. They are working for the ship now, as they worked for gold then, not for mere selfish advantage, but for what they believe to be the welfare of the whole Nation. It was Mr. Bryan's sneer last year that the men of business, the bankers, the capitalists, the manufacturers, the traders, were merely seeking class legislation for their own enrichment. Will THE TIMES take Mr. Bryan's sneer and apply it to American merchants and shipowners? NEW ENGLANDER.

PROBLEM OF EQUAL TAXATION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It seems to me that the many letters you print from people who object to the taxing of savings banks do not show the proper spirit that should animate a citizen of so great a State as New York. Many depositors in the savings banks escape taxation entirely, and as most of said banks accumulate surplus constantly which is never distributed and also retain large sums which are never demanded, it would seem eminently wise and proper that there should accrue to the State some little portion of such apparently needless accumulations that there is no use for. There are some institutions in this country where funds are on deposit and allowed to accumulate beyond all possibility of use and whose depositors cannot touch them, neither can any disposition be made of them to benefit either individuals or the public. Let these immense accumulations bear this tax, and not charge it upon the depositor, and no one will have cause to complain.

This is within the province of bank officials surely, as is the power to contribute from the funds of the depositors for any charitable or social purpose. Therefore a small assessment upon such large accumulations would appear to be amply justified, especially when one considers what a small portion of all taxation falls upon "vested interests." If a graded system of general taxation could be devised, so that the burden would fall but lightly upon the shoulders of the poor and frugal wage earner, increasing as means to pay became larger, and the use of conveniences for which the public are taxed is availed of to a greater extent, there would be far less complaint.

When the owner of a small dwelling on a poor street is compelled to pay a tax upon a valuation representing more than its actual market value, in meeting which the closest economy is forced upon him, taxpaying is a hardship. But in the case of an extensive real estate owner, whose income is such that the payment of a tax bill requires no more effort than to draw a check upon an overgrown balance of surplus cash, there is no such hardship presented.

Let each individual owner of a dwelling of moderate cost in which he resides be taxed on a valuation of not more than half its real selling value. Then tax the speculative operator and wealthy landowner up to the full earning value of his property, capitalized at ruling rates of interest. Let mortgages held by individuals, estates, religious corporations, and financial institutions, and all other personal property stand on the same general basis, and the problem of equal taxation is solved.

THE ANGLO-SAXON.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

After its editorials, the most interesting feature of THE TIMES is its correspondence. The letters that appear in its columns from day to day are fair specimens of a very intelligent public opinion. Of course, these letters do not cover every region of thought or every field of endeavor. There is time enough for all this, however. I wish some one, for instance, would tell us something about ethnology. Hardly a day passes that this fascinating branch of science is not touched upon in one way or the other, but that is all. No one tells us to which branch of the Caucasian race we belong, but almost every one who is obliged to refer to militant Americanism informs us, incidentally, that we are Anglo-Saxons. Now, are we? And what on earth did this great and fearfully constructed race have to do with Richard A. Zerega's defense of ex-President Cleveland? Why did he lug it in? If you will pardon the rude expression.

Is it that Mr. or Señor or Signor Zerega is an Anglo-Saxon himself and would therefore imply that he is a superior being? And if he is a superior being, what then are we poor Celts and Hebrews and Scandanavians and Latins and Teutons, and where on earth do we stand? And our nine million or so of our colored brethren who speak English with such a soft, musical accent—should there be any room for them in this country? One paper said yesterday that the expected "tragedy" (meaning Queen Victoria's death) would plunge the two great Anglo-Saxon peoples into profound grief. Shall the Highlanders then—Victoria's favorites—remain unmoved because they are Celts?

While in England not many years ago, I was struck with the difference in face and complexion and general appearance between the English and the Americans. The Englishman is fairer as a rule, and smaller, and the nose of the average Englishman was no beautiful. The average American has rather a well-carved nose, and he is aggressive and alert of countenance. The average American is, in fact, is a composite man and the European is his ancestor.

Why, then, agitate the air with this Anglo-Saxon humbug? Why not give us a rest, or at all events why does not Herr or Mynheer Zerega explain to us why and how we came to be Anglo-Saxons?

AN IRISHMAN TO HIS HONOR THE MAYOR.

Mr. Mayor Van Wick,
It is you makes me sick!
No risplct for a Queen,
Just the best iver seen,
I see cher there now
With a Crown on her brow—
The grandest e'er seen
On the head of a Queen.

Add ye'd not lower the flag,
Though there's never a rag
Of bunting mast-high
But this flag that ye fly;
And if ye asked "Why?",
"Don't you know," they'd all said,
"That the good Queen is dead?"

It's not she was Queen,
For a many we've seen,
But as wife and as mother
We'll look long and have bother
To show ma such another.

Home rule's not a question
Just now for digestion,
But it's well understood
That her home life was good;
And though Irish, ye wot,
From my head to my foot,
Though all tyrants I'd kill,
And I'd Parliment split
And the Lords I'd all strew
From Westminster to Kew,
And think it no sin—
Where I'd end, you'd begin:
For, though Fenian through,
I'll tell ye as true,
I've still the good sinse,
And the right riverince
No half-mast me head
For the Woman that's dead,
And to pray the saints rest her—
For the good God has blest her;
And her troubles are through—
Which I'll not say for you;
But only, Van Wick,
It is you makes me sick!

SITE FOR WOMAN'S HOTEL

Structure to be Erected on House of Industry Property.

Agreed Price Reported to be $200,000—The Twelve-Story Building Will House 500.

A site has been selected for the Woman's Hotel, and work on that structure will, it is believed, be carried forward at an early date. The property decided upon is that now occupied by the House of Industry, conducted by the American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless, a plot running through from Twenty-ninth to Thirtieth Street, just east of Madison Avenue, and having a frontage of 75 feet on either street. The purchase price agreed upon is said to be about $200,000.

The sale of a property of this character by a charitable institution must receive confirmation by the court, and this fact, together with arrangement of minor details, doubtless accounts for the unwillingness of interested parties to discuss the deal. That the site will be purchased, however, was learned yesterday from reliable authority.

The hotel itself, according to plans already announced, will be twelve stories in height. Designed especially with a view to affording accommodations for self-supporting women in artistic, literary, educational, and kindred pursuits, special features in the shape of studios, music rooms, sewing rooms, and tea rooms will be provided. The general equipment of the hotel will be the most modern in every particular, including a roof garden, sun parlors, and Turkish and Russian baths. The building has been planned to accommodate 500 persons.

The Woman's Hotel Company was incorporated on March 10, 1900, with a capital stock of $100,000. The building operation, including the cost of the ground, building, and furnishings, will involve about $800,000, of which amount one-half will be borrowed on bond and mortgage. In a prospectus issued soon after the incorporation of the company the yearly profit of the enterprise was estimated at $86,114. Out of this $16,000 would be paid as interest on the $400,000 mortgage and $20,000 as a 5 per cent. dividend on the $400,000 capital stock. After charging off $15,000 for the depreciation of the property, there would remain, according to this estimate, a surplus of $35,114.

The officers of the company are: President—Lucien C. Warner, M. D.; Vice President—Charles E. Cox; Treasurer—Charles S. Fairchild; Secretary—Charles D. Kellogg. Besides these, the Board of Directors includes W. Lanman Bull, I. D. Crawford, and Herbert B. Turner.

The American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless, by which the hotel site will be sold, is one of the city's oldest charitable institutions, having been organized in 1834. The property on Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth Streets is known as the Home School, but there are also maintained throughout the city twelve other branch schools. The property has been in the market for some time, those at the head of the organization realizing that with the proceeds of the sale a modern building can be erected on less valuable ground further up town. So far as can be learned, the society has not yet determined upon its new site.

KAISER'S LAND HOLDINGS.

Emperor Owns Eighty-three Estates in Prussia Yielding 651,631 Marks.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—From the Prussian Diet budget it appears that Emperor William now owns eighty-three estates in Prussia, aggregating 98,740 hectares and yielding 651,631 marks net.

Next in order in Prussia is the Prince of Pless, with 51,112 hectares. The King of Saxony has 31,000 hectares, the Duke of Ratibor 28,056 hectares, and the Duke of Ujest 39,742 hectares.

DISCOVERY OF ANTIQUITIES.

German Babylon Expedition Makes Important Finds.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—The German Babylon expedition under Prof. Kaldewey, the noted Assyriologist, reports two important discoveries.

It has unearthed a street procession of Bel Merodach, the tutelary divinity of Babylon, and the great Merodach Temple of Esagila, containing a large number of very interesting antiquities.

ROYAL BETROTHAL ANNOUNCED.

Hague Town Officials Notified of Queen Wilhelmina's Coming Marriage.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 25.—An official of the Ministry of Justice at 11 o'clock this morning delivered at the Town Hall a formal deed, signed by Queen Wilhelmina and Duke Henry of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, declaring their desire to be united in matrimony.

Flags were immediately hoisted on the Town Hall, churches, and other buildings. The royal banns will be read for the first time Sunday, Jan. 27.

MISS DAY TO BE MARRIED.

Resigns as Agent of the New Jersey Board of Children's Guardians.

Miss Frances Day, agent of the New Jersey State Board of Children's Guardians, who is also one of the officials of the Whittier House, where she makes her home, has sent her resignation to the board. It is to take effect May 15. Miss Day gave as a reason that she is to be married on June 5 to Albert E. Tuck, also of Jersey City.

The wedding will take place at the home of Mrs. Emily E. Wilkinson, Secretary of the board, at Elizabeth. The bride will be given away by Mrs. Harriet McFadden, Miss Day's foster-mother, who resides at Providence, R. I.

WILL GIVE COLLEGE $200,000.

John D. Rockefeller Offers to Contribute to Oberlin's Endowment Fund.

OBERLIN, Ohio, Jan. 25.—It was announced in chapel this afternoon that John D. Rockefeller had signified, through J. W. Cowles of Cleveland, a Trustee of Oberlin College, his willingness to give $200,000 toward an endowment fund of $500,000 now being raised for the college, provided the entire amount shall be raised by the first of next year.

Mrs. Platt Is Much Better.

There was a marked improvement yesterday in the condition of Mrs. Thomas C. Platt, wife of the United States Senator, and members of the family expressed the hope that she will be about again in a few days. The Senator and his sons Edward and Frank joined in the statement that Mrs. Platt is not so ill as she was at Washington a year ago. Hundreds called at the hotel yesterday to inquire about her. One of her callers was Bishop Worthington of Nebraska.

Reception of the Knights Templar.

The reception and ball of the Palestine Commandery, Knights Templar, at the Waldorf-Astoria on Wednesday next, promises to be an unusually large affair. Among the guests will be Gov. Odell, who will attend on invitation of Lieut. Gov. Woodruff, who is a member of the commandery; A. Colo Veloni, who was the first Commandor of the commandery some fifty years ago will also be present. There will be an exhibition by the drill corps and a reception of the officers.

Big Euchre Party for a Hospital.

Arrangements have been completed by the Women's Auxiliary of the Homeopathic Hospital of Harlem for the series of progressive euchre which they have given annually for the last five years. The first of the series will take place at the Ellersile, 82 and 84 West One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street, Monday, Feb. 4, at 2:30 P. M. It is expected that at least 300 women will participate.

Homes for Foundlings Wanted.

Superintendent Blair of the Outdoor Poor Department says there are 200 foundling children in the Blackwell's Island Home for whom he wishes private homes. All are under two years of age and are in very good health. The Foundling Asylum is so crowded that it has been more difficult than usual to get places for the children.

BRITISH MAY NEED GERMAN AID.

London Paper Hopes Emperor William Will Be Made a British Field Marshal.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The Daily Chronicle, in the course of an editorial on the "Threatening Aspect of Russian Policy in China," refers to the report that Emperor William will be appointed a Field Marshal of the British Army, and says:

"We hope the report is correct. A German alliance is one we cannot afford to throw away. Who can tell how soon we may need its prestige, if not its active cooperation?"

NO OBJECTION TO MISSIONS.

Prince Ching Says There Is No Desire to Restrict Them.

PEKING, Jan. 24.—The foreign Ministers have sent a note to the Chinese plenipotentiaries on the lines previously stated.

Prince Ching yesterday assured a committee of missionaries that there was no intention or desire on the part of the Chinese Government to place restrictions upon the missions, and that the Government itself never had had in the past any objections to the missionaries or to their methods. The missionaries are greatly pleased with Prince Ching's frankly expressed assurance.

The Rev. Dr. Arthur J. Brown of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions yesterday received a cablegram from the Rev. W. O. Elterich, Secretary of the East Shan-Tung Mission. The message, which was from Che-Foo, was as follows:

Governor suggests missionaries return to stations. Promises full protection. Re-establishes legal status of native Christians.

Dr. Brown said that this is altogether the most cheering news that has come from China in a long time. It was in the great Province of Shan-Tung that the Boxers' movement originated. It has a population of 35,000,000, and there have been many extensive missionary interests in the province. A large number of missionaries who have been in this country on furlough will return to Shantung Province at once.

POWERS DEMAND DEATH PENALTY

PARIS, Jan. 25.—A Havas agency dispatch from Shanghai says the diplomats have decided unanimously to notify the Chinese plenipotentiaries that the military arrangements of the powers depend on the promptitude with which China executes her engagements.

They will also demand that the death penalty be imposed on four Chinese functionaries, including Chouang Ying Nien (?) A posthumous death penalty will also be demanded for Prince Kang Yi, Assistant Grand Secretary and President of the Civil Board, who committed suicide.) Finally, they will ask that the death penalty be decreed in the case of Gen. Tung Fuh Siang, and that it be carried out when he is captured.

COST OF GERMAN EXPEDITION.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—It is semi-officially announced that 197,000,000 marks is the estimated amount required for the China expedition during the financial year of 1901.

The amount of the imperial loan and the date of issue are uncertain, but there is no question of negotiating it in the United States or Great Britain.

BOERS ATTACK KITCHENER.

PRETORIA, Jan. 24.—Yesterday a train, with Lord Kitchener and a body of troops, proceeded toward Middelburg, an armored pilot engine preceding. It was derailed by dynamite near Balmoral.

The Boers, who were in force, opened fire, and the British replied heavily.

Ultimately the Boers were driven off. The British sustained no casualties.

Boers Unpopular in Cape Colony.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—A dispatch received at the War Office from Gen. Kitchener, dated Pretoria, Jan. 24, mentions unimportant contacts with Delarey's and Haasbroek's commands. A score of Boers have been captured. Gen. Methuen has cleared Griqualand and Kuruman. The invaders have done little harm in Cape Colony. They have not been joined by the inhabitants, with whom they are daily becoming more unpopular.

American Claims in South Africa.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Acting upon instructions from Washington, Ambassador Choate has presented to the British Government the claims of several American citizens for reimbursement on account of damages sustained through the war operations in South Africa, including cases of loss of property, arbitrary detention, and expulsion. The cases are now under investigation.

German Guns Arrive at Queenstown.

QUEENSTOWN, Ireland, Jan. 25.—Eighteen of the most modern field guns of German manufacture, with their carriages, ammunition wagons, and equipment, have arrived here from Germany for service with the British Army in South Africa.

Arrested for Aiding the Boers.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 25.—Assemblyman Lotter and his son have been arrested and jailed at Ultenhage, charged with aiding the Boers. It is alleged that dynamite was found in Mr. Lotter's house.

JULIAN ARNOLD SENTENCED.

Son of the Editor Gets Ten Years' Penal Servitude.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—At the Old Bailey today Julian Arnold (son of Sir Edwin Arnold,) who was extradited from the United States in October last charged with misappropriating trust funds, was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude.

FAMINE AGAIN MENACES INDIA.

Viceroy Reports Grave Conditions Owing to the Absence of Rain.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The Secretary of State for India has received the following dispatch from the Viceroy, Lord Curzon:

"A grave condition of affairs exists in Guzerat, the Deccan, and the Garnatic Districts of Bombay, owing to the early cessation of the monsoon in September, and the absence of rain. Heavy relief expenditure is entailed for the coming financial year. The affected area also includes Baroda and a part of Hyderabad."

GERMANY'S FOREIGN TRADE.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—Official returns of the German foreign trade for 1900 show the imports to be 5,833,312,000 marks, an increase over 1899 of 50,084,000 marks, and the exports, 4,555,291,000 marks, an increase of 186,382,000 marks over the previous year, largely agricultural products.

Germany's pig-iron output for 1900 was 8,422,342 tons, an increase of 393,537 tons for the preceding year. The December output was 720,700 tons.

LORD ROSSLYN WANTS DIVORCE.

Actor Earl Begins a Suit Against His Wife.

EDINBURGH, Jan. 25.—The Earl of Rosslyn to-day began a suit for divorce against his wife.

Lord Rossiyn has been an actor, his stage name being James Erskine. His full name is James Francis Harry St. Clair-Erskine. He has also served in South Africa with Thornycroft's Horse, and was a war correspondent for The London Daily Mail. Lately he has been editor of Scottish Life. The Earl of Rossiyn was born in 1869, and in 1890 married Violet, daughter of Robert Charles de Grey Vyner of Gautby Hall, Lincolnshire. They have two children, a son and a daughter. The son's title is Lord Loughborough. He was born in 1892.

Turkish Grand Vizier Very Ill.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 25.—The Grand Vizier, Halil Rifat Pasha, is ill with pneumonia, and it is expected that the disease will terminate fatally.

Ex-Mayor Zelle of Berlin Dead.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—Herr Zelle, ex-Mayor of Berlin, is dead.

Archbishop of Ravenna Dead.

ROME, Jan. 26.—Cardinal Sebastiano Galeati, Archbishop of Ravenna, is dead. He was born in 1822 and was raised to the Cardinalate in 1890.

LOAN COLLECTION AT THE LOTOS.

Specimens of Color. Masters from the Gallery of the Late I. T. Williams.

Mr. I. T. Williams was a collector of paintings without regard to the nationality of their authors. He was a friend of the late Daniel Cottier, who introduced to New York a great many modern painters, especially Dutch and French painters, so that his taste in the fine arts was naturally to a large extent influenced in their direction. It is only to be expected, therefore, that his gallery should contain specimens of Michel and Monticelli, Rousseau and Corot, Marilhat, Couture, and Roybet, Millet and Bonvin, as well as works by Mauve and the brothers Maris. Now and then he bought an old master. But he also saw merit in American painters, especially in those who are colorists. He was an admirer of the late George Fuller, and was among the earliest patrons of Albert Ryder.

The paintings from Mr. I. T. Williams's gallery which Mr. Evans has brought together in the dining room of the Lotos Club are only part of the treasures that used to be visible to Mr. Williams's friends. He shows the "Gipsy Girl," by George Fuller, a maiden who gazes with dusky eyes from an evening landscape, and "Led Through the Meadow," by the same painter, a half-grown girl with bare arms and neck who passes through a desolate landscape with a stray calf by her side. These figures tell no certain story, but attract by their suggestiveness and the fine color scheme. The gypsy by Roybet differs not a little from her, according to Fuller. The former is the gypsy of the opera with tambourine, rich complexion, and furtive air, while behind her a man in a cloak and soft felt hat suggests Spain. There is a dark, cloudy sky. The little picture has the strong impasto we generally find in Roybet.

Somewhat similar is the handling by Bonvin of the old woman in mob cap with dark red ribbon and ivory-white shawl and apron, who sits by a table with her knitting on her lap and regales herself with a pinch of snuff. Rarely do we see over here a good specimen of Marilhat, but there is one in the Williams collection—a ruinous castle of Syria with camel and seated Turks, over which is a finely graded sky, white to blue. The specimen of Michel is a particularly fine one that frequenters of loan exhibitions will be apt to recall, a grand sweeping view from Montmartre as it was a century ago, with some figures in the foreground and the distant plain darkened in places by clouds. The latter accompany, without exactly agreeing with, the line of the hills on the right of the scene. The Corot is a very small wooded region with a small house directly in the middle distance and gatherers of fagots nearer the eye. Rousseau is represented by a very dark sketch in oils and Diaz by "The Sun Worshippers," a small canvas with many figures, more interesting for its subject than its workmanship, and by a small "Lovers and Dog," in which just the reverse is the case, for the relation of the man and woman to each other is unimportant, notwithstanding the dictum that all the world loves a lover, while the workmanship, and more especially the color scheme, is fascinating in the extreme.

NOTES ON MATTERS OF THE FINE ARTS.

Sketches by a man who won fame in his day as an illustrator of books, designer of bank notes, and draughtsman for publishers and the press may be seen at Bouton's, in West Twenty-Eighth Street. Here are careful pencil sketches by F. O. C. Darley, made for an edition of Cooper's novels, illustrations from Shakespeare's plays for Darley's "Shakespeare Gallery," scenes from Goethe's "Faust," Indians on horseback, and other crayon and pencil pieces, all wrought in Darley's minute methodical way. Among them is a portrait of a charlatan in the medical profession, who once lived in New York, which mercifully bears no name save "The Quack Doctor." Artists do not need to preserve specimens of this breed nowadays, because the latter publish their own portraits in the newspapers, and thus unconsciously satirize themselves.

The collection of pastels by Everitt Shinn at the galleries of Boussod, Valadon & Co. has been increased by further sketches made in Paris and London during William Shinn's trip abroad last Summer. The ballet girl has in Degas no keener and more interested observer than Mr. Shinn. He manages to draw her with a little more mercy than does Degas, as a fleeting form, which is not angles, splay feet, and stiff petticoats, but suggests the curves of the reasonably youthful human figure. It is in scenes of café and cabaret and other public life, especially at night, that Shinn has caught best the impression Paris leaves on unjaded eyes. His schooling at Philadelphia and as a draughtsman for an architect seems to give him a particularly happy hand at glimpses of streets, at squares, and parks surrounded by buildings. And he understands the necessity of making use of the advantages in the way of color that pastels afford. Some of his "Paris Types" border on caricature, but there is nothing savage in his hasty portrait of that detested being, a concierge. In his "Bal Bullier," however, the bald-headed man and his companions, seated profile in front, while the dancers are seen beyond them, are types of sensualists. Most of these pastels are agitated. The artist has tried to reproduce the movement in great crowds, and has succeeded well. Paris has exercised her fascination on him.

The American Art Association announces the sale of furniture, tapestries, rugs, and draperies belonging to Herts Brothers, Broadway and Twentieth Street. The sale will be held next week at the warerooms of Herts Brothers On Feb. 8 the old Spanish and Italian brocades, embroideries, and laces belonging to Vitali Benguiat of London, who has a shop on East Thirty-fourth Street, will be on view in the galleries of the association, the sales taking place on the afternoons of Feb. 11 to 15.

In commemoration of "Marshall" day, Feb. 4, Klackner is publishing a portrait of Chief Justice Marshall, a profile bust, the size of life, engraved after the crayon taken by Saint-Mémin in 1808, when the famous jurist was fifty-two. Février de Saint-Mémin, a native of Dijon, was a successful portrait maker, who, in advance of the daguerreotype and the photograph, employed mechanical means to obtain exact likenesses, and then finished the outlines with crayon. The portrait in question decided to a great-grandson of the Chief Justice, Mr. Thomas Marshall Smith, of Baltimore.

A Mexican bullfighter named Alarcon, who is performing on the stage in various parts of the United States, is possessed of a peculiar knack at modeling, such as one sometimes finds in those popular artists in Berlin who take your portrait "while you wait." Bulls and elephants modeled by Alarcon by a surprisingly rapid method, but on a miniature scale, are in the current exhibition at the National Arts Club, the January exhibition of Beasts and Birds in Art. At the ivory workshops of Kaldenburg, on Fifth Avenue, this toreador has copies of Frémiet's group, "Spanish Serenader oh Muleback," and original designs of bulls and bullfighters modeled minutely in wax. He colors the wax in the usual way in order to make the little figures more lifelike. As Alarcon has had no education in art, his case seems to be one of a natural gift neglected in youth.

The marine painter F. K. M. Rehn has a score or more canvases at the Clausen Galleries, where they may be seen until Feb. 2. Gloucester, Mass., is one of his favorite spots for shore scenes. Mr. Rehn's "Missing Vessel" is in the Art Museum of Detroit, and his "Close of a Summer's Day," in that of Buffalo.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Friday is always a busy day in society. It is a day chosen by so many hostesses for the "at home," which may be either informal or a very elaborate entertainment. There were so many of these yesterday that Fifth Avenue was crowded all day with handsome equipages, in which were beautifully gowned women, who were on a round of visits. One of the principal affairs of the day was the reception or tea given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. F. Marion Crawford by Mrs. J. West Roosevelt. It has been some years since Mrs. Crawford was in New York. She was a Miss Berdan of Washington. Her cousin, Miss Susie Leigh, who was a great belle, is Mrs. Thomas Wharton, and Mrs. Crawford is also distantly related to the Mortons.

***

This afternoon Mrs. Cadwalader Jones of 21 East Eleventh Street will give a reception for Mrs. F. Marion Crawford. Mrs. David Oliphant Haynes will have a tea at 11 West Ninety-fourth Street for the members of the Cinderella dance, which meets at Dodworth's, and the St. Nicholas Club an evening reception. Besides these entertainments, there will be the reception for Mrs. Millet and Miss Millet, to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Poor of 1 Lexington Avenue, and the dinner for Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Ismay at the residence of Mrs. Ismay's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Schieffelin.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Auguste Vatable are sailing to-day for Italy on the Hohenzollern. Mrs. W. W. Phelps will also go abroad on the same ship. The Prinzessin Victoria, which will make a short trip to the West Indies, has booked Mrs. G. Stuyvesant, Mr. and Mrs. E. Waldo Smith, Mrs. Edwin Parsons, Howard C. Brokaw, and Lambert Suydam.

***

It is reported that James J. Van Alen and the Misses Van Alen will sail for Europe about the same time as Mrs. Astor. They will go direct to London, where they will remain until the Newport season. They will then return to this country.

***

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, who, as announced in this column some weeks ago, is to give a dance on the evening of Feb. 6, also has cards out for a large dinner, to be followed by a novel entertainment, on the evening of Feb. 12. At one time Mrs. Fish meditated changing the dates and having the dance on the 12th, but the cards are now out for both affairs. She was also to have given a large dinner on Jan. 28, but this is off the books. The dance will be for Miss Marian Fish, and will include the débutantes and younger set, while the dinner and entertainment will be for Mrs. Fish's older friends. Harry Lehr will lead the cotillion, probably dancing with Miss Fish.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick J. de Peyster gave a small dinner at their residence last night. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. George H. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Abercrombie, Mr. and Mrs. J. Hooker Hamersley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Stebbins, Mr. and Mrs. B. Aymar Sands, Mrs. George Kingsland, and John E. Parsons.

***

Mrs. Church's dancing class met at Sherry's, as usual, last night. Charles Eustace Kneeland led the cotillion. Mrs. John M. Bowers, Mrs. J. C. Wolfe, Mrs. Edward Curtis, and Mrs. Wolcott Robbins received. Mrs. Church, owing to the death of a relative, was not present. The favors were very pretty, and included fancy baskets, tied with ribbons; picture and photograph frames in leather and gilt, tape measures, paper knives, watch stands, and ash trays. There was a large attendance and a jolly time generally.

***

Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs gave a large dinner last night, which was followed by a vaudeville entertainment. Covers were laid for thirty-six guests. Mrs. Charles M. Lea and Miss Marjorie Lea of 18 West Tenth Street gave the second of two receptions yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Winston and Miss Angelica Schuyler Church assisted in receiving and pouring tea.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Olyphant of 3 East Sixty-ninth Street, who had cards out for a theatre party, to be followed by a supper and dance at the Metropolitan Club Annex, for their daughter, Miss Amy Gordon Olyphant, and which was scheduled for last night, were obliged to recall the invitations, owing to Miss Olyphant's serious attack of grip.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Heber R. Bishop (Mary Cunningham) gave a dance last night at their Fifth Avenue residence which was a large and handsomely appointed affair. Mrs. Bishop and Miss Bishop received the guests, who began to arrive about 11 o'clock, in the drawing room. Orchestras played in the hall and ballroom, and there was general dancing until after supper, which was served at about forty small tables scattered through the hall and in the dining room. These tables were most of them decorated with centrepieces of bridesmaid roses and asparagus ferns, but a few had begonias instead, the color scheme of the decorations throughout being pink and green. It was nearly 2 o'clock before the cotillion, in which some sixty-five to seventy couples took part, was begun. Worthington Whitehouse led, dancing with Mrs. Bishop. There were a number of favor figures, the favors for which were many of them imported, while Mrs. Collins supplied others. They included a large variety of pretty trifles, among them being card cases and ribbons, Louis XV. hats for the men, fans in bags for the girls, silver-gilt pencils for the men, Louis XV. staves done in pink for the girls, hand-painted satin sachets for the girls, and flowers for the men, feather boas, &c. The dancing was, of course, in the superb Louis XV. ballroom, the mantel of which had the mirrors on each side of the exquisitely carved ivory figures that ornament it banked by Siebrecht with ferns and the delicate mauve-pink sprays of the East Indian orchid. The halls were decorated with a profusion of palms and ferns. After the cotillion there was a supper, or what might better be called a breakfast, as it was 5 o'clock before the guests departed.

Among the three hundred guests present there were Mrs. Astor, Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, Col. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mrs. Ogden Goelet, Mrs. W. Seward Webb, Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pendleton, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Orme Wilson, Miss Potter, Mrs. Grenville Kane, Mrs. Frederick Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kemp, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay, Mrs. George B. Mrs. Arthur Paget was at the opera last evening as the guest of Mrs. Ogden Goelet. Mrs. Paget wore a black velvet gown with superb diamonds. Mrs. Goelet was in blue satin and diamonds.

THE NEWS OF NEWPORT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 25.—As soon as the frost leaves the ground the new memorial church which Mrs. Brown is to erect to the memory of her husband, John Nicholas Brown, for Emmanuel Parish will be started.

The structure will be one of the handsomest in Newport. While the new church is being built the services will be held in Bowery Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Prescott Lawrence and Miss Lawrence have gone to New York for a brief visit.

For some time a report has been current that a syndicate of Boston capitalists were contemplating the erection of a large hotel in the vicinity of Easton's Beach. To-day four of the men mentioned inspected eight sites in that location.

Deblois & Eldridge have rented for George L. Rives his cottage on Narragansett Avenue, known as Rosevale, to Mrs. John S. and Miss Stella D. Hayes of Allegheny City, Penn., for the coming season.

LONGFELLOW'S SISTER DEAD.

Passes Away at Portland, Me., Aged 90 Years and 10 Months.

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 25.—Anne Longfellow Pierce, sister of the poet Longfellow and wife of the late George W. Pierce, is dead here, aged ninety years and ten months. She lived in the old Longfellow house, on Congress Street, all her life. The house now goes to the Maine Historical Society.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Samuel Hicks Seaman.

Samuel Hicks Seaman, who was the chief owner, President, and General Manager of the Cromwell Steamship Company up to the time of its sale to the Southern Pacific Railway Company in 1891, died last night at his home, 156 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn. Mr. Seaman was sixty-three years old. He was born in this city and was a direct descendant of Elias Hicks, founder of the Hicksite branch of the Society of Friends.

When sixteen years old he became a clerk in a shipping warehouse. In 1861 he was employed by Henry B. Cromwell of the Cromwell Steamship Company, afterward becoming the head owner and official of that company.

Mr. Seaman was a member of the Chamber of Commerce, Hamilton Club of Brooklyn, Rembrandt, and Lawyers' Club, and the Society of Friends. He was a Trustee of the Bowery Savings Bank, and of the Packer Institute, Brooklyn. A widow, one son, and three daughters survive him.

Horace M. Warren.

Horace M. Warren, Vice President of the Williamsburg Savings Bank, died at his home, 167 Washington Park, Brooklyn, on Thursday. His death resulted from a stroke of cerebral apoplexy. Mr. Warren had returned to his home from posting a letter and was looking over a map when he was stricken. He died in a few minutes.

Mr. Warren was born in Waltham, Mass., eighty-four years ago and came of pioneer New England stock. He came to New York in 1838 and engaged in the leather manufacturing business. He retired from this business twenty years ago. He had been Vice President of the Williamsburg Savings Bank for twelve years and a Director of the bank since 1852. He was a member of the New England Society of Brooklyn, a veteran of the Seventh Regiment; and was an attendant at Plymouth Church. He leaves two sons.

Major A. J. McGonnigle.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Jan. 25.—Major Andrew J. McGonnigle, a retired officer of the United States Army, died here last night. He entered the regular army as a Captain in the Quartermaster's Department in 1865, his appointment being based on his brilliant service as a volunteer in the civil war. He became a Major in 1882 and was retired March 4, 1893.

He had some trouble in 1875 with Capt. Charles P. Eagan, who afterward became Commissary General. This conflict resulted in his trial by court-martial on the charge of conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman. It was specified in the charge that he had sworn at Capt. Eagan and threatened to cane him. The judgment of the court did not materially affect Capt. McGonnigle's standing in the army.

Christopher Yates Wemple.

Christopher Yates Wemple, who was for many years manager for the calico manufacturing firm of Garner & Co., died yesterday at his residence, 152 West Seventy-seventh Street. His death was due to pneumonia, following an attack of the grip. Mr. Wemple was born in the Mohawk Valley and received his early education in Utica. When he was seventeen years old he came to this city and secured a position with the firm of Garner & Co. He remained with the firm until his death. He leaves a wife and two sons. He was a member of the Colonial, New York Athletic, and Lambs' Clubs.

Obituary Notes.

Ex-Assemblyman HARVEY J. HURD died at his home, in Elma, N. Y., yesterday afternoon. Mr. Hurd at one time was prominent in the affairs of the Republican Party in the county and the State.

SIMON HASSLER, Musical Director of the Chestnut Street Opera House, died yesterday afternoon in Philadelphia from a complication of diseases. He was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1832, and came to this country in 1848. He was known as a violinist and composer of merit.

Ex-Judge R. N. AUSTIN, for half a century a resident of Milwaukee, Wis., died yesterday evening, aged seventy-nine years. Judge Austin was well known in the law profession throughout the State. He was City Attorney in 1890, and later Judge of the Superior Court and Court Commissioner.

AUGUSTUS J. BURBANK, a widely known real estate man of Chicago and prominent in Grand Army circles, died suddenly in that city yesterday of heart disease. During the civil war Mr. Burbank was Captain in the cavalry, but his health failed and he resigned and returned home. Three years ago he was Quartermaster General in the Grand Army. He was an ex-member of the Loyal Legion.

Ex-Assemblyman BENEDICT ULRICH died yesterday afternoon of pneumonia at his home, 6 Belmont Avenue, Newark. He had been complaining for three weeks, but was at his place of business Thursday. Mr. Ulrich, who was one of the best-known Democrats in Newark, was forty-two years old. He served two years in the Board of Aldermen and one term in the New Jersey Legislature.

HARRISON S. FAIRCHILD, a veteran of the civil war, aged eighty years, died at the City Hospital in Rochester yesterday morning. Two children, Miss Harriett A. Fairchild of Rochester and Henry Fairchild of Dayton, Ohio, survive. The funeral will take place Sunday afternoon. Mr. Fairchild commanded a brigade in Burnside's Ninth Army Corps, and for a gallant charge at Antietam Bridge was made Brigadier General.

The Rev. PHILETUS B. SPEAR, D. D., died at Hamilton, N. Y., yesterday. He was born in Palmyra, N. Y., in 1811, and was ordained to the ministry in 1838, becoming pastor of the First Baptist Church in Palmyra. He was made Professor of Latin in Madison University in 1842 and in 1850 he became Professor of Hebrew. He was Treasurer of the university from 1854 to 1889. The degree of D. D. was conferred upon him by Colby University. He is survived by two sons, F. B. Spear and J. W. Spear, both of Marquette, Mich., and by a daughter, Mrs. H. H. Keith of Sioux Falls, S. D. Interment will be in the college cemetery, Hamilton.

Mrs. MARY A. SEAMAN, widow of Gideon Seaman, who was a well-known hotel keeper and a former Collector of the town of Huntington, N. Y., died suddenly Thursday at her home in Deer Park, L. I. She was seventy-eight years of age. She had been in poor health for several years, but Thursday she was seized with

KEENEY LOST TO GARDNER

Latter Blocks Former's Championship Billiard Victory.

TIE FOR FIRST HONORS

Townsend and Keeney Will Meet in the Final of the Amateur Billiard Players' Tourney.

With but one more victory to gain to possess the billiard championship of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players, Frank A. Keeney of the Oxford Club, Brooklyn, encountered his first defeat last night in the tournament that has been in progress for two weeks at the Hanover Club, Brooklyn. He now will have to play Arthur Townsend, the Hanover billiard champion, in the play-off for the championship this evening.

The game last night was between Keeney and Edward Gardner of the Passaic (N. J.) Club. The latter caused a decided surprise to the crowd, and it was a large one, over 500 enthusiasts packing the hall to its limit, with every available inch of standing room occupied. Gardner beat Keeney by 300 points to 139 at fourteen-inch balk line. It should be stated, however, that keen-eyed billiardists who have watched Gardner's imperturbable coolness and his mastery of the open table game were not so amazed at the outcome as were many other spectators.

The game was one of the most brilliant of the tournament, from Gardner's standpoint. He finished in thirty-six innings, the shortest game, with the exception of Poggenburg's thirty-one-inning game. It ought to have been about two innings less, for after a magnificent run of 52 in the thirty-third inning it then took Gardner three innings to score his final four points. Keeney disappointed his friends by unexpected slowness in play, but Gardner continued to gain in brilliant style, and in the tenth inning passed the hundred mark by a magnificent run of 42. Several of Gardner's shots in this run called for appreciative applause. The points were fairly divided between nursed balls, draw shots, and some difficult open table runs. The close of the tenth inning gave him the total of 101 points, while Keeney only had 42.

Gardner's big run, however, seemed to act as a spur upon Keeney, for in the very next inning he gave his friends their first real heart warming by an excellent run of 40 points, chiefly on nursed balls. To the disappointment of the Oxford Club competitor's friends, this indication of regained good form was not fulfilled, and it was not until the twenty-seventh inning was reached that Keeney again showed a run in double figures. In this interval there was one veritable desert, when Keeney made six blanks in succession. Occasionally he would make a brilliant open table shot, but he seemed unable to make the ivory spheres run his way, as had been a marked characteristic in his previous games.

One of those dreary periods of non-scoring brought out the first indicrous phase of the evening. Gardner had made 8 points in the twenty-third inning, and then, failing to get the ivories out of balk on the required shot he lost his next shot. The balls lay temptingly together in a triangle the hypothenuse of which was barely eight inches in length. Keeney stepped up to play, counted, and the referee called one. Gardner then arose and remarked that it was his turn to play, as Keeney had shot with the wrong ball. To the consternation of both the referee and Keeney this was discovered to be a fact, and the crowd broke forth into uproarious laughter. The balls were then replaced exactly as they were when Gardner lost his play through failure to get the balls out of balk.

The only feature after that was Gardner's fifty-two-point run toward the finish. One grand bank shot the entire length of the table down the cushion called for loud shouts of appreciation. He missed his fifty-third shot while trying a massé, failing to hit the first ball. Keeney, seeing it was against him, fell lamentably in the rear, his game being almost a parody of his previous exhibitions.

The scores were:

Edward Gardner—0 2 20 3 0 18 6 0 0 16 42 14 25 0 28 0 0 4 5 0 4 0 0 1 8 6 4 4 21 2 0 0 5 2 17 52 1 1 2. Total, 300; average, 8 12-35; high runs, 52, 42, 28, 21, 20, 18, 17, 16, 15, and 14.

Frank A. Keeney—6 0 2 8 0 10 4 0 0 5 5 4 0 1 2 8 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 1 7 14 0 0 0 8 0 5 0 2. Total, 139; average, 3 34-35; high runs, 40, 14, and 10.

Referee—Edward McLaughlin.

The standing of the competitors at the virtual close of the tournament last night was.

	Won.	Lost.
Frank A. Keeney, Oxford	4	1
Arthur Townsend, Hanover	4	1
J. Byron Stark, Wilkesbarre	3	2
Edward Gardner, Passaic	3	2
Fay Poggenburg, Lobderkranz	1	4
Frank Gardner, Crescent	0	5

After Keeney and Townsend finish the championship tie to-night, Stark and Edward Gardner will play off their tie for third prize next week.

MAMMOTH TURKEYS AT THE SHOW

One First Prize Winner Weighs Forty-three Pounds.

Turkey lovers will find some rare birds and of rare size in the Poultry Show at the Madison Square Garden. Several of the prize bronze gobblers are literally mammoths in the turkey world, some being large enough to supply a Thanksgiving dinner for half a dozen families. The biggest turkey in the show is a magnificent specimen of the bronze variety and weighs forty-three pounds. It was raised by George Wolf of Seneca Falls, N. Y., and its cage is now adorned with the blue ribbon of first-prize merit. It is a notable prize winner, for it captured first honors last month in a show at Princeton, Ill., and a month or two earlier at Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Mr. Wolf has had good fortune in taking prizes for big turkeys, for out of nine entries he has secured four firsts.

"I had one in the show last year," he said, "that weighed forty-four pounds, and a few years ago I raised the largest turkey I ever saw. It weighed forty-seven pounds, and was sent to England."

Oke and McNeil almost had a monopoly in several classes of the poultry prizes yesterday. They won twenty-one firsts and divided between white cochins, golden and silver Seabright bantams, Japanese white and black bantams, and the Polish classes. In game bantams, the Havemeyer Brothers, with their fine display from their Mahwah farm, N. J., came out well, getting eleven first prizes. A. J. Hallock of Speonk, L. I., took all the firsts there were for his Pekin ducks.

The attendance yesterday was the largest of the week, and the newly hatched chickens in the incubators attracted lots of attention.

MOTOR AND CYCLE SHOW IN PARIS

Exhibition Attracts a Fashionable Crowd to the Grand Palais.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The Grand Palais, one of the few prominent buildings of the exposition, and the structure in which the art exhibits, including the United States section, were located, was reopened to-day with an automobile and cycle show.

The vast glass-roofed edifice lends itself admirably to the purpose of an exhibition hall, to which it is now devoted. A large and fashionable assemblage attended the opening. Several American firms are represented among the exhibitors.

Adelphi Basket Ball Team Won.

The junior basket ball team of Pratt Institute was beaten by the Adelphi Academy of Brooklyn yesterday, in the Adelphi Gymnasium, St. James and Clifton Place, Brooklyn, in a challenge match. The teams lined up as follows:

Adelphi, (21.)	Positions.	Pratt, (10.)
Cassamajor	Right forward	Bowie
Humpstone	Left forward	Griffiths
Mason	Centre	Richardson
Jelliffe	Right guard	Kirkman
Spinney	Left guard	Nexson

Skating Championships Postponed.

MONTREAL, Jan. 25.—Mr. W. J. Ross, President of the Amateur Skating Association of Canada, announced to-day that the amalgamated skating races for the championships of the United States and Canada, set for the 2d of February, the day of the Queen's funeral, will be postponed until either the 9th or 16th of February. The date will be announced Monday.

WOMEN GOLFERS MEET.

Changes Made in Rules for the Metropolitan Team Championship—Officers Elected.

Twenty-two delegates, representing twelve clubs in the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association, met yesterday at 6 East Ninth Street for their second annual meeting. The business resolved itself into the election of officers for the coming year and the adoption of some changes in rules which it is expected will contribute wider interest to the competitions held by the association this year.

The officers elected were: President—Mrs. W. Fellowes Morgan, Baltusrol Golf Club, Short Hills, N. J.; Vice President—Mrs. William Shippen, Morris County Golf Club, Morristown, N. J.; Secretary—Miss Ruth Underhill, Nassau Country Club, Glen Cove, L. I.; Treasurer—Mrs. A. De Witt Cochrane, Ardsley Club. Extra member of the Executive Committee—Miss Mabel Park, Richmond County Country Club, Staten Island.

All of the officers except Miss Park were re-elected for a second term. Miss Beatrix Hoyt, the former woman champion of the United States, was the additional Executive Committee member last year, representing Shinnecock, but she declined a renomination.

The month of June was selected as the most favorable time for the next woman's metropolitan championship. It was played at Morris County in June last year, but the exact date for the second tournament was left to the Executive Committee to arrange later. No formal applications for the tournament have yet been made, and it was suggested that those clubs willing to give the use of their links to the association for the contest should notify the Secretary, Miss Ruth Underhill, before April 1.

It also was decided that all entries from clubs for the team championship games should be made by April 1. The Executive Committe will meet early in that month and arrange the schedule of competitions, and will announce the time and place for the individual championship. The championship now is held by Miss Genevieve Hecker of the Wee Burn Club, Noroton, Conn.

The most radical change was made in the rule for the team competitive series. It was voted to make four players the team limit in the future, instead of six. The latter number was found too unwieldy last senson, some clubs being unable to put a strong team of six women golfers in the field, and rather than encounter ignominious defeat they took no part in the team championship event. Others found it impossible to get the required six together for every scediuled game, and an absence of one player meant a forfeit of three holes to the team that presented its full force. As the policy of the association is to encourage the game in all clubs, it was deemed that with the more convenient number of four more clubs will enter.

Provided that ten or more teams enter for this year's championship, the Executive Committee was authorized to divide them into Class A and Class B groups, and then to hold two inter-club competitions for those respective championships. Eleven teams originally entered last year, but in view of the recent modifications that number should be considerably increased this year. The association has a membership of twenty-three clubs. The Morris County women won the team championship last year.

Ardsley—Mrs. A. De Witt Cochrane and Miss C. D. Elditz.

Baltusrol—Mrs. W. Fellowes Morgan and Mrs. F. M. Bacon, Jr.

Englewood—Mrs. John A. Wells.

Essex County—Mrs. E. F. Sanford and Miss Georgiana Wilmerding.

Montclair—Mrs. B. Pickman and Miss L. Daniels.

Morris County—Mrs. William Shippen and Miss Cornelia G. Willis.

Nassau Country—Miss Ruth Underhill and Mrs. H. N. Whitney.

North Jersey—Miss E. D. Hoxsey and Miss B. Graham.

Powelton—Mrs. Homer S. Damsdell and Miss Grace Jenkins.

Shinnecock—Mrs. Charles S. Brown.

Wee Burn—Mrs. H. L. Williams and Mrs. L. M. Jones.

The President stated that any clubs desiring to put the cup offered last Fall by Clement A. Griscom on exhibition might secure it for two weeks at a time. The cup was won by the metropolitan women in their first team competition with Philadelphia.

WINTER GOLF IN FLORIDA.

Charles B. Cory Won the Palm Beach Subscription Cup.

Special to The New York Times.

PALM BEACH, Fla., Jan. 25.—Charles B. Cory of the Oakley and Ardsley Clubs carried off the subscription cup this afternoon by doing some good work and defeating both Sidney Carpenter of the Philadelphia C. C. A. in the morning and winning the finals against E. A. Mulliken of Boston in the afternoon. As Mr. Cory holds the amateur record of 72, made Wednesday morning, the present quality of his game speaks for itself. The consolation cup was won by J. B. Johnson of Ardsley, and the "lobster" cup, a trophy in silver, with lobster designs, went to C. D. Bolce. In the semi-finals Mulliken defeated Maddock, and Cory defeated Carpenter. In the finals Cory defeated Carpenter 2 up.

In the semi-finals for consolation Johnson defeated Pendleton 1 up, and Livingston defeated Barnard 6 up and 4 to play. Johnson defeated Livingston 4 up and 2 to play in the final. For third prize Titus defeated Salter 1 up, and lost in the finals with Bolce. Scores of Cory and Mulliken in the finals were:

Cory—Out	3	4	4	3	4	4	4	3	7—36
In	5	4	6	4	5	4	5	6	4—43
Mulliken—Out	4	3	3	3	5	5	4	4	6—37
In	6	4	5	4	6	3	5	6	5—44

An eighteen-hole handicap will be played in the morning, and a mixed foursome in the afternoon.

INTERCOLLEGIATE HOCKEY.

Columbia and Princeton Meet To-night in Championship Game.

Columbia's reorganized hockey team will make its initial appearance on the ice at the St. Nicholas Rink this evening in playing Princeton in the third of the intercollegiate championship games. Much interest in the contest has been awakened among Columbia students, for they are curious to see what can be done by a team that is the result of ten days' work. If Columbia can win it will be an added triumph, whereas if the Tigers prove victorious the edge of their success will be dulled by the fact that the team is not really representative of the best players at the university.

The last practice game between the former Columbia 'Varsity and the present first team resulted in a victory for the older players by a score of 6—2. This showing is not discouraging, however, the players feel, because the last year's team defeated Princeton last season by an approximately equal score. The line-up to-night as announced by the two Captains:

Columbia.	Position.	Princeton.
Von Bermuth	Goal	Paull
Benedict	Point	Sheffield
Eakin	Cover point	Little, (Capt.)
Eyer, (Capt.)	Forward	Homans
McKee	Forward	Furnell
De Witt	Forward	Alexander
Akin	Forward	Poe

Adelphi's Interclass Games.

Good sport was enjoyed yesterday in an all-round programme by the students of the Adelphi Academy of Brooklyn in the regular interclass games. There was an abundance of enthusiasm, and the records made were all meritorious. The summary:

Running High Jump, Handicap.—Won by Lito Law, Fourth Sub-Collegiate Grade, with 4 feet 10 inches; Roger Mason, Third Sub-Collegiate Grade, and Crosbey Spinney, Third Sub-Collegiate Grade, tied for second, clearing 4 feet 8 inches.

Dips on the Parallel Bars.—Won by E. Howe, Fourth Sub-Collegiate Grade; Lito Law, Fourth Sub-Collegiate Grade, second, and F. Leslie, First Sub-Collegiate Grade, third.

Pull Ups on Horizontal Bar.—Won by Roger Mason, Third Sub-Collegiate Grade; Crosbey Spinney, Third Sub-Collegiate Grade, second, and E. Leslie, First Sub-Collegiate Grade, third.

Relay Race.—Won by Fourth Sub-Collegiate Grade, Law and Ryan; Second Sub-Collegiate Grade, Worcester and Gabriel, second; First Sub-Collegiate Grade, Catlin and Hoschke, third. Time—0:17 1-5.

Presentation of Cricksters' Pennant.

The annual presentation of the pennant of the Metropolitan District Cricket League and the distribution of individual prizes won during the past year will take place to-night at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club. The presentation will be followed by a "smoker," to which all cricketers, members of clubs affiliated with either the Metropolitan District Cricket League or the New York Cricket Association, have been invited. The team of the Knickerbockers, the champion club of the year, will receive the pennant, and will retain the Metropolitan Cup for another year.

SHOOTING ON ARMORY RANGE.

Company C Won Seventh Regiment Competition for Kemp and Clark Trophies.

The annual competition of the company teams of the Seventh Regiment for the Edward Kemp and the Col. Emmons Clark trophies, which has been in progress on the armory range for the past two weeks, was concluded last night with the shooting of the teams of Company A. Both trophies were won by Company C, which scored 1,084 for the Kemp trophy for teams of twenty-five men, and 2,081 for the Clark trophy, for teams of fifty men. Company B, last year's winner of the trophies, tied with Company C in the total score for the Kemp trophy, but lost it because beaten on the score at 200 yards, at which Company C scored 533 to Company B's 515. The rules provide that a tie on the total shall be decided by the score at the lesser distance, which is the more difficult to make because shot from the shoulder.

Last night's scores and the summary of the entire competition follow:

TWO MATCHES AT THE TRAPS.

Steffens Defeats Dr. O'Connell and Then Ties Loeble.

A large crowd of enthusiastic patrons of trap shooting made the journey out to Dexter Park, Jamaica Avenue and Enfield Street, Brooklyn, yesterday to witness two important live-bird matches. There were three gunners engaged in the contests, Dr. Louis H. O'Connell of this city meeting Charles Steffens in a 100-bird race, and then Steffens shooting against G. E. Loeble of the Jeanette Rod and Gun Club, in a fifty-bird contest. The light was good and the birds were fast.

In his first twenty-five, Steffens scored 19 kills and missed 6. Dr. O'Connell missed 4 and killed 21. In the second quarter Steffens missed but one, and Dr. O'Connell got a tally of 23 kills. At this stage a high wind was blowing and sending the birds off like rockets. In the third quarter, Steffens made 23 kills and Dr. O'Connell got 21. Steffens killed "straight" in his last quarter and finished with a total of 91 kills, winning the match.

MORRIS PARK'S LIST OF STAKES.

Nineteen Events, for Spring and Fall, Announced by the Club.

The Westchester Racing Association has announced a list of nineteen stake events for the Spring and Fall meetings of the present year, the list including all the popular events that have become recognized as fixtures of the racing at Morris Park, and in addition to these two important new races, which are to be known respectively as the Jockey Club and Morris Park Autumn Weight for Age Stakes. These new events are put on the programme in conformity with the Jockey Club rule, providing for weight-for-age races. Both races are for three-year-olds and upward, one at one mile and a furlong and the other at two miles and a quarter, with $1,500 and $3,000 added. To the Metropolitan Handicap this year the added money is $6,000.

The other races opened for the Spring meeting are for two-year-olds, the Gaiety, four and a half furlongs, and Bouquet and Laureate, five furlongs each; for three-year-olds, the Larchmont, seven furlongs; Bayshore, one mile; Van Nest, six and a half furlongs, and Pocantico, one mile and a sixteenth; for three-year-olds and upward, the Metropolitan Handicap, one mile, weights to be announced March 1; the Harlem, one mile; the Toboggan Handicap, six furlongs; New Rochelle Handicap, seven furlongs; Crotona, six furlongs; Claremont, six and a half furlongs; Van Cortlandt, seven furlongs, and Amateur Cup, for gentlemen riders, one mile, and for steeplechasers and hurdle races; the St. Nicholas and Knickerbocker Hurdle races, and New York and International Steeplechases.

For the Fall meeting the stakes for two-year-olds are tha Nursery Handicap, six furlongs; the Champagne, seven furlongs, and the White Plains Handicap, six furlongs; for three-year-olds, the Jerome Handicap, one mile and a quarter, and for three-year-olds and upward, the Municipal Handicap, one mile and three-quarters, and the Morris Park Autumn Weight for Age Stakes, two miles and a quarter. The added money for each of the nineteen stakes opened varies from $1,000 up to the $6,000 added to the Metropolitan. All the stakes will close on Tuesday, Feb. 12, with a supplementary closing for some of them in May.

N. Y. Y. C. Ladies' Reception.

A ladies' reception will be held by the New York Yacht Club on the afternoons of Thursday, Jan. 31, and Friday, Feb. 1, from 2 to 6 o'clock, in the new clubhouse, 37 West Forty-fourth Street.

SKATER KEANE CHAMPION

New York A. C. Title Holder Again Victor in Figure Competition.

HIS SCORE A PERFECT ONE

Irving Brokaw of the St. Nicholas Club Finished Second, Closely Followed by Duffy.

For the fourth consecutive year Arthur K. Keane of the New York Athletic Club yesterday won the figure skating championship of the National Amateur Skating Associations of the United States and Canada, contested at the St. Nicholas Rink. Keane, in the opinion of the three judges, was perfect in his work compared with the other competitors, and he gained a perfectly clean score, never making a misplay or trifling error. Keane's easy victory was due largely to his wonderful power of balance, his great strength, and splendid control. In all the technical portions of his art he was unapproachable, and excepting certain of the figures he far outshone the other men. In ease and grace, however, he was lacking, and his skating, apart from the admiration it provoked, on account of its power and technique, was not of the sort to be entertaining. Keane is but 24 years old, and has been skating in championships for six years, in four of which he gained first honors. This record of consecutive victories has never been equaled, though George D. Phillips won the championship for five years with a year's lapse.

Irving Brokaw captured second place, with 69 points, 21 tallies behind the champion. Duffy followed Brokaw closely, with 64 points. Loewenherz finished fourth, while Arnold brought up the rear, with 26 points.

The skating began at 2:30 P. M. in a roped-off portion of the rink 125 by 40 feet. These men were entered in the competition: Dr. A. G. Keane, New York A. C.; Irving Brokaw, St. Nicholas S. C.; W. W. Arnold, Pawtucket, R. I.; W. F. Duffy, N. A. S. A.; R. Loewenherz, New York City. All afternoon the skaters confined themselves to different variations of the roll. Keane easily distanced the other men, while Duffy, who is regarded as a coming man, and Brokaw were having a close competition for second honors.

The movements were originally twenty-one in number, but owing to the slowness with which they were run off three of these were cut out. The object of the programme was to set forth the movements of figure skating so as best to test the proficiency of the skaters. The movements were arranged under comprehensive fundamental heads, designed to include everything appertaining to the art. The judging was done on a scale of points running from the number of contestants down to 0. The highest point winner received 5 in each figure, and the other skaters were rated at 4, 3, &c., according to their merits.

The summaries:

Plain forward and backward skating in various ways.—Keane, 5; Brokaw, 5; Duffy, 2; Arnold, 1; Loewenherz, 3.

$5,000 MATCH FOR TROTTERS.

Forfeit Up for Race, the Monk Against Alice Barnes.

The harness match race between Fred Gerken's noted Speedway horse, The Monk, 2:08¼, and E. E. Smathers's fast mare, Alice Barnes, 2:11½, which was proposed last week and which apparently had failed through the non-appearance of Mr. Gerken or any one representing him at the Rossmore Hotel Wednesday, when the owners were to have met and agreed upon terms, has been revived and now there is every promise that the race will be made. When Mr. Gerken failed to appear, George Spear, trainer for Mr. Smathers, who was present to represent his employer, talked rather boastfully of a certified check for $5,000 he had brought to post as a forfeit for a race for $10,000 a side. His remarks seem to have nettled Mr. Gerken.

The talked-of match came up again Thursday, with the result that Mr. Gerken's trainer, Fred Noble, made a visit to the Rossmore and there deposited with George Putney, proprietor of the hotel, a check for $1,000 as a forfeit, with a challenge to Mr. Smathers for a match for $5,000 a side. With the posting of the forfeit, Noble stipulated that the race shall be at mile heats, three in five, under the rules of the National Trotting Association, to be trotted on a day to be agreed upon by the owners at the grand circuit race meeting in Cleveland this coming season. Mr. Smathers's readiness to make the race, as indicated when he sent Spears to post his check to bind the match on Wednesday, leaves no doubt that he will accept the terms proposed by The Monk's owner, and the patrons of harness racing regard the race as a certainty.

Notice has been sent to Mr. Smathers of the challenge from Mr. Gerken, and it has been agreed between the owners of the horses that they or their representatives shall meet at the Rossmore on Monday evening to complete the match. As Mr. Gerken had decided to campaign The Monk through the Grand Circuit this year, the horse will go into training whether or not the match is made. The Cleveland meeting will be held about midsummer.

JUDGES WAR ON CRIMES AGAINST MORALS

Will Inflict the Heaviest Punishment in Their Power.

No More Fines in Gambling Cases, Says Judge Cowing—Offenders Against Girls to Get the Limit.

The unusually large number of cases of crimes against public morals, decency, and other violations of the Penal Code prohibiting the existence of disorderly houses, poolrooms, and gambling houses, on the calendars of the Courts of General Sessions have moved the Judges now sitting in the four parts to inflict the maximum penalties in all cases coming before them and to express in unmeasured terms their condemnation of the conditions of the "red-light" district which two reform committees are endeavoring to clean up.

Judges Cowing, Newburger, Foster, and McMahon, Recorder Goff, and the District Attorney are particularly vigorous in their denunciations of the individuals who lure young girls under age to resorts of the vilest character on the east side and keep them there, virtually prisoners. The Judges deem the time ripe when more publicity should be given to these crimes in order that the severe penalties imposed may act as a deterrent.

Judges Cowing and Foster yesterday, from the bench, gave notice that the maximum penalties would be imposed by them upon all gambling house keepers and abductors of young girls who came before them.

Judge Cowing's remarks were prompted by the conviction of John D. Frank and William Rack for running a policy shop at 285 Mulberry Street, within a few doors of Police Headquarters. These men are but two of many arrested at the instance of Capt. F. Norton Goddard's agents, who collected the evidence, and whose testimony obtained the conviction. Admitting that the men brought to trial were but tools of "bigger men" "higher up," Judge Cowing said:

"It seems impossible to deal out justice in these gambling cases by imposing fines. When this is done, the big men come forward and pay them, and justice is frustrated. It seems unjust to punish severely the tools of these big men, but unless an example is made of some, vice will continue to flourish with impunity.

"I wish to say from the bench, and I wish the statement to go broadcast and reach all those engaged in this nefarious business, that hereafter this Court will impose the extreme penalty of two years' imprisonment at hard labor upon all such convicted criminals. This will effectually prevent the release of the petty offender being effected by the big men who pay the fines imposed."

The two men received sentences of two months in the penitentiary.

Joseph Kassheimer, a married salesman of 110 East Seventh Street, was convicted of luring Mary Zinsmeister to 66 Avenue A, and was remanded for sentence by Judge Cowing.

"Crimes against young girls," said Judge Cowing, "are very prevalent. Two cases of the ill-use of twelve and thirteen year old girls have come before me in the last few months. The evidence has been well prepared, the juries have been intelligent, no mistakes have been made, and convictions have resulted. The severest penalties possible to be inflicted were decreed by the Court."

Before Judge Foster, Abraham Magid was convicted of abducting seventeen-year-old Rachel Mutchnick, taking her to a disorderly house and keeping her there against her will. The girl's relatives rescued her by forcing an entrance into the house at 140 Chrystie Street. Magid wished to be sentenced at once, and said in his own behalf that if he could talk with the girl for a few moments he was sure she would say he was innocent. This plea was ignored by the Judge, who said:

"Your statement is not worthy of consideration, because this young girl on the stand gave evidence against you that was convincing to every one who heard it.

"I wish to say to you and all like offenders from the Red Light District who come before me that you need nexpect no more mercy, when convicted, than you show to the helpless victims you sell to lives of shame in order to profit by their degradation." Under false pretenses you wronged an innocent girl, and I know of no offense more despicable and worthy of severe punishment. I will therefore inflict upon you the severest punishment it is in my power to impose, and the sentence of this Court is that you be imprisoned in State Prison for the term of ten years."

Michael McGlinchy, before Judge Newburger, was convicted of criminally assaulting his twelve-year-old stepdaughter. He will be sentenced next week. Commenting on the large number of such cases on the court calendars, Judge Newburger said:

"Publicity will, in my opinion, act as a considerable deterrent upon the infamous beings who commit these crimes, from, I believe, in many instances a total lack of moral sense. The publication of the heavy sentences imposed would be translated into the foreign newspapers published in the city, and when read by the foreigners in the city, particularly on the east side, would have a beneficial effect. The conviction of such offenders before me has caused many others of a similar character to flee to other States where the penalties for such practices are not severe.

There are thirty cases of crimes of like nature to that Magid was convicted of, and even worse, pending in the Courts of General Sessions. Twenty-three were disposed of during the last months of last year.

Mildred Hamilton of 235 West Forty-third Street was fined $50 in Special Sessions for keeping a disorderly house. She was accused by Policemen O'Donnell and McMahon of the West Forty-seventh Street Station. The woman stated in the West Side Court three weeks ago when arrested that she had been arrested because she had ceased paying hush money to the police.

THE COMMITTEE OF FIVE.

It Submits Additional Evidence to the Grand Jury.

The Tammany Committee of Five has submitted more evidence to District Attorney Philbin, as a result of the statement emanating from his office that the first batch of matter turned over to the Public Prosecutor was insufficient from a legal standpoint to warrant any indictments being asked for. Assistant District Attorney Schurman, who has all matters relating to vice in charge, went over the supplementary evidence submitted and reported to Mr. Philbin that it was satisfactory in quality, but lacking in quantity.

Lewis Nixon, Chairman of the Commitee of Five, when told of this statement, made known his determination if necessary to submit still more evidence, as the committee he contended had plenty of the same kind.

The evidence already submitted is understood to be against police officials in whose precincts vicious conditions have been found by the committee. This evidence, if the District Attorney deems it sufficient, will go before the Grand Jury Monday or the early part of next week, as was stated in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday. The Grand Jury will be prepared to devote all of next week, the last week of their session, to vice conditions, and several indictments are expected to result. Superintendent Steward of Bellevue Hospital, ex-Superintendent O'Rourke, and Thomas J. Monnock were again summoned before the Grand Jury yesterday, that body holding the longest afternoon session it has yet held.

BROKER CHARGED WITH LARCENY

Charles E. Wellborn Arrested on Mrs. Elleson's Complaint.

Charles E. Wellborn, who says he is a broker, living at 150 West Eightieth Street, was arrested by Detective O'Connor of the Centre Street Court Squad yesterday at 130 Broadway, on a charge of grand larceny, preferred by Mrs. Laura Leake Elleson of 635 Madison Avenue. Mrs. Elleson caused the arrest of Ichabod C. Bryant, a druggist at 152 Broadway, on a similar charge yesterday. She alleges in an affidavit that she sold to Bryant last year a drug store at 649 Madison Avenue for $4,000. Payment was given, she says, in notes indorsed by Wellborn, who claimed to be worth several thousand dollars in real estate. The notes were returned by Mrs. Elleson to Bryant, upon his representation that they were worthless.

A check on the First National Bank of Round Brook, N. J., was given in settlement of all claims by Bryant, and this also proved valueless. The latter disposed of the majority of the contents of the store, and Mrs. Elleson caused his arrest and that of Wellborn. Both were held by Magistrate Pool in $1,500 bail for examination.

POLICE TESTIFY FOR HERLIHY.

Say They Had Great Difficulty In Securing Convictions of Persons Arrested in "Red-Light" District.

The difficulty of securing convictions of disorderly persons arrested in the Red Light district was testified to by a number of policemen at the trial of Capt. John D. Herlihy yesterday. Several of the witnesses declared that they had been reprimanded by Magistrates for bringing such prisoners before them unless they knew just what had been said by the prisoners to persons they accosted.

All of the policemen came into court with long lists of the arrests they had made while working under Capt. Herlihy in the Twelfth Precinct. The witnesses testified that they reported to the Captain each night such violations as they saw, and each night he instructed them to continue their vigilance.

In cross-examining Joseph Bush, the first witness, who had done plain-clothes duty in the precinct, ex-Judge Olcott asked about his visits to 241 Allen Street, kept by a Mrs. Weiner.

"Did you ever take anything to eat or drink in the house?"

"No, Sir."

"Did you ever take a five-dollar bill?"

"Never."

John Lang, a policeman of the Sixth Precinct, and Abe Cohen of the Thirteenth Precinct testified along similar lines.

Mr. Grant asked Cohen if women were discharged by whom he had been personally solicited.

"No," said the witness, "but in other cases the women put up a good game of talk. I knew they were disreputable, but the Magistrate said they had a right to talk to men if they liked."

The witness added that it was difficult to get citizens to make complaints.

Ernest Peters, another policeman, said that a Magistrate had "called him down" for not having sufficient evidence.

"I remember," he said, "the Magistrate telling me that his sister or wife might be arrested for speaking to a man on the street. He said I had no right to arrest the woman unless I heard what she said."

Peters said that he disguised himself while hunting for evidence.

"How?" asked Mr. Olcott.

"By changing my clothes. Sometimes I wore overalls, sometimes rags."

"Ever wear a false beard?"

"No. But I shaved off my mustache several times."

Daniel Kerr said that when he arraigned a "watchboy" before Magistrate Crane the Magistrate told him not to bring such cases before him. "He said they were helping us in our work," said the witness.

William F. Sheehan, another policeman, said that Magistrate Crane had told him either to get evidence of conversation or see personally solicited before making an arrest. In answer to questions by Mr. Olcott, he said that he never heard women complain of being arrested after paying for protection.

Stephen J. Reagan, a wardman, was recalled by the prosecution, and testified that on some occasions Capt. Herlihy had accompanied him on visits to suspected houses. He was told of the eviction of disorderly persons in pursuance of orders from the Captain.

The hearing will be resumed on Monday morning at 11 o'clock.

Cigarette Smoker Sent to Asylum.

Jacob Felz, twenty-three years old, of 67 Morris Street, Jersey City, was sent to the Morris Plains Asylum yesterday. His father says that his insanity, which was of a homicidal nature, was caused by cigarette smoking.

In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale, made and entered in the above-entitled action, bearing date the 7th day of December, 1900, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction, at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, No. 111 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 17th day of January, 1901, at nineteen hundred and one, at 12 o'clock M. on that day, by William M. Ryan, auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:

All that certain piece or parcel of land, with the buildings thereon erected, situated in the Borough of Manhatten, in the City of New York, being on the southeasterly corner of Mercer Street and Washington Place, and bounded as follows, viz.:

Beginning at the southeasterly corner of Mercer Street and Washington Place, and running thence easterly along Washington Place one hundred (100) feet; thence in a southerly direction on a line parallel with Mercer Street forty-nine (49) feet and nine (9) inches to a lot of land formerly belonging to George Lovett; thence westerly along said lot on a line parallel with Washington Place one hundred (100) feet to Mercer Street, and thence northerly along Mercer Street forty-nine (49) feet and nine inches to the place of beginning.

Being the same premises which were sold and conveyed to the said Julius A. Robinson by George L. Kingsland and others by deed dated April 12th, 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of the County of New York in Liber 1672 of Conveyances, Page 81, on the first day of May, 1882.

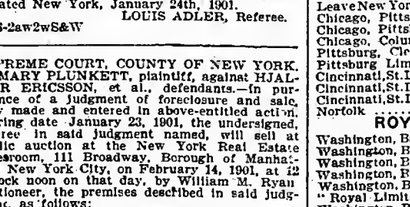
Dated New York, December 18th, 1900.

LOUIS ADLER, Referee.

FRANCIS W. JUDGE, Jr., Attorney for Plaintiff, No. 289 Greenwich Street, Borough of Manhattan, New York City.

The following is a diagram of the property to be sold, its street number now being No. 4 Washington Place:



The approximate amount of the lien or charge to satisfy which the above-described property is to be sold is $156,318.75, with interest thereon from the 7th day of December, 1900, together with costs and allowance amounting to $328 96-100 dollars, together with interest thereon since December 7th, 1900, together with the expenses of the sale.

The approximate amount of the taxes and water rents or other liens to be allowed to the purchaser other than mortgage money, or paid by the referee, is about $4,566.19.

Dated New York, December 18th, 1900.

LOUIS ADLER, Referee.

The foregoing sale is hereby adjourned until January 24th, 1901, at the same hour and place.

Dated New York, January 17th, 1901.

LOUIS ADLER, Referee.

The foregoing sale is hereby adjourned until February 7th, 1901, at the same hour and place.

Dated New York, January 24th, 1901.

MARKET MOVEMENT.

Dullness approaching that which ruled in midsummer prevailed in the stock market yesterday. Little more than 600,000 shares of stock were traded in all day, barely one-fourth of the high record day of a few weeks ago. As on Thursday the tape sometimes failed to record a transaction for several minutes at a time, while general commission business fell off to merely nominal proportions. Professionalism was the dominant factor in the market, but whereas on the day previous sentiment was bearish, yesterday there was a decided change for the better, optimism showing strongly. This, however, is considered not surprising in view of the fact that even on declines little liquidation now appears, while on the other hand there are evidences in more ways than one that the larger financial interests continue quietly to increase their holdings.

Notwithstanding the fact that London sent over lower prices, the opening here, though irregular, was steady, and thus prices were maintained, though inclining to advance, until the last half hour when, under the leadership of St. Paul, the whole list moved up, with the close showing substantial strength.

The only disappointing feature of the market was the failure of the Directors of Brooklyn Rapid Transit to make any of the promised changes in the board at the Directors' meeting held during the day. Less than two weeks ago Wall Street was given actual official assurance that Pennsylvania and New York Central interests would appear in the Directorate, while it was even proclaimed that Metropolitan interests had accumulated so much of the stock of the Brooklyn company that they, too, would be represented—might, in fact, appear in control.

The steel stocks received better support than on recent days. In Steel and Wire the principal buying came from a house close to the so-called "Chicago contingent," and there were all sorts of interesting though unauthenticated rumors in relation to the probable developments at the Directors' meeting on Monday. Federal Steel moved erratically, being first depressed and then strong. The buying was declared to be better than the selling. Colorado Fuel was bought on the good earnings of the company and the expectations of an early dividend declaration on the common stock.

***

Wall Street yesterday gave not so much heed to the talk of "the St. Paul deal" as to the actual condition of the road itself and the outlook for its future. At the same time, the position of the other Grangers, as well as the Pacifics, came in for more attention, with the result that of a sudden sentiment seemed to crystallize into the belief that, viewed from the actual and possible dividend standpoint, many of the securities were selling, at present figures, on too low a basis. Hence the appearance of buying orders in many of the shares and a resultant advance all through the list, under the leadership of St. Paul.

***

Disappointment because the promised changes in the Brooklyn Rapid Transit board did not materialize led to selling of the Brooklyn stock yesterday, breaking the price at one time below 75, and in the Street causing not a little unfavorable comment. The only support forthcoming was in the nature of short covering, and every time this ceased the stock declined. Manhattan and Metropolitan, on the other hand, were well bought and closed strong.

***

The only one of the coal stocks that seemed to drag was Erie, and this in spite of buying by a bull pool just formed. Inside selling was in evidence, and it was declared that it was due to a specific statement by Mr. Morgan to his friends that there was no reason to hope for any dividend on the first preferred stock at any time in the near future. This could not be substantiated.

***

The buying of the Tobacco stocks was on the announcement of the action at Washington looking to a reduction in the tax on tobacco. Friends of both the American and Continental Companies said that the saving to each of the companies by the reduction would be not less than $2,000,000 a year.

***

Missouri, Kansas and Texas stocks were among the strongest on the list, on the continuing talk of railroad consolidation in the Southwest, in which Missouri and Kansas would be included.

***

The pool in the St. Louis and San Francisco issues in furtherance of its efforts to lift quotations and induce a public following is putting out a lot of bullish literature, in which talk of the probability of an increase in dividends plays an important part. None of the officials of the company can be found to verify the report.

***

The movement in the Wabash securities was unattended by any news developments, though again there was the old talk of "closer relations" with some system, the name of which was not disclosed.

***

A number of railway statements were put out during the day. They included Missouri Pacific, which for the third week of January showed an increase of $89,000; St. Louis Southwestern, which for the same time showed an increase of $41,470, and for December a surplus, after all improvement and expenses, of $308,900, a gain of $154,220; Missouri, Kansas and Texas, with a gain of $102,600 in the third week of January, and Norfolk and Western, which in the same time gained $30,000.

***

Commission houses again reported a dull day, with business probably less active even than on the preceding day. The sentiment seemed to be that until the market settles itself, it is the part of wisdom for the outside public to leave it alone.

***

A fact that has not escaped comment is the continuing strength of the bond market, the more noticeable in view of the hesitation and heaviness of the stock market. Yesterday, as indeed on all the preceding days this week, there was a good demand for bonds, and the volume of business, relatively speaking, was large.

***

Though nominal quotations for call money did not fall below 1¾ per cent., a number of loans were nevertheless made at 1½ per cent.

TO-DAY'S BANK STATEMENT.

More than usual interest attaches to the showing to be made by the bank statement to-day, because of the unexpected figures disclosed in last week's statement when the loan account showed a large increase. This increase was popularly attributed to the payments in respect to the Pennsylvania Coal Company transfer, now completed, and it is heretofore generally expected that to-day the loan account will show little change. In some certain quarters, however, it is hinted that another increase may appear—not because of borrowing for speculative purposes, but by reason of loans abroad.

The known movements of money, allowing for the gold exported and including gold deposited at San Francisco, shows an apparent net gain to the banks of probably $4,500,000 during the week, largely due to the continued inflow of money from the interior.

REFUSED TO SELL.

A Broker Offers a Large Block of Stock, Only Later to Repudiate the Offer.

According to gossip in Wall Street, some interesting developments may grow out of a happening on the floor of the Stock Exchange in the late afternoon yesterday, in which two prominent members played the leading parts. While neither of the men concerned will talk on the matter, the story is that one of the two members, noted last Summer for being practically the only bull in the market, made an offer to sell 7,000 shares of Northern Pacific common stock in one block at going prices—being reputed to be a bear on the stock. At the time there were few brokers around the trading post, but announcement of the offer attracted in an instant a goodly number, one of whom—prominent for some recent activity in Missouri Pacific—offered, within perhaps thirty seconds after the offer, to take the stock as proffered. Instead, however, of getting the stock he was met with the reply that the offer did not hold good—that it should have been accepted instanter. A dispute thereupon arose as to the rights in the case, and it is declared that as a result the matter may be carried to the Governing Committee.

In any event, one result of the affair was that the market, influenced by the failure to sell and the willingness to buy, took on a much stronger tone, the workers for higher prices taking the view that the bulls felt much more secure in their position than did the bears.

STATISTICAL TABLES.

Messrs. Spencer Trask & Co. have just issued their 1901 (pocket edition) "Statistical Tables." The current number, which completes two decades of publication, is a most comprehensive and useful booklet for ready reference. It contains a concise statement of the principal railroads of the United States, covering gross and net earnings and fixed charges; the aggregate of stock and bonded indebtedness, as well as per mile of road, and other important data, compiled from original sources and presented in attractive form. Valuable information upon various industrial corporations is also included, and the entire publication bespeaks research and painstaking care in its production. The issue, which is copyrighted, has many distinctive features, and has grown to a wide circulation. A limited number of copies will be mailed upon request.

EARNINGS OF RAILROADS.

OWNERS OF PROPERTY
in the Bedford-Stuyvesant district will confer a favor by letting me know early in the Spring their offerings for rent.
The renting inquiry begins on Lincoln's Birthday, (February 12th,) and is fairly under way by Washington's Birthday.
This activity lasts until about March 15th, falling off rapidly thereafter.
Don't wait till the market is over before asking your tenants their intentions. Have it settled with them all the first week of February—or before if you can.
The best business people are early in the field for homes. That's the kind you want for tenants, and will get if you follow my advice.

TAMMANY EVIDENCE GOES TO GRAND JURY

Inquisitors to Devote Next Week to Investigation of Vice.

Committee of Five's Counsel Consults with Recorder Goff—Jury's Inquiry Into Conditions at Bellevue Ended.

Consideration of the evidence submitted by the Tammany Committee of Five to the District Attorney, and understood to be against police officials in whose districts the committee has unearthed vicious and disorderly resorts, will be begun by the Grand Jury Monday, or the early part of next week. Pursuant to Judge Cowing's instructions when the January Grand Jury was sworn in, Maynard Hollister, the foreman, desires to devote the last week of the inquisitorial body's sitting to the vicious conditions referred to by the Judge, and also to the evidence of the Committee of Five, which Assistant District Attorney Schurman has been investigating and getting into proper legal shape before asking for indictments.

The decision to consider vice evidence was arrived at during a conference yesterday between District Attorney Philbin and Foreman Hollister.

Another conference regarded as highly significant was that of Robert Grier Monroe, counsel for the Committee of Five, with Recorder Goff, in the latter's chambers. The consultation lasted an hour, after which neither would talk for publication. Mr. Monroe has not yet called on District Attorney Philbin, although Chairman Baldwin some time ago arranged with the District Attorney for the presentation to the Grand Jury of any evidence that might be submitted by his committee.

It is the belief of the District Attorney, who has not yet received any evidence from the Committee of Fifteen, that Mr. Monroe, the committee's counsel, unlike the Tammany Committee of Five, is carefully weighing the evidence collected by its agents before submitting it to the Public Prosecutor, so that there will be no doubt of its legality, or of indictments eventuating.

The work of investigating the mass of matter submitted to the District Attorney by the Tammany purifiers, and of weighing its legal value devolved upon the members of the former's staff. Mr. Schurman's examination of the statutes resulted in the statement emanating from the District Attorney's office that the evidence was practically valueless. This statement was purely inferential. Mr. Platzek of the Committee of Five made known, however, his committee's intention of supplementing the matter already in Mr. Philbin's hands.

Judge Cowing, in charging the Grand Jury, directed its especial attention to the existence of vice, and the general belief that the police were wilfully blind and deaf to violations of the criminal laws. Those laws, he said, should be enforced and the offenders properly punished.

The Grand Jury has been holding two sessions almost every day since the first of the month, and has disposed of a large number of urgent prison cases and other routine business, as well as investigating conditions at Bellevue Hospital. This latter investigation was completed yesterday, and a presentment will probably be made up within a week. This leaves the Grand Jury free to devote the remainder of its session to evidence against disorderly and illegal resorts, their proprietors, and the police officials under whose authority the complained of conditions flourish.

ESTATE OF C. VANDERBILT.

The official schedule of the value of Cornelius Vanderbilt's estate has been filed in the Controller's office. The report of the appraiser of the estate, Charles D. O'Connell, does not differ materially from the valuation of the stocks, bonds, and insurance printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Dec. 12, 1900. The figures printed on that date showed that Cornelius Vanderbilt had left $52,099,867 in stocks, bonds, cash, and other personal property. The real estate brought the estimate of the wealth of Cornelius Vanderbilt up to $70,000,000. In order to save the interest on the inheritance tax, Senator Depew, Deputy Attorney General Hasbrouck, and the attorneys for the Vanderbilts made the first estimate on the property and $320,000 was paid to the State.

Railroad stocks	$31,904,834.50
Railroad bonds	16,929,122.90
Real estate mortgages	1,447,759.03
Cash	1,213,571.01
Furniture	558,156.50
Insurance	25,000.00
Horses	19,024.00
Promissory notes	2,400.00
Total	$52,099,867.96

The above table shows the value of the stocks and bonds on the date the appraisement was made. The fluctuations in the stock market are not considered in this official appraisement.

Under the Inheritance Tax law, 1 per cent. of the personal estate, or about $520,000, will have to be paid into the State Treasury. Controller Coler receives 1 per cent. of the inheritance tax, or about $5,200, for collecting the tax and transmitting the money to the State Treasurer.

Appraiser O'Connell's official report shows the principal holdings of the Vanderbilt estate to be as follows: $1,100,000 West Shore first mortgage 4 per cent. bonds, $1,080,000 Black Creek first mortgage 4 per cent. bonds, $4,875,000 New York Central-Lake Shore collateral trust 3½ per cent. bonds, $4,875,000 New York Central-Michigan Central collateral trust 3½ per cent. bonds, 20,000 shares New York Central and Hudson River at 137, 40,468 shares New York and Harlem at 380, 16,250 shares Chicago and Northwestern at 204, 20,000 shares Wagner Palace Car Company at 188½, 23,500 shares Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis at 66½, and 1,372 shares Union Trust Company at 1400.

GIRL DODGED THE TRUTH.

Told Police She Was an Orphan, While Parents Were Looking for Her.

Hattie Hunt, fourteen years old, whose parents live at 101 Jackson Street, Brooklyn, entered the Bedford Avenue Police Station early yesterday and told Desk Sergt. Black that she was cold and hungry. "I am an orphan," said the girl, "and have been from the age of two years. For several years relatives looked after me and then discarded me, so I decided to appeal to the police for shelter and food."

The girl's story had the desired effect on the Sergeant, who sat her down in a chair beside a fire and ordered the doorman to purchase some food. While she was seated in the station house the girl's uncle happened along. When told of the girl's story he declared that it was false and that she had a good home with her parents. Hattie, who confronted by her uncle, admitted she had told a story and then declared that her parents treated her cruelly.

This story also proved to be false. The police learned that the girl had left her home on Wednesday morning without any cause, and at the time she appeared in the station house her parents were making a diligent search for her. The police held the girl, and when she was arraigned in the Lee Avenue Police Court the parents were present. They denied that they had ever treated her cruelly, and told the Magistrate that the girl of late was inclined to be wild. She was turned over to her parents.

NEW HOME FOR MONKEYS.

Contract for Bronx Park Building Awarded to Thomas Cockerell.

The Park Commissioners yesterday opened bids for the construction of the new monkey house in Bronx Park. There were three bids opened: William Henderson, $64,197; George Hilderbrandt, $64,747, and Thomas Cockerell, $59,700. The contract was awarded to Cockerell.

The monkey house will be the first of a group of buildings to be erected in Baird's Court, and will be the central attraction of the "Zoo." It will be one story in height, 130 feet long, and constructed of limestone, brick, and terra cotta. On the eastern side along the entire length of the building will be the outdoor cages, in which the monkeys will receive during warm weather. Inside there will be a pavilion at each end, connected by a long central pavilion. The building will be fire-proof and well lighted.

JUROR FAINTS IN COURT.

Benjamin Donaldson Falls Unconscious While Listening to Judge's Charge.

A commotion was caused in Judge Garretson's court in Long Island City yesterday when a juryman fell in a dead faint while the Judge was delivering his charge. The case, which was that of Kenworth against Bogart, which had occupied all Wednesday afternoon and almost all yesterday morning. The jurymen had arisen and were listening to the Judge's charge, when Benjamin Donaldson, a jeweler of Elmhurst, staggered and fell to the floor. His fellow-jurors and court officers went to his assistance, and he was carried into one of the side rooms, where restoratives were given and he soon regained consciousness. It was some time, however, before he was in condition to be removed to his home.

The case has been put over until Monday, and unless Mr. Donaldson is able to resume his place in the jury box, it will have to be re-tried.

"BILLY BRYAN'S" FATAL FEAST.

He Easily Digested Silver Certificates, but Fringed Paper and Broken Bottle Necks Killed Him.

"Billy Bryan," the Jersey City goat, so named because he ate seven one-dollar silver certificates belonging to his owner, Michael J. Kenny, is dead. It was not the silver certificates that killed him, however. Mr. Kenny says the goat's digestion would have carried him over that episode, even if he had eaten double the amount.

After he ate the notes "Billy" was banished to a farm owned by Mr. Kenny's brother, but Mr. Kenny's young son, for whom the goat was bought, mourned so over his pet's absence that Mr. Kenny finally notified his brother to send "Billy" back. The expressman delivered the goat at Mr. Kenny's saloon, at Grove Street and Pavonia Avenue, where the certificate-eating feat was performed. That was late Wednesday afternoon, and, as it was not convenient for Mr. Kenny to drive "Billy" home that night, the animal was tied in a rear room and left there overnight. When the saloon was opened yesterday morning "Billy" was found dead on the floor behind the bar. Several broken bottles, parts of which were missing, lay around him.

A veterinary surgeon, who was called to view the remains, found that "Billy" had secured his liberty by gnawing the rope he was tied with. Then he had wandered behind the bar, and began tearing down the fringed paper with which the shelves were decorated. In doing so he had pulled over the bottles, and had eaten the necks of four of them. That was too much for his digestion, but whether the broken glass caused internal hemorrhage or acute gastritis the surgeon would not undertake to decide.

WINTERS WINS WILL CONTEST.

The contest over the will of Anna Maria Dooley-Hunt-Winters came to a sudden termination in the Supreme Court yesterday by reason of the decision given by Justice Bischoff, which took the case from the jury. As a result of this decision Byram L. Winters, the young husband of the testatrix, comes into an estate worth over a million dollars. He was thirty and she was seventy-four years old when they were married, in 1894. Mrs. Winters was then Mrs. Hunt. He was earning $15 a week as a law clerk and she had the property which has been in litigation ever since her death.

The number "thirteen" figures largely in the fortunes of Mr. Winters. It was on the thirteenth day of the hearing before the Surrogate that the will was originally admitted to probate. Again on the thirteenth day of the trial before the Justice and a jury Mr. Winters becomes the victor.

The contest was carried on by a number of heirs at law, who alleged that Mrs. Winters was not of sound mind, and that her husband had used undue influence in getting her to execute the will which gave him property worth $1,100,000. Mrs. Winters obtained her wealth through the will of her first husband, Alderman William A. Dooley. She died four years after her marriage to Mr. Winters, and then nearly a score of nephews and nieces instituted a contest. The will was, however, admitted to probate, and then, to make himself doubly sure of his inheritance, Mr. Winters caused the matter to be carried into the Supreme Court.

Some fifty witnesses were called to prove that Mrs. Winters was decidedly eccentric. After those interested in proving Mrs. Winters not competent to make a will had presented their testimony, Supreme Court Justice O'Gorman, who was one of the witnesses to the will, was called, and he declared that Mrs. Winters was perfectly sane at the time of executing the instrument. Yesterday a motion was made asking Justice Bischoff to instruct the jury to find for Mr. Winters. In a lengthy opinion the Justice so instructed. He said, in part:

"Nothing in the expressed wishes of the testatrix lends color to the view that she failed to follow her natural inclinations in the disposal of her property. She had no relatives of blood, and, apparently, none of those connected with her held a place in her affections which could be a substitute for parental regard. Marrying the plaintiff in the last few years of her life, she evidently formed an attachment for him whereby her relatives were displaced, and it is difficult to perceive anything violent in the change.

"Such a marriage, in view of the great disparity between the ages of the parties, may have been a very unusual thing, and it may be that the plaintiff's motives were mercenary, but this has to do merely with the situation which resulted in the final wish of the testatrix to leave him her property, and has no bearing upon the validity of the will, if she was of sufficiently sound mind to express that wish."

MRS. DEAN NOT INSANE.

Justice Blanchard Denies Application for a Commission of Inquiry.

Justice Blanchard in the Supreme Court yesterday denied the application of Jotham Osborne for a commission to inquire into the sanity of Mr. Osborne's aunt, Mrs. Anna Dean of 409 West One Hundred and Fiftieth Street. The application made in December last asserted that Mrs. Dean, who is quite old, owned property worth $250,000.

Among other things the application said that Mrs. Dean imagined herself to be the Queen of England, and that she would array herself in all sorts of garments and bedeck herself with jewelry. Several nephews and nieces opposed the application, and Justice Blanchard decided that their affidavits showed that Mrs. Dean was not insane.

MILLIE CHRISTINE'S FARE.

Two-Headed Woman Causes Agent to Wire for Instructions.

The General Passenger Agent of a Southern line was puzzled for an answer to a "rush" dispatch which he received from a ticket agent at a small station on the line. The telegram read:

"What shall I do about fare in case of Millie Christine, the two-headed, two-bodied woman? She claims that hitherto she has been traveling for one fare. Shall I charge her one or two fares? Please rush answer."

After some hurried thinking, the following answer was sent to the agent: "If Millie Christine is one and the same woman, charge her one fare; if she is two women under one attire, charge her two fares." The agent has not yet reported how many fares he collected.

STUDENTS VISIT THE MAYOR.

The sophomore class of Muhlenberg College, Allentown, Penn., called on Mayor Van Wyck yesterday with a letter from Mayor Brandt of the college town. Mayor Van Wyck treated the collegians cordially. He said:

"I am always glad to see college boys. I congratulate you on this excursion from the dormitories and college rooms, and I know in observing our metropolitan life in New York you will be satisfied that no man can labor for himself alone—each helps to mold the universe. If you will bear that in mind, you will make kind citizens and able men. If you get into any trouble while you are here, let me know and I will get you out of it."

Mayor Van Wyck then directed Secretary Downes to give the collegians letters of introduction to officials at the navy yard and Governors Island. The students will attend a dinner of the alumni of Muhlenberg College on Friday night.

Just a little time and trouble, a little poking and groping and you'll be repaid twenty-fold.

Hardly a day passes but a few from our very choicest and highest priced are dropped into the $15 pile. Not enough for us to "holler" about, but enough to be interesting.

Suits and overcoats, $15.

OTHER MAGNETS:

Men's half-hose, 25 cents—doesn't sound low-priced perhaps, but it's half-priced.

Neckwear: 32nd and Warren Street stores, Ascots, 55 cents; Prince Street store, four-in-hands, 25 cents.

The Ascots came out of the dollar boxes, the four-in-hands from off the 50 cent shelf.

HERLIHY TRIAL SQUABBLES

Wordy Encounters Between Lawyers Olcott and Grant.

Police Commissioners Also Get Into Argument with Counsel—Testimony of Policemen.

Wordy encounters between counsel and Commissioners marked the progress of the trial of Capt. Herlihy at Police Headquarters yesterday.

President York and Louis J. Grant got into the first encounter, and, incidentally, ex-Judge Olcott was mixed up in it. It was while Sergt. James J. Norton of the Twelfth Precinct was on the stand. He said that he had met the Rev. Mr. Paddock in the station house on Feb. 12, 1900.

"What did he say to you?" asked Mr. Grant.

"Objected to," said Mr. Olcott, "on the ground that the question is irrelevant and incompetent."

A long argument followed between President York and Mr. Grant, the lawyer saying that he proposed to show that Mr. Paddock had sent his thanks to Capt. Herlihy for the improved conditions in the district. Mr. York held that testimony as to the general conditions had already been excluded in the case of the prosecution.

"We limited the prosecution to specific facts regarding the houses mentioned in the specifications," said Mr. York.

"It's hearsay evidence," said Mr. Olcott.

Pointing his finger at the attorney for the prosecution, Mr. Grant remarked that that might be Mr. Olcott's opinion, but he himself held differently.

"Well, consider my remark unsaid—I don't want to prolong the discussion."

"No, I will consider it," said Mr. Grant. "Several times you have called my questions foolish. Now I hold that in this you are foolish."

"That merely signalizes your knowledge of the law," retorted Mr. Olcott.

The Commissioners ruled the question out.

Then Mr. Grant asked the witness a question designed to bring out that Mr. Paddock had long had an animus against Capt. Herlihy.

Again Mr. Olcott objected, saying that the inadmissibility of the question would have been obvious to him in his first year in law school.

"Oh, of course," said Mr. Grant, "anything you don't like is obvious."

Mr. York said that the only way the question could be admitted was as showing a motive. "Even then, I'm very doubtful about it," he added, "but I'll admit it."

Mr. Grant then asked the witness to relate what Mr. Paddock had said.

"Mr. Paddock told me to ask Capt. Herlihy to come to his study in the morning at 9 o'clock. He said that the Captain should report to him, or else he would have his head."

In cross-examining the witness, Mr. Olcott asked:

"What did you say when Mr. Paddock made that remark about your Captain?"

"I told him I would deliver his message."

"What did Capt. Herlihy say when you delivered the message?"

"He said he'd see about it."

"Was that all—he didn't call him any names?"

"No."

Daniel P. Sullivan, Assistant Clerk in the Magistrates' Courts, who was assigned to Essex Market Court on April 27, 1900, testified to writing out the affidavit sworn to by Mr. Paddock.

Michael Haggerty, a policeman of the Twelfth Precinct Station, produced a long list of women he had arrested and houses raided and visited. This, he said, was done under specific orders from Capt. Herlihy.

Under cross-examination, Haggerty told of a visit to a house where he had a conversation with the landlady, who remarked that she "would fix matters."

Mr. York questioned the witness sharply as to the meaning of the expression. Haggerty insisted that she meant she would fix the rooms.

During Haggerty's examination there was another sharp tilt between President York and Mr. Grant. A few moments later Mr. Olcott asked the witness what caused him to think that a boy he arrested for warning a woman knew him.

"Oh, you can't be in the precinct long before them people know you," explained Haggerty.

"That's a conclusion," said Mr. Abell.

"It's sworn evidence," said Mr. Olcott.

"I know that," retorted Mr. Abell, angrily.

"I merely wanted to remind you," said Mr. Olcott.

"You don't need to remind me," returned Mr. Abell, with increased emphasis.

George W. Stevenson, another policeman, also told of arrests made pursuant to Capt. Herlihy's instructions. He did plain-clothes work.

"Don't you think it's difficult to get men to do this kind of work?" asked Mr. Grant.

"Don't answer," interrupted Mr. York. "What right has this man to reflect on the force? A policeman is expected to do what he is ordered."

The hearing will be resumed at 11 o'clock to-day.

POLICEMAN SENT TO PRISON.

Second Time McManus Has Been Punished for Non-Support of Family.

Policeman Michael McManus of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station, living at 267 Tenth Avenue, was yestenday sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the penitentiary by Justice Jerome, in Special Sessions, for the non-support of his wife and three children. The children are now in charitable institutions, and the policeman's wife is with friends. Pronouncing sentence, Justice Jerome said:

"You have disgraced your uniform and yourself. You have drawn $1,400 from the city in the past two years, and paid only $68 toward the support of your wife and children. We think you deserve punishment, and the strictest we can mete out to you will serve to sever you from the force you have dishonored. For that we congratulate ourselves."

McManus was sent to prison for six months in 1897 on a similar charge, and was also dismissed from the Police Department. Afterward he was reinstated.

LEGAL NOTES.

USURIOUS DISCOUNT BY PRIVATE BANKS.—A suit involving an interpretation of the General Banking Law of 1892, brought by one Italian against two others, which was recently finally decided by the Court of Appeals, has probably been the subject of judicial consideration by a greater number of Judges than any other case in this State. Pasquale Caponigri, a private banker, brought an action in the City Court, about six years ago, against Pasquale and Pietro Altieri, on a note for $1,000, made by the former and indorsed by the latter. The defendants claimed that the note was part of a $3,000 note given in December, 1891, which was usurious, and for forbearance upon which they made six payments of $150 each, and five payments of $50 each, over the legal interest. The defendants set up these transactions, and sought to recover back double the sum thus paid. A verdict rendered in favor of the defendants on the trial was affirmed by the General Term of the City Court, held by Judges Schuchman, Conlan, and Fitzsimons. The Appellate Term of the Supreme Court, on further appeal, also ordered an affirmance, Justice Bischoff giving the opinion, which was concurred in by Justices Daly and McAdam. The Appellate Division, in an opinion by Justice Patterson, ordered a reversal, and that decision, after reargument, has now been affirmed by the Court of Appeals. That tribunal holds, unanimously, in an opinion by Judge Martin, that the penalty prescribed by the banking law, for taking more than the legal rate of interest, that is, a forfeiture of twice the amount paid, to be recovered by the party paying it, cannot be enforced as a counterclaim in an action brought by an individual banker upon a promissory note. Such a forfeiture can only be recovered in a penal action brought for that purpose.

BAILEE FOR HIRE.—James Rutherford, whose team was hired by Leopold Krause and others, sued them in the Supreme Court, in Delaware County, for injury done to his property. After proving the hiring, and that the property was returned in a badly damaged condition, the plaintiff rested, and was thereupon nonsuited. The Appellate Division, at Albany, granted a new trial. Justice Smith, giving the opinion, held that in such an action against one of the bailees, the proof created prima facie a liability on the part of the defendant. The fact that Krause, one of the others of the party who drove the team, the Court held, did not relieve Krause from liability, in the absence of proof that he was free from negligence in permitting the injury. Presiding Justice Parker and Justice Edwards dissented.

THE WEISBARD MURDER.

Jewish Peddlers Will Raise a Reward for the Murderer's Arrest.

More than 250 Jewish peddlers met Wednesday night in the Golden Rule Hall, at 125 Rivington Street, to take steps toward offering a reward for the capture of the murderer of Meyer Weisbard, who was found in a trunk with his throat cut on Pier 11 East River, ten days ago. The meeting was called by Adolph Tietelbaum of 37 Clinton Street. As a result all of the Jewish peddler organizations will hold special meetings to consider what steps shall be taken to raise $500 reward which it is the intention to advertise in the Italian papers for the arrest of the murderer.

Speeches were made setting forth the necessity of protecting the lives of the peddlers, who in the course of their work among the Italians are often threatened for causing the arrest of delinquent purchasers. At the end of the meeting a collection amounting to $250 was taken up.

The police are still working on the Weisbard mystery, but up to this morning had found nothing which they thought worth giving to the public. Among the many rumors that continue to flood the office of Chief of Detectives Titus was one to the effect that the housekeeper of 56 James Street had reported to Headquarters that she had reason to suspect a former woman tenant of being implicated in the murder.

The housekeeper asserted, it was said, that the woman had had dealings with a Hebrew jewelry peddler, and that she mysteriously moved away from her rooms without serving notice or making explanation on the Friday after the murder. Capt. Titus says he will investigate the rumor.

CAPT. GRAHAM WINS HIS SUIT.

Capt. John Graham of Jersey City, who brought suit in the Hudson County Supreme Court against the Iron Steamboat Company of New York for $10,000, was yesterday awarded $1,500. Capt. Graham alleged that he went to Long Branch on Aug. 11, 1900. He had a ticket issued by the Russell Line, which was absorbed by the Iron Steamboat Company in May, 1900. When he presented it he says he was told that the ticket was not good, and was finally put off the boat and brutally beaten by the deckhands. Notwithstanding this he says he jumped over the guard rail just as the boat started. He was not further molested, nor was he asked to pay his fare.

The company's defense was that the ticket offered by Capt. Graham had been issued in 1898, and the Iron Steamboat Company had given public notice that tickets issued by the Russell Company would not be accepted. Capt. Wyse, who was in command of the boat, testified that none of the deckhands struck Capt. Graham. Wyse said he was standing on the gangplank when Capt. Graham made a rush to get on the boat. Witness said Graham ran against him and was thrown down by the force of the impact. This, counsel for Graham claimed, was impossible as Graham weighs 295.

The company will appeal on the ground that the verdict was not warranted by the evidence.

Capt. Graham is a noted local politician, and was Sergeant at Arms of the Republican Senate Committee that unearthed the great Democratic frauds in Hudson County in November, 1899.

JOHN G. CARLISLE SUED.

Cabman He Had Arrested Wants $2,000 Damages—Service on the ex-Secretary Was Difficult.

John G. Carlisle, who was Secretary of the Treasury under President Cleveland, has been sued by an indignant cab driver for $2,000 damages. The cab driver alleges that Mr. Carlisle falsely caused his arrest and compelled him to remain in the Tombs prison for three weeks. The papers in the case were prepared some weeks ago, but, owing to the difficulty of getting at Mr. Carlisle, he was not served until this week, and then the service was made by one of the plaintiff's attorneys, instead of by a regular process server. Mr. Carlisle was so busy with his work in preparing his brief in the Porto Rico case before the United States Supreme Court that the process server could not reach him. Finally M. H. Elliott of the law firm of Stern & Elliott, which is handling the case, decided that he would have to take personal charge of the service of the papers. Both Mr. Elliott and the ex-Secretary are members of the Bar Association. Mr. Elliott went to the house of the association and "camped out" there until Mr. Carlisle came in. Then he served the papers.

Richard F. Leake is the cabman suing for damages. According to his complaint, on the night of Dec. 22, 1898, Mrs. Carlisle returned to New York City from Washington and engaged a cabman at the Twenty-third Street ferry to take her to her home. After she entered the house, she discovered that a sealskin cape, valued at $300, was missing. The next night Mr. Carlisle, who had a description of Leake, went with a policeman to the ferry entrance and there pointed him out as the man who had taken the cape. Leake was arrested, and the next day was held by Magistrate Crane to await the action of the Grand Jury. An indictment was found against him, and in default of bail he was committed to the Tombs. He was tried before Judge Cowing in General Sessions on Jan. 13, 1899, and was acquitted. His defense was that he was on theatre duty the night the cape was supposed to have been stolen, and that he had not been near the ferry. He declares, in his complaint, that he was made ill by his confinement in the Tombs.

The case will come up for trial in the City Court, and Mr. Carlisle will fight it. He has already entered an appearance through his counsel, Curtis, Mallet-Prevost & Colt, but has not filed his answer. When he was served with the summons and complaint in the case he remarked to the lawyer serving them: "Leake ought to be in the penitentiary now."

DIVORCE FOR MRS. McGUINNESS.

Washington B. Williams, the Jersey City Master in Chancery who took testimony in the divorce suit brought on July 8, 1899, by Mrs. Mary E. McGuinness against Thomas McGuinness, on the grounds of cruelty, yesterday filed, at Trenton, a report advising Chancellor Magie to grant the decree asked. McGuinnees, who was a wealthy contractor, disposed of his business as soon as the suit was brought and went to Philadelphia. He has not since been within the jurisdiction of the court. He defended the suit, however, through Brinkerhoff & Fielder, his counsel.

Mrs. McGuinness testified that she was married to McGuinness at Newark on July 26, 1879, and that her husband's alleged cruelty began on their wedding trip, which included a tour of Europe, and that instead of returning in three months, as arranged McGuinness compelled her to remain in Europe for two years. When they did return, he left her when her baby was born and did not return for six months. During that time she lived with her parents, having no means of her own. After his return he denied her proper nourishment, she alleged, when she was ill, but when his favorite St. Bernard dog was ill he called in two veterinary surgeons to look after it. He also kept her a prisoner in his house, and refused to let her friends see her. On one occasion, she alleged, he threw a kettle of boiling water over her arm, scalding her so badly that she was unable to leave her room for three weeks.

None of these allegations was disproved by McGuinness's counsel.

OWNERS OF PROPERTY

The renting inquiry begins on Lincoln's Birthday, (February 12th,) and is fairly under way by Washington's Birthday.

This activity lasts until about March 15th, falling off rapidly thereafter.

Don't wait till the market is over before asking your tenants their intentions. Have it settled with them all the first week of February—or before if you can.

The best business people are early in the field for homes. That's the kind you want for tenants, and will get if you follow my advice.

LIVELY DOWN-TOWN FIRE

Drug House Blaze Spreads to Surrounding Property.

STARTS IN LEAHN & FINK'S

Water Deluge from Big Fire Force Ruins Much Stock—Two Firemen Hurt—Loss, $131,000.

The four-story drug house at 128 William Street of Albert and Joseph Plaut, who with several special partners do business as Leahn & Fink, was wrecked last night by fire and water, and two-thirds of the stock, worth $350,000, was destroyed. Thurston & Braidish, drug merchants, at 130 William Street, suffered by water and smoke damage to their stock of drugs, and in the Excelsior Power Building, at 33 Gold Street, several firm sustained losses by fire and water. During the fire two members of the Fire Department were injured.

The fire was an awkward one to fight because of the narrowness of William and Gold Streets, between Fulton and John Streets, and made many anxious on account of rumors that dangerous drugs were in the building where the fire started, and that another Tarrant Building disaster was possible, and the nearness of several old structures, which if on fire could carry the flames to Fulton Street.

The fire was first discovered at a few minutes to 6 o'clock, when the employes of Leahn & Fink were preparing to close up the place. In the office were the Messrs. Plaut and clerks. A department foreman rushed in and announced a fire in the subcellar. A hurried investigation prompted all to leave as quickly as possible, but the safes were closed and some papers of value were taken to the street. There was no delay in sending an alarm. Three others followed, and soon the streets in the neighborhood of the fire were congested with the apparatus of the department. Chief Croker took command, and reserves of police from several precincts were needed to keep back the vast crowds which delayed their going home to watch operations.

The flames ran up the rear of the Lehn & Fink Building and set fire to some printing and bookbinding stock in the Excelsior Building before a plan of attack had been developed. A water tower was stationed in front of the Gold Street building, six lines of hose were run into the Excelsior Building, and as many into 32 Fulton Street, and four lines were hauled up to roofs in Fulton and Gold Streets. Engine No. 1, with the powerful dynamo searchlights, was stationed at Gold and Fulton Streets, and the beams thrown on the Lehn & Fink structure helped the water tower men greatly. In the rear of Lehn & Fink was a yard in which was stored a variety of goods in cases and barrels. As soon as the flames leaped from the cellar windows these caught and blazed up, making peril for all the buildings overlooking the yards, as brands from the fire here were carried in all directions.

At 7 o'clock the result of the fire was in doubt, in spite of the immense deluge poured into the Lehn & Fink Building by the water tower and its platform pipes and fifteen lines of hose, but at 7:30 o'clock control was announced by Chief Croker.

Lehn & Fink's stock was worth about $150,000, and was insured for $140,000. The firm carried a large and complete stock of crude, manufactured, and imported drugs and its own specialties. It had no dangerous drugs in any quantity, but may have carried a small stock of chlorate of potash, which was stored with great care and remote from anything which would cause it to explode. Two-thirds of the stock was destroyed or ruined, three-quarters of the loss being by water. The building was damaged $15,000. The firm is specially fortunate in having its new building, 120 William Street, nearly ready for occupation. About $10,000 damage was done to the stock of Thurston & Braidich, at 130 William Street, and the losses in the Excelsior Building, in Gold Street, aggregate $4,000. At 32 Fulton Street $2,000 damage was done by water and smoke to the stock of the Upjohn Pill and Granule Company and other concerns. The total of loss is $131,000.

Fireman J. J. O'Connell of Engine Company No. 6 was so severely injured by falling from an extension roof in the rear of 125 William Street that he was taken to the Hudson Street Hospital. A glass gauge on Engine No. 13, which was at Ann and Gold Streets, burst and severely cut the face of Engineer Henry Volk. He remained on duty.

WAS A NOVICE AT EUCHRE.

But Members of the Party Allege Stowinski Made Up for It by Purloining the Cash Box.

A card party was given Thursday evening at the home of Miss Josephine Budzeski, who lives at 318 Warren Street, Jersey City. For some reason or other each of the male members in attendance was assessed 50 cents upon his arrival. All the young men paid promptly, although it was noticed that Peter Stowinski parted with his half dollar as if he was suffering intense pain. Not a groan escaped him, however, and soon the party was in full swing, with Stowinski swallowed up in a seething vortex of euchre, femininity, and small talk.

It soon developed that Stowinski as a card player was possessed of about as much skill as a new-born babe. He trumped his partner's aces with distressing frequency, reneged upon the slightest provocation, and in various ways injured the chances of many a partner of winning the bright, new paper knife constituting the first prize. His mind did not seem to be on the game. He appeared to be thinking of something far away, and it was remarked that he did not seem to be "getting his money's worth."

At the close of the series of games it was found that he had easily beaten his field for the "booby" prize, and then, while the refreshments were being served he quietly stole away. A little later the cash box containing the fifty-cent assessments, which amounted to $7.50, was missed. Suspicion fell on the missing Stowinski and the police were notified. Stowinski was soon found and arrested and yesterday morning he was arraigned in the Gregory Street Police Court. As Miss Budzeski was not in court, the case was postponed until she could appear against the prisoner.

KILLED BY EXPLODING LAMP.

Child Burned to Death and His Mother Seriously Injured.

Mrs. Josephine Offerman was seriously, and her eight months' old son, Frederick, fatally, burned last evening by an explosion of an oil lamp at their home, in the basement of the six-story tenement house 256 East Tenth Street. Mother and son were taken to Bellevue Hospital, where the latter died a few hours later.

Mrs. Offerman was preparing supper. Her son was sitting at a table in a high chair. The lamp was on the table when it exploded. The burning oil ignited the child's clothing. Mrs. Offerman attempted to extinguish the flames, and in doing so was severely burned about the breast, face, and hands. Neighbors summoned an ambulance.

MURRAY HALL STILL IN DEMAND.

Colored Prisoner Wanted to Send for Her to Act as Bondsman.

Murray H. Hall, the woman who posed for many years as a man and was a prominent member of Tammany Hall, is still in demand as a bondsman. Patrick H. White, colored, doorkeeper for the Democratic State Committee, and his cousin, Richard Hall of Boston, were talking over family matters as they walked along yesterday afternoon, and gradually drifted into a fight. They were arrested and arraigned in the Jefferson Market Police Court, charged with disorderly conduct. White said he wanted a bondsman, and he asked the messenger to get Murray Hall for him.

When White was arraigned the Magistrate asked him if his name was "Patrick H. White."

"No, Suh. 'Deed it is not. Ma name's P. Hampton White, and I'm de do'keepah fo' de Democratic State Committee. So long's Dick Crokah is rinnin' dis town I gets anything I wants."

"Get Mr. Croker to lend you $5," said the Magistrate as he fined both men $5 each.

LEGAL NOTES.

CHILDREN SENT WEST FROM JUVENILE ASYLUM.—The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday, by a divided vote, held that an order of the Special Term erred in directing that the authorities of the New York Juvenile Asylum restore to Giuseppe Billotti, his three children, James, Rosie, and Annie, which he in 1898 gave into its possession. The children were at that time surrendered upon the agreement that they should be retained for two years. In June, 1898, contrary to the father's protest, the asylum bound the children out to residents of Illinois. In March, 1900, after the expiration of the two years, Billotti got a writ of habeas corpus, claiming he was illegally deprived of his children's custody. The two visitors of the asylum then called upon the persons in Illinois who had charge of these children, and asked that they be sent back to New York. That request was positively refused, and the boy James, the eldest son, absolutely declined to go back. Affidavits were also presented on the hearing from the persons to whom the other two children were indentured, that they would not surrender them. Justice Rumsey, giving the opinion of the Court, which is concurred in by Presiding Justice Van Brunt and Justice McLaughlin, said it was quite evident that these children did not want to come back, and that the persons with whom they were indentured intended to keep them.

As the asylum had no control or custody of these children in any way, Justice Rumsey says, issuance of the order to produce them could only lay the asylum open to a charge of contempt of court for refusing to obey an order which it must have been known at the time it was issued could not be obeyed. Justice Patterson gave a dissenting opinion, which is concurred in by Justice O'Brien, saying it was "not satisfactorily shown that the authorities of the asylum could not produce the children in court by paying to the persons to whom they were bound that small indemnity ($7) which those persons seemed to have been willing to accept for the surrender of the children. It is true that if the children had been produced in obedience to the writ, it would have been for the Court to determine whether it was for their best interest that they should be delivered into the custody of their father. If they were of a proper age to determine the matter for themselves, or to have their wishes consulted, it would have been the duty of the Court to give full consideration to their wishes."

THE HEALTH LAW AND COLORED COFFEE.—An action involving the question of colored coffee, which has been before the Supreme Court for many years, was yesterday the subject of adjudication for the third time by the Appellate Division in this city. The suit was brought by George W. Crossman and Herman Sieicken, composing the firm of W. H. Crossman & Brother, to recover damages from Theodore G. Lurman and others because of their refusal to complete a contract made in July, 1894, for the sale of 600 bags of sound Rio, in grade about standard 8 and 9 of the Coffee Exchange. Arbitrators to whom the matter was referred decided that the coffee was of the grade which the contract called for. Acceptance was refused on the ground that it was colored in such a way as to be adulterated within the provisions of Section 41 of the Public Health Law of this State. A judgment given in favor of the plaintiffs on the trial was reversed in October, 1898. Justice Rumsey, giving the opinion of the Appellate Division, held that the defendants, to justify their refusal to accept this coffee because it was adulterated, were bound to show not only that it was artificially colored, but that the effect of the coloring was to conceal damage or make the coffee appear better than it really was, or of greater value. A judgment given for the plaintiff on the second trial was reversed because of the erroneous admission of evidence. Judgment given for the defendants upon the last trial has now been unanimously affirmed. The Court charged the jury on the trial that it was for them to say whether, upon the proof given, the full extent of the damage was, after the beans had been colored, just as apparent to the ordinary untrained observer as it would have been had the coffee not been colored. The Appellate tribunal holds that this was precisely the question in the case which the jury were bound to pass upon, and it was properly submitted to them.

MR. BROWN FAILED TO RECOVER.—The Appellate Division yesterday affirmed a judgment setting aside a verdict for Ernest C. Brown, in his suit against Robert M. Snyder to recover for services in introducing the latter to and bringing him into pleasant relations with Randell Morgan of Philadelphia. Mr. Brown claimed that Mr. Snyder agreed to pay him $10,000 if he (Snyder) should succeed in either buying up the interests of Mr. Morgan in the Kansas City Gas Company or in selling to Mr. Morgan the Missouri Gas Company, which was a rival of the Kansas City concern. The parties met, but there never was a sale of either company to the other. There was, however, a consolidation effected of the two rival gas companies, and, with the expenditure of over $1,000,000 by the defendant and his associates, the whole situation concerning the properties changed. Justice Patterson, giving the Court's opinion, holds that the purpose of the plaintiff's employment failed. The fact that a year afterward an entirely different transaction, under changed conditions, was entered into between Mr. Morgan and the defendant, the Court holds, did not entitle the plaintiff to recover upon the prior agreement, relating as it did to a special object, which was not attained.

CONVICTION WITHOUT RECORD EVIDENCE.—The City Magistrates, in order to render valid their judgments, must keep the minutes of testimony given in each case. This was so held by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday, in reversing a judgment of a City Magistrate convicting Charles W. Hines of the crime of vagrancy, and sentencing him to a term of six months in prison. This judgment had been affirmed by the Court of General Sessions. "It cannot be," Justice McLaughlin says, in giving the opinion of the Appellate Division, "that the Legislature intended that a Magistrate should be invested with power to deprive a citizen of his liberty, without keeping any record of the evidence upon which the judgment is based. If one can be deprived of his liberty in this way, then it does not require a vivid imagination to see how insecure personal liberty is. But this is not law, and public policy forbids it should be. When one is deprived either of his property or his liberty, the Court depriving him of it must have record evidence justifying the action taken, which can be produced when called for, in order that a review may be had by an appellate tribunal."

Charity Organization Society Warning.

The Charity Organization Society has information that one John Humphries, who claims to live in Macdougal Street and solicits aid for himself and mother, is a fraud. He claims that he has recently recovered from a severe illness in Bellevue Hospital and that he is still unable to work. He bears a letter of recommendation signed Charles Buchanan, medical missionary, Bellevue Hospital, and cites as reference a pastor in an Italian church in Bleecker Street. Humphries is unknown to the latter, and neither he nor Buchanan lives at the addresses in Macdougal Street given as their homes.

FLINT'S FINE FURNITURE

UPHOLSTERIES FOR ANY SCHEME.

Though our parlor floor is like a great color-box in its variety of rich and delicate hues shown in woods and upholsteries, frequently people like to play artist themselves and mix the tints of wood and coverings to suit their special tastes and surroundings.

For all such we have a sort of decorator's palette, where samples of upholstery stuffs of every artistic period, tone, and texture are shown for combining—and many beautiful fabrics—brocades, silks, tapestries, etc., are now reduced. Odd lengths for sofa pillows, etc., $1.50 to $3.50 a yd. (Former prices $3.00 to $7.00 per yd.)

Attractive furniture now below even factory prices, as you

Topics of the Week.

A new novel by Henry James will be published in the early Spring by Charles Scribner's Sons. It will be called "The Sacred Fount." Nothing it is believed that Mr. James has contributed to that small yet important class of literary erudite fiction presents in more explicit and definite form the traits that mark the latest development of his mature talent than the forthcoming story, which deals with a group of personages gathered for a week's stay at an English country house. As is usual with Mr. James the dramatis personae are mentally well equipped, whatever they may be from a cultured or a moral point of view, and the web of the tale is part and parcel of the reciprocal relations of the various sharply contrasted characters whose fate it is to be depicted by the pen of "the novelist who writes like a psychologist."

Mr. James Wilford Garner, Fellow in Political Science at Columbia University, has in preparation at The Macmillan Company a detailed study of "Reconstruction in Mississippi." The author defines the so-called Presidential and Congressional policies of reconstruction and follows out the latter to the logical results as they appeared in the period of negro and "carpet-bag" domination. Also he discusses in detail the establishment of martial law, conflicts between the military and civil authorities, legislation in relation to freedmen, the enfranchisement of the blacks and the disfranchisement of the whites, &c. There is also considerable space devoted to the Ku-Klux Klan troubles and the election campaign of 1873.

A book of memoirs has just appeared in Paris which should not long lack an American publisher ready to present it in a good English version. This is the biography, including many intimate letters, of Pasteur, written and compiled by his son-in-law, M. Vallery-Radot, who was associated with much of his scientific work. The story of the great scientist's life is simply told, with a fine touch of intimacy, which, when not overdone, is invaluable in a biography. It is not overdone in the book in question. Pasteur's life was spent in the laboratory, hence the biography would have been rather the record of the study were it not that relief is appropriately offered through the glimpses of the many distinguished men of the outside world with whom the savant maintained most pleasant relations.

An elaborate edition of "Ben-Hur," called the Play Edition, will come from the press of Harper & Brothers early in March. The text will be printed from new plates in two colors. There will be 43 illustrations from the play, reproduced from photographs in their. Paper of a superior quality will be employed, and the whole material, pictures and reading matter, will be handsomely bound in cloth [illegible] with a symbolic design. It is a curious coincidence [illegible] Lew Wallace's novel the sales for the last twelve months are greater than those of any similar period since its publication.

We hear from London that Sir John Tenniel, who lately retired from the staff of Punch, has in preparation a book of reminiscences. Such a volume as Sir John should have within his power to write would be extremely good reading for Americans as well as Englishmen. In the first place, Sir John is about the only man of any prominence in the United Kingdom who has dared to esy that he was never authoritatively interviewed. And, although this reticence to talk about other people's business or his own might not in some cases indicate that there was anything worth hearing concealed, yet in the case of Sir John the very fact that he was connected with the staff of Punch for half a century makes the idea of the forthcoming volume teem with delightful possibilities.

The extraordinary success of "Alice of Old Vincennes" has evidently made its author a very much sought after man from the publisher's point of view. Two of Mr. Maurice Thompson's novels will probably appear in the Spring from separate New York houses. G. W. Dillingham & Co. are to publish "The King of Honey Island," the scenes of which are laid near New Orleans in the closing days of the war of 1812. The other forthcoming book is "Milly: At Love's Extremes," being a romance of Southland, which will appear from the press of the New Amsterdam Book Company. It is possible, however, that publication in each case may be delayed, owing to the protracted ill-health of the author.

For reasons best known to themselves, the French owners of the Balzac copyrights never saw fit to bring out an edition of the works of "the father of realism" worthy of his renown. While éditions de luxe of the "Human Comedy" might almost be said to have multiplied in England and America, Frenchmen were obliged to read the master in unadorned and miserably printed volumes. The expiration of the Balzac copyrights, however, has given the opportunity to an American firm to bring out in France, as well as in America, the French text, with the illustrations which were employed in the translation issued by George Barrie & Son, Philadelphia. Evidently this will be a boon to French Balzacians, for, as one of them said the other day: "There was not a fine edition of Balzac in France! Only Americans had dared to expend hundreds of thousands of francs in publishing a superb Balzac—and that in English." (Il n'y avait pas une belle édition de Balzac en France! Seuls, les Américains avaient osé dépenser des centaines de mille francs pour éditer superbement Balzac—en anglais.)

A new psychic-sociological study from the pen of M. Paul Bourget will come from the press of Charles Scribner's Sons in a fortnight. It is entitled "The Disciple," and is said to be in the author's most characteristic style. M. Bourget's scheme is believed to be comprised of the telling of a dramatic and tragical tale, which, from beginning to end, has as its motif the subtle demoralization involved in the philosophy of utter skepticism, carrying with it an implied moral of great force.

John Oliver Hobbes's new novel, concerning which some data have already appeared in these columns, will be published in this country in the early Spring by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, who have secured the American rights to it after an unusual lively competition among certain publishers here. The story, as has been said, will be called "Love; or, The Soul Hunters."

What is believed to be a story of unusual human interest will make its appearance in McClure's Magazine, beginning with the February number. The author, whose name is Josephine Dodge Daskam, has called her tale "The Heart of a Child," and through it are laid bare the vagaries and jostling dreams of childhood, with much sympathy and literary art. It may be remarked that this story bears no relation to that of a similar title which appeared a few years ago in the pages of La Revue des Deux Mondes, with an extraordinary note of praise by the editor, M. Brunetière, extolling its originality, but which later proved to have been taken page for page from Balzac's "Le Lys dans la Vallée."

Annie Trumbull Slosson, well known as the author of "Fishin' Jimmy," has just completed one of her characteristic New England stories, which will be published in a few days by James Pott & Co., under the title of "White Christopher," in which several of the characters to be found in the former book will "have their say." Christopher was a native of Francestin, a valley among the northern New England hills, and the story tells of the way in which the great snow [illegible]

PHILLIPS BROOKS.

His Life and Letters in Two Volumes by Alexander V. G. Allen.*

In an essay on biography, Phillips Brooks, after saying that he would rather have written a great biography than a great book of any other sort, just as he would rather have painted a great portrait than any other kind of picture, gave as the essential to success in the work "a large vital imagination, the power of conceiving life as a whole." This passage might be taken as the text not only of his life, but of the book which with marvelous fidelity sets forth that life, until the reader seems almost to lose himself in its events and even more in its thoughts, and to become for the time being a part of that wondrous personality.

The outward life of Phillips Brooks is easily divided into three parts—preparatory, including his course of study at Alexandria; his ministry at Philadelphia, and his ministry at Boston. His Bishopric was so short and so closely identified with his rectorship as scarcely to call for separate mention. In his personal development, however, there are two subdivisions to be noted—his life at Alexandria stands out apart, and his visit to Europe and India marks a change in his type of thought if not in his method of work. In each, however, we see the same man, apparently complex yet very simple, attracting everybody to him by his personality, yet reserved, allowing no one to come into the inner life. Genial, kindly, sympathetic toward every one, yet often lonely, intensely lonely. Popular as few men have been, receiving praises which would have dazed a lesser character, he accepted it all without a thought that it was for himself, looking at it simply as his opportunity for service, and it made not the slightest difference to him whether the service were in Westminster Abbey or in the poorly furnished room of a needy parishioner. Many tried repeatedly to gain the secret of his power, but it always eluded them when they thought of it as power. It was only when they entered into his sympathy and service that they caught the secret of his life. Of the many characterizations quoted we select a portion of that by Dr. Richard Salter Storrs, pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims (Congregational) of Brooklyn:

There was in him a majesty and strength of spirit, as of person, which all had to recognize, and were glad to recognize; but with this was the utmost, loveliest gentleness and tenderness which made a sunshine in the shadiest places, among the humblest families whom he visited. There was that unsurpassed affluence of nature and of culture, but with it there was the beautiful simplicity of spirit, as of the vital air, as of the sunshine which irradiates and bathes the earth—a simplicity as childlike as one ever saw in a human soul. There was his utter devotion to the highest ideals of duty and of truth, and his keenest apprehension of the beauty and authority of these ideals; and yet there was with this the most sympathetic interest, habitual and spontaneous, in humble persons, and in the common affairs of life, his own or others.

There was that marvelous eloquence, yet consecrated always, in its utmost reach and rush, to the service of the Master, to the giving of the message which the Master had given him for the souls of men. And with all the self-respecting consciousness which he could not but possess, and with all the admiration and love and honor which have surrounded him as almost no other of his time, there was that marvelous modesty, which shrank from anything of self-assertion or assumption over others, and which showed to the last no more of either of these than when he had been a boy in school or a freshman in college. It was this combination of qualities, interblending with each other, representing the golden hemispheres of the perfect globe, which gave a something unique and mystical to the spirit of Phillips Brooks.

The foundation of this character is undoubtedly to be found in considerable degree in his ancestry and early training. There is a beautiful sketch of the lines of Puritan ancestry: the Phillips family, dear to the New England heart, identified with its best ideals of educated thought, coming to its flower in the mother, "of intense emotional nature, deep spiritual life, the temperament of genius, the saintly character;" the Brooks family, illustrating that solid, upright, unimaginative, unemotional good sense and executive ability, which laid the foundation of New England business prosperity. The account of the experience which led the mother, inheriting the very spirit of Puritan evangelical ideas, and the father, strongly in sympathy with the reaction against the hard Puritan theology, which resulted in the Unitarian movement, to unite in hearty loyalty to the Protestant Episcopal Church, is not only interesting as an exposition of the times, but significant of the influences that molded the son. A glimpse of these influences is found in the testimony of a friend:

It has always seemed to me that Phillips owed to his father the clear common sense and realization of the [illegible] and, so to speak, the personality of others, which kept him from jarring and made him able and to try for the needs of his individuality. I remember his once speaking with amusement of the difference between his father and mother. "Mother," he said, "always felt that her relationships must be set right at once. Anything [illegible] wrong roused her to appeal, "William, aren't you going to do something about it? Why don't you talk, then?" And then father with his quizzical smile would say, "But it is none of my business."

Now, it seems to me that it was just that capacity to see what was his business, and how in the prosecution of it he yet must regard other men's views and peculiarities, and could help them only by sympathy and honest respect—in that lay Phillips's great exceptional power. We have had many fanatics, whom we have honored for their single-mindedness, but few men of such breadth of mind that we could be sure they understood those who differed from them. And one such does more for the unity of the Church universal than all the others.

Turning now to the development so far as it depended upon himself, we find a wealth of material which is almost overwhelming. The whole biography is in a sense the exposition of this phase of his life. He is spoken of as a genius, but, apart from his wondrous power of perception, it must have been surely under Carlyle's definition, the "capacity for hard work." The record of his reading, whether in college or in seminary, would appall the average student. It covered the entire range of history and literature of every form, classical and modern. He never took anything for granted. His preparation of everything he did was thorough. His written sermons and sermon plans showed the rigidity with which he kept his rule to leave nothing to chance. Even his most brilliant extempore utterances were for the most part the outcome of hard study and careful thought.

In his intellectual processes he was exacting in the extreme. After he became Bishop he was to preach a convention sermon. His secretary, not seeing any preparation, grew a little anxious and offered a suggestion as to the importance of the event, but was met with the smiling assurance that the subject was on his mind. In fact, the manuscript was already complete. He was in the habit of making copious notes, and his notebook ought to furnish material for compilers of anthologies, year books, &c., innumerable. Numerous extracts from these notes are given in the pages of these volumes, collected principally from those made during his seminary course. But he kept up the habit throughout his life. "He had great faith in the possibility of turning conviction and belief into axioms," and no sooner did he receive a thought than he occupied himself with the form it must take.

Closely akin to this was his habit of observation. Nothing seemed to escape his notice, whether in the world of nature, of which he was very fond, or in the realm of thought. It was, however, the human soul that was his most profound study, and he made a constant effort to enter into the lives of others, not critically, passing judgment upon them, but sympathetically, with a view to helping them. In the course of this development there became manifest certain changes both in thought and speech as he entered more fully into the meaning of life, came to feel its terrible intensity, and understand the significance of the movements in the world, not only of religion, but of science and political development. These changes Prof. Allen has described quite clearly in speaking of his return from his year in Europe and India.

In the first period, which included his ministry in Philadelphia, he had written, perhaps, his most beautiful sermons, full of the poetry of life, disclosing the hidden significance of the Divine allegory of human history—a great artist, himself unmoved as he unrolled the panorama of man. In the second period he had been at war with the forces which were undermining faith, and out without suffering, his own soul being torn with the conflict; yet in those dark days always appearing like a tower of strength. That period was over now. He had felt while abroad that another subtle imponderable change in the atmosphere of human existence was modifying the situation.

The tendency was toward theism, not yet, perhaps, distinctly toward Christianity, but there was improvement visible from the highest outlook. The mechanical theory of the world was yielding to the evidences of faith. He had still the same message for those who were feeling the action of the storm as it subsided. He met with his old force those belated travelers who had not noted the new signs on the spiritual horizon. But to speak to the new age was now his distinctive mission. His preaching changed to correspond to the change within. He addressed himself in his totality as a man to the common humanity, doing greatly whatever he did, and assuming the greatness of those to whom he spoke. He fell back upon the simplest issues of life; the simplest truths were the main themes of his teaching. But in all this he illustrated the truth of Goethe's remark, "Whatever a man doth greatly, he does with his whole nature." In his earlier years, as in his "Lectures on Preaching," he had said that "the thought of rescue has monopolized our religion and often crowded out the thought of culture." Now, the idea of rescue became more prominent, but it was the rescue of men from the danger of losing the great opportunity of life—the chance which was given of making the most of the Divine privilege of the children of God.

Yet, deeply interesting as is the study of the character of Phillips Brooks, it is, after all, the man himself that stands most clearly in these pages. The story of the life is simple. Educated at the Latin School and Harvard College, he tried teaching, but failed, and then scarcely knowing what to do, made an experiment of a year at the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, Va. After the first year he had no hesitancy as to his duty. Prompt on his graduation came the call to the Church of the Advent, in Philadelphia. He was then twenty-three years of age, and from that moment his life was a record of popularity and success almost unexampled. He remained in Philadelphia ten years, and counted those in some respects the happiest of his life. He was free from the restraints of later years, and threw himself with his whole soul into whatever interested him. It was the period of the civil war, and he entered into the contest vigorously. There, too, he formed his most intimate friendships, and in later years, when heavier and more engrossing duties pressed upon him, and the solemnity of life rested on his soul, he looked back to the Philadelphia days with great affection, even longing. Philadelphia loved him, and he responded to the love.

His acceptance of the call to Boston brought a change. He became still more a minister and distinctively a pariah minister, devoting himself to the work at Trinity Church with absolute devotion. Once only he came near making a change when called to the position of preacher to Harvard University and Professor of Christian Ethics. It was a position most congenial to him. For a long time the battle, for so it must be termed, went on. No greater tribute could possibly have been given to his power and influence than the efforts that were made to secure his acceptance and declination of the call. If he had ever doubted his success at Trinity Church, such doubt must have been dispelled by the appeals from men and women in every walk of life to stay and help them. When he decided to remain it was at first with hesitancy and just a tinge of the "blues," but he threw himself into the work before him, and before long it became evident that he was doing as much for Harvard as if he had accepted the invitation, while he was also helping others, as he could not have done in the university city.

It was a foregone conclusion that Phillips Brooks should be Bishop. More than once he had been nominated, but had steadfastly declined. When, however, the Bishopric of Massachusetts was vacant the demand for his acceptance was universal, and even Trinity Church was silent. The country looked on with approval at the nomination, then waited with astonishment and almost indignation at the delay in confirmation. It seemed impossible that there could be two opinions, yet the voice of warning was raised against the man who was friendly with Unitarians, was willing to exchange pulpits with his fellow-ministers of other denominations, and made light of apostolic succession. He triumphed, and in that triumph strengthened the Church he loved, and when he died, worn out by the strain which even his mighty frame and iron strength could not endure, there was not a company of earnest Christian workers in the world that did not feel the loss. England and India, Germany and Japan, united with the United States in the expression of grief.

Any general characterization of Phillips Brooks is impossible. Prof. Allen, with excellent judgment, makes no attempt at it, but lets the life speak for itself through his own story. It is a book that cannot be skimmed; it must be read, and few will begin to read who will not keep on to the end. It is less a biography than a life lived out on the printed page, forcing its way into every life. We are the better for reading it, just as all were the better for seeing, hearing, feeling it.

College Verse from Columbia.*

This little volume of nonsense verse by Melville Henry Cane has just made its appearance at Columbia University. The style is that of Oliver Herford, and the execution reminds one of A. B. Frost in his golf verse. The different phases of college life are portrayed, and the metre carries with it the inevitable throb of the undergraduate heart. Were it not for the local illustrations of Will H. Schanck, the verses, with a few exceptions, might be merely typical of American college life in general, but the black and white representations of President Low and the library on the hill bring the subject matter peculiarly home to New Yorkers, and Columbia men in particular. The last stanza in the book illustrates the lightness of touch of the entire volume:

Z—I'm like Longfellow's hero,
Scaling Morningside Heights when it's zero.
It's absurd, days like these,
To work hard for degrees,
For there are no degrees when it's zero.

Perhaps the most popular stanza to college men should be the "F" effusion:

F stands for Freshman and Frat,
The Faculty, Flunks, and a' that.
If you don't like these four
The exams will bring more,
Which I'll serve to you hot off the bat.

The author is well known to Columbia men as the former editor of The Columbia Literary Monthly and Columbian, and as a recent contributor to Life.

"The Science of the Tides," being a study in physical geography, by Alexander Brownlie, is published as Bulletin No. 5, Vol. XXXII. of the American Geographical Society's publications. The author discusses the theories of Prof. George Howard Darwin, and presents much valuable and interesting material. He is, however, obliged to state at the end that "At the dawn of the twentieth century, after a guardianship of two centuries, the masters of the science confess that the actual tides of nature are insoluble by mathematics."

ORIENTAL RUGS.

Mr. Mumford's Elaborate Volume—Superb Colored Plates.*

Perhaps one's first feeling upon finishing a careful reading of Mr. John Kimberly Mumford's large octavo volume of nearly 300 pages, not including its illustrations, maps, &c., is one of extreme pleasure in all its mechanical details. When so large a volume, whose pages measure 8x12 inches, is yet so light, and so easily opened and handled, it speaks much for the care and skill bestowed by printer and binder upon its preparation. The selection of its paper, soft and well made—the illustrations necessarily being on a smooth-finished paper—the beauty of the type and the well-proportioned page reflect upon the printer. The title-page is very good, its plain, bold lettering and inclosing lines being printed in rug colors, while its centre ornament is a small but beautifully made reproduction of a prayer rug, its black and white showing the design with unusual clearness.

The illustrations consist chiefly of reproductions of rare and typical rugs, sixteen of which are beautifully done in colors made by a new and secret process carried on in Detroit. It is said that after some of the best New York color printers had given up in despair the task of reproducing the color, texture, quality, and sheen of old Oriental rugs, the present reproductions were undertaken and carried into successful operation, the illustrations being the most marvelously fine specimens of color work the present writer has ever seen, not forgetting the reproductions of Chinese porcelain by the Prangs, shown at the Grolier Club a few years ago. It has been said that the preparation of a single plate by this new process takes at least three months, the illustrations having been in course of preparation for about a year. The artotypes, eight in number, are equally well made, the designs coming out even better than in the color plates. There have also been added a number of photo-engravings illustrating different phases of the rug industry. The text of this book is so closely connected with its illustrations that it is unusually satisfactory to find these reproductions so successfully carried out.

The binding is particularly well done, the book opening freely and without the slightest strain upon its back, and lying open easily upon the table without the necessity for holding it in place, this being a most unusual and noteworthy feature of so large a volume and reflecting credit upon its makers. The cover is in dark wine colored cloth, the lettering being in old cream color, the texture of the cloth closely suggesting the warp of a rug.

Mr. Mumford's book is the first to cover his chosen field easily obtainable; there having been one or two very expensive foreign books on the subject. The present volume, which is the work of a rug collector who is a graduate of Princeton and entirely an amateur, who has traveled widely in search of both rugs and information, will be found of the greatest interest and value. Purdon Clarke, Assistant Director of the South Kensington Museum, has said that, although carpet weaving probably dates from the beginning of history, there is no industry of which we know so little bibliographically, not only as to old products, but as to those of our own time. Mr. Mumford states his aims in the preparation of the present book to have been as follows:

First, to consider the deep and enjoyable meaning of Oriental floor coverings; second, to throw light upon the life and work of the weavers; third, to dispel, so far as lies within the power of the author, the obscurity in which the subject has hitherto been involved, and place the reader in possession of such information regarding the rugs, both genuine and spurious, now generally offered for sale in American markets, as shall, in a measure at least, deliver him from the mercy of the decorator, the salesman, and the auctioneer; fourth, to emphasize the superiority of the old vegetable dyes, the true Oriental coloring; finally, to give an idea of what constitutes true value, of the comparative worth of the various Oriental weavings, and the means of distinguishing them.

Mr. Mumford says there are rugs in every trade collection absolutely impossible to identify. The people engaged in rugmaking number millions, all with individuality and aims and inspirations of their own; otherwise conformity to local traditions, both of texture and design, would at once establish a rug's origin. A weaver belonging to a tribe which for centuries has used wool both for warp and weft, may either from necessity or for a whim substitute cotton or goat's hair either for one or both. Or, Mr. Mumford says, some wild leader in the north may one day order the thousands of his clan to abandon old designs and weave their rugs after some new pattern of his own devising, so that when these bales come to market the finished rugs will be found to differ from the customary products of the tribe. And, since manufacture for market has become the rule, numberless European and American designs have been sent to Oriental weavers for patterns, so that while the old types are not entirely lost, patterns, figures, and designs can no longer be depended upon for identification. The designs are jumbled together to suit trade demands; some of the rugs made in East Indian jails showing Turkish, Persian, and Caucasian elements wrought into one and the same design. Many patterns, too, are used over a wide extent of territory, so that in a Persian bazaar two Hamadanlis were heard disputing for a long time as to whether certain "runners" came from Kara Genz or Kengawar.

As to the deterioration of Oriental fabrics, this decadence is shown in design and color, as well as in execution. The weavers in many instances have learned the demoralizing lessons of haste, with its attendant evil of carelessness; patterns are being rapidly Occidentalized, the colors used being the product of the laboratory instead of being vegetable dyes. So that in every way the chief characteristics of Eastern rugs—beauty and strength—are fast disappearing. The evil at the root of the whole matter seems to lie in the fact that it is impossible for the Oriental races, mere remnants of the millions who once peopled these countries, with their old, slow methods and high standard of production, to meet the trade demands of the present day.

For the purposes of a collector, an "antique," as applied to Oriental rugs and carpets, has been defined as a fabric not less than fifty years of actual age; but so few veritable antiques ever reach this country, while so many artificial methods are resorted to to give the appearance of age, that for business purposes all rugs which in regard to dyes, materials, patterns, and textures are at all similar to the rugs of half a century ago are counted as antiques. There are still neighborhoods where the standards of design and workmanship are still maintained, but it is said that the dealers in the East and many in our own country take advantage of every defect in a rug and employ all sorts of chemical devices to turn a year-old rug into a veritable antique:

It may have been treated with lemon juice and oxalic acid, for example, to change its flaming reds into old shades, or with coffee to give it the yellow of years. Its lustre may be born of glycerine. It may have been singed with hot irons. Its hues have perhaps been dulled by smoke. It may have been buried in the ground and then renovated, sand-papered back and front to give the thinness of old age; and for the sheer decrepitude of an almost sacred and invaluable antiquity, hammered and combed at the sides and ends and on spots over its surface.

On the whole, Mr. Mumford advises all but the wealthiest collectors to give up the search for genuine antiques, purchasing instead fabrics confessedly new, but conforming exactly to the highest standards. Rugs "which have the requisite number of knots to the square inch, the colors of which will not run when attacked by water, the patterns of which are precisely the patterns of the East," the purchase of which will secure for their owners heirlooms which will outlast their buyers by generations; remembering that desirable Oriental rugs can seldom be bought cheap, it being generally safe to assume that "who sells an Oriental rug very cheap is selling a very cheap Oriental rug as well."

The chapters on the history of Oriental rugs and carpets, and on "The Rug-Weaving Peoples," are most fascinating. Mr. Mumford seems to have fallen very completely under the glamour of the East—to have come under the spell of Eastern weavings—to have lived so thoroughly with his rugs that they have become prose poems to him; much of the fascination this subject has exercised upon the author will be found transmitted to us through his written page:

It is hard not to put questions to an Oriental rug when you are alone with it. What of this little web, which in its gay Eastern colorings seems so much more like a silent, smiling guest than a property? Was it born in a shepherd's hut in the pilloried mountains of Central Asia, with the snow whirling about the door and the sheep and camels huddled without? Or did the birds sing among the roses of a Persian village to the weaver as he tied the stitches in? From what far defile in Afghanistan did it journey on camel back to the sea, swept by the sand storms of the desert, scorched by the Orient heat? Was it paid to a mollah for prayers at the shrine of Mecca or Meshhad? Did it change hands in fair barter in the market place or did it pass over the dead body of its rightful owner to the keeping of the swarthy man who sold it to the dealers from Stamboul?

The chapter on materials is very good, but far better is the delightful essay upon dyes and dye workers, Mr. Mumford telling us that "color is the Orient's secret and its glory." This is as true as is the fact that the introduction of aniline dyes is working havoc in all parts of the East. The dignity pertaining to the dye worker is almost akin to that of the priesthood; in proportion as his skill in color is valued, so is his estimation with his fellows. In great rug-weaving towns the dyers are very numerous; in Oushak, for instance, the carpet centre of Asia Minor, there are at least 150, each with his specialty. The beauty of Eastern colors depends largely upon the quality of the water used, the pureness of the water being an even more vital quality in the mixing of dyes than in the washing and scouring of the wool. The art of dyeing is a hereditary profession in the East, its secrets being handed down verbally and as almost sacred legacies from father to son; each family having some peculiar and secret method for producing different tints. The dye worker carries all his formulas in his head, nothing being written down. In a frame in an outer room are displayed the various tints he is master of, it being not unusual to be skilled in producing, at a moment's notice and with unfailing success, some hundreds of shades of red, for instance.

Mr. Mumford's chapter on "Design" is almost as fascinating. "Rugs are written pages," he tells us. "In their maze of design is a symbol language; * * * the variations of its forms in the different classes of fabrics may be looked upon as dialectic." One would like to follow in some detail this entire chapter on design, as well as that upon weaving. The latter is particularly valuable in that it describes minutely, in the various countries, the differences in warp, the weaver's tools and their uses, and the different knots in which the pile yarn is tied. The latter are usually the Ghiordes, or Turkish, knot, used through Asia Minor, the Caucasus, Kurdistan, and in some more eastern countries; while the second,

UNLEAVENED BREAD.

By ROBERT GRANT. 12mo, $1.50.

The dramatic version of Robert Grant's "Unleavened Bread" will have its first production to-night. The portrayal of the character of the ambitious wife successively of Messrs. Babcock, Littleton and Lyons will naturally arouse curiosity. If you have not read this striking novel, this is your opportunity.

William Dean Howells says, in the "Easy Chair" of Harper's Magazine, "Mr. Robert Grant, in his 'Unleavened Bread,' has made a success worthy of the signal quality of one of the truest studies of our civilization."

LONDON

The Spectator says:

"Viewed in the light of a study of character, it would be difficult to find a modern novel cleverer than Unleavened Bread. . . . . It is impossible within the narrow lines of a paragraph to give any idea of the extreme cleverness with which Selma's character is drawn. Readers, however, who are prepared to enjoy an interesting study of American life had better send at once for Unleavened Bread. The book is a great deal more than readable."

NEW YORK

The Bookman says:

"A very careful reading of it compels us at the outset to say that no American writer for many years has wrought out a work of fiction so full of meaning, so admirable in its literary quality, and so large and comprehensive as this book of Mr. Grant's. . . . Unleavened Bread has the rare merit of growing more and more absorbingly interesting as it nears the end."

CHICAGO

The Interior says:

"There are very few men in this country who could have written such a survey of a great class. It is the common resort of the reviewer to characterize any novel of social delineation and big scope and fair ability as Thackerayan, but it is no idle comment to say that only that adjective can fit Judge Grant's novel until it shall have created an adjective for itself and become in itself a standard of description for other novels of its kind."

"In depicting Selma Mr. Grant has produced a work of art so symmetrical and sincere that it deserves also to be called a work of science."—The Academy (London.)

Persian, or Sehna, knot, which can be tied either on the right or on the left hand systems, produces a closer, finer, more even, and velvety surface, but which has been abandoned in some parts of Persia for the Ghiordes knot, which is easier to tie.

After the knot is tied, the weaver cuts the yarn with a knife, and one of the greatest tests of skill is to cut so nearly to the proper length of the pile that very little material will be lost in trimming with scissors, which is done as soon as a row is competed; after which the threads of weft are thrown across from one side of the warp to the other, and back again. The next step is the beating down of both knots and woft with a comb or "batten," in Turkish countries of wood, in Persia of steel; only a skillful use of the comb producing evenness in a completed rug. This knotting, clipping, trimming, and inweaving of the weft threads is repeated to the end of the design, only the finishing of the sides and ends remaining to be accomplished, the method of which differs widely in various localities, and so helps greatly in the identification of types.

Mr. Mumford takes up one by one, in the chapters which follow, the principal types of Oriental rugs, classified, with many subdivisions, under the heads of Caucasian, Turkish, Persian, and Turkomans; while no tabular classification of Indian rugs is given, "nor is any attempt made to set forth the details of their construction in the textile tables, for the reason that as now woven they are not the original products, but are made in grades arranged merely upon a trade basis. The details, therefore, are much alike in all. The chapter on Indian carpets contains a sufficient indication of the nature and comparative merits of the staple output." The illustrations, it may be added, are mostly from fine specimens owned by private collectors, W. C. Whitney, J. W. Ellsworth, and M. Eardman among others.

Current Prices of Rare Books.*

In glancing over the latest volume of "American Book Prices Current" the most conspicuous feature appears to be that only the Daly sale prevented a general depreciation of auction prices of books during the year 1899-1900. Daly's name appears almost on every page of the volume, which contains records of 9,665 items. Opening it at random, we find, on Page 128, that a copy of the édition de luxe of "Trilby" brought at the Daly sale $6, while a month before, at Libbie's, in Boston, the same was disposed of for $3.50. And this example is characteristic of most items in the Daly collection, and indicates the immense amount of personal interest that surrounded the breaking up of the great private library.

The author of the valuable book before us has done his work in his usual thorough manner. His records are taken from the great sales of private libraries that took place during last year and those of Bangs & Co., John Anderson, Jr., of New York; C. F. Libbie & Co. of Boston, and Davis & Harvey's auction rooms, Philadelphia. The Daly sale, it will be recalled, was held at The American Art Galleries, in East Twenty-third Street, this city. Two valuable aids to locating an item are to be found in the chronological list of sales and in the index, where the books are classified by subjects.

Mr. Livingston's preface this year is of more than ordinary interest, for he places the value of the extra-illustrated book in an aspect which is beyond dispute. He says: "The prices brought by some of these masterpieces of extra-illustration seem stupendous to the uninitiated, but they were generally, probably in every case, much less than the original cost." Hence the oft heard inquiry: Does it pay to expand a book with valuable material? is emphatically answered. The great Bible sold at the Daly auction for $5,544, yet it is a fact well known to the friends of Mr. Daly that the collection therein represented cost more than twice as much, without computing the time and the worth of the special knowledge expended.

In the preface, too, we find brief descriptions of the private libraries disposed of in the period covered. In speaking of the Daly sale, the author lays particular stress upon the prices achieved by extra-illustrated volumes and first editions of English classics. The library, aside from the separate value of individual items, was a "mixed" one; at the same time "the collection of material relating to the English stage, particularly as exemplified in the lives of its great players, was remarkable." In speaking of the autographs collected by Mr. Daly, he says:

A wonderful series of original autograph letters and drawings by Thackeray, including the correspondence with Mrs. Brookfield, with many additions, was the highest priced item in the sale. The material had been tinted and made up into two folio volumes, handsomely bound by Stikeman. It brought $16,200. There were also remarkable collections of original letters by Dickens and Lamb and some autograph manuscripts of Sir Walter Scott.

Mr. Livingston also calls attention to the "increasing interest in those single-sheet publications known as 'broadsides,' especially those relating to American history." A careful examination of "American Book Prices Current," will show a marked increase of interest in Americana in general, many of the items in this department reaching record prices.

Rembrandt's "Mennonite Preacher."

American art lovers will remember the large amount of interest which the announcement, five years ago, that the Royal Gallery of Berlin had purchased one of the finest Rembrandts in existence created. Interest was all the more keen because the picture had until that time been very little known, even to Rembrandt specialists. It was in the Ashburnham collection, and the owner of that splendid gallery of old masters did not encourage visitors to view the treasures.

Ever since the painting passed into the possession of the Berlin gallery its reputation as one of the artist's masterpieces has continued to rise, until now it takes rank with "The Night Watch" and "The Anatomy Lesson." Experts have been able to determine the correct title of the work, which had been variously known as "Reinier Ansio and His Mother" and "Reinier Ansio and His Wife." The picture really represents the famous Mennonite preacher Cornelis Claesz Ansio in conversation with a woman of his flock, to whom he is evidently expounding Holy Writ. The identity of Ansio, which has escaped Emile Michel and others, has been clearly established by a pen drawing heightened by bistre in the possession of Baron Edmond de Rothschild at Paris, and also from a sketch in the British Museum. The latter is a study for the etching of Ansio, which is dated 1641, the same year as the portrait.

Strangely enough, this great work, the public exhibition of which has caused what can only be described as a furor among Rembrandt admirers in Europe, has not been available for purposes of study in this country, either through the medium of engraving or photography. However, soon after the painting was taken to Berlin Karl Koepping, the etcher of "The Syndics" and of Frans Hals's "The Archers of St. George," set to work upon a large plate, which has just been completed. Some of the prints have been imported by Carl Glückmann, the Rembrandt specialist, of 14 East Forty-fifth Street, and Mr. Glückmann declares that he considers the etching a masterpiece equally with the original. It is hard to please Mr. Glückmann with an etching after Rembrandt, and Waltner's reproduction of "The Night Watch" left him cold, but he has nothing but admiration for Koepping's latest work.

The etching is very successful in simulating the brush work of the original, and also its rich color, a Smyrna rug used as a table cover relieving the sombreness of the attire of Ansio and his parishioner. Of course, it is only a very few Rembrandt who will be able to possess one of the etchings, but the Berlin publishers have followed the new custom of striking off a few proofs and then destroying the plate. But it is to be hoped that other reproductions of the picture may soon be available, and at present even the little photogravure of the etching issued by the publishers in their circular is of value to the student.

"The True Value of Bartlett."

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

I have been much interested in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW article by Mr. Loomis on "The True Value of Bartlett," as I have a little book which has been constructed upon the theory he happily advocates. The title is "In Maiden Meditation," by "E. V. A.," and it was published in 1894 by A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago.

There is a reminiscent air about the whole thing, and it seems to be a good test of one's memory, for passage after passage is strangely familiar, and it is with distinct mental pleasure that one locates the "borrowed jewels," which are not distinguished by quotation marks.

The first quotation I recognize is from "The Pilgrimage," by Charles Dudley Warner. On the next page begins a long excerpt from "The Mill on the Floss," followed by three pages from "Adam Bede." Further along is half a page from "Reveries of a Bachelor," followed by liberal quotation from "The Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow," by Jerome K. Jerome. The last two pages of the first chapter are taken from "Prue and I," by George William Curtis.

In the second "Meditation" I find passages from "The Heavenly Twins," Ruskin, Blanche Willis Howard, and Ik Marvel, in addition to three pages from Emerson.

In the third I have found quotations from Ruskin, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Ik Marvel, and five pages from the favorite "Prue and I."

In the next is a page from "Adam Bede," and further tribute is levied upon Emerson and Ik Marvel.

In the fourth and last "Meditation" I have discovered two more pages from "The Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow," many a paragraph from Emerson, one from Mr. Warner's "A Little Journey in the World," another from Mr. Crawford's "Zoroaster," and a little one from "The Anglomaniacs," by Mrs. Burton Harrison.

I have no doubt that the book would yield still further evidences of liberal appropriation to those more widely read than I, but I must differ from Mr. Loomis as to the emotions thus aroused, for it is well calculated to make one feel the need of a drastic copyright law which should enforce strict honesty in letters.

AMERICAN AUTHORS.

Estimates by Barrett Wendell in His "Literary History of America."*

In this the new volume in the Library of Literary History Prof. Barrett Wendell has produced an exhaustive work on American. The volume is divided into six books, entitled "The Seventeenth Century," "The Eighteenth Century," "The Nineteenth Century," "Literature in the Middle States from 1788 to 1857," "The Renaissance of New England," and "The Rest of the Story." He dates the real beginnings of American letters from a time soon after Shakespeare's death. A review of the work, by Joel Benton, has already appeared in these columns. But the reader will probably be glad to have a few extracts dealing with prominent authors in the way of characterization and making estimates.

FRANKLIN.—The Boston where this boy staid away from church to teach himself to write was the very town where Increase and Cotton Mather are still preaching the dogmas of Puritan theocracy and a few days' journey westward Jonathan Edwards, only three years older than Franklin, was beginning his lifelong study of the relation of mankind to eternity. * * * Yet in this provincial town Franklin, a man of the plain people, exposed to no influences but those of his own day and country, was coolly preferring the study of earthly accomplishments to any question that concerned matters beyond human life. * * *

In Jonathan Edwards we found theoretical Puritanism divorced from life, proclaiming more uncompromisingly than ever, that human nature is damnable. In such temper we find, on a grand scale, something akin to the petty enthusiasm of our own day, which now and again proclaims that whoever takes a glass of wine shall sleep in a drunkard's grave, or that whoever smokes a cigarette shall smoke for it in hell. All the while we see about us godly smokers, the better for rational stimulant. And all the while, when Edwards was preaching his unflinching Calvinism, Franklin, by living as well and as sensibly as he could, was demonstrating that, at least in America, unaided human nature could develop into an earthly shape which looked quite as far from damnable as that of any Puritan parson.

IRVING.—When we were considering the work of Franklin we found in his letter to a London newspaper concerning the state of the American colonies a grave mixture of fact and nonsense, remarkably like the American humor of our later days. In Irving's "Knickerbocker History" one finds something very similar. The fun of the thing lies in frequent and often imperceptible lapses from sense to nonsense and back again. Something of the same kind, expressed in a far less gracious manner than Irving's, underlies Mark Twain's comic work and that of our latest journalistic humorist, Mr. Dooley. This deliberate confusion of sense and nonsense, in short, proves generally characteristic of American humor; and although the formal amenity of Irving's style often makes him seem rather an imitator of the eighteenth century English writers than a native American, one can feel that if the "Knickerbocker History" and Franklin's letter could be reduced to algebraic formulae, these formulae would pretty nearly coincide with one another and with that of the "Innocents Abroad."

No doubt a great deal of English work contemporary with Irving's is of deeper value. Our hasty glance at his literary career has perhaps shown what this first of our recognized men of letters—the first American who in his own lifetime established a lasting European reputation—really accomplished. His greatest merits, which nothing can abate, are pervasive artistic conscience, admirable and persistent sense of form, and constant devotion to his literary ideals. If we ask ourselves, however, what he used his admirable style to express, we find in the first place a quaintly extravagant sort of humor, growing more delicate with the years; next we find romantic sentiment set forth in the beautifully polished phrases of a past English generation whose native temper had been rather classical than romantic; then we find a deeply lasting delight in the splendors of an unfathomably romantic past; and finally we come to pleasantly vivid romantic biographies. One thing here is pretty clear; the man had no message. From beginning to end he was animated by no profound sense of the mystery of existence.

COOPER.—Great as was his success at home and in England, indeed, it is sometimes said to have been exceeded by that which he enjoyed throughout Continental Europe. For this there has been a reason that has been little remarked. The mere number and bulk of Cooper's works bear evidence to the fact that he must have written with careless haste. He had small literary training and little more tact in the matter of style than he displayed in his personal relations with people who did not enjoy his respect. Cooper's English, then, is often ponderous and generally clumsy. An odd result follows. His style is frequently such as could hardly be altered except for the better. A translator into whatever language can often say what Cooper said in a form more readable and agreeable than Cooper's own. Many of the minor passages in his writings seem more felicitous in French translations than in his own words.

Yet, after all, now that he has been half a century in his grave, little memory is left of his foibles or his troubles. The Cooper who persists and who will persist in popular memory is the author of those wholesome novels of sea and of forest which were the first American writings to win and to keep a truly wide popularity. In touching on them a little while ago, we remarked the extraordinary truthfulness of their background, and this, probably, is the trait which gives them their highest positive value. It is hardly to so unusual a quality, however, that they have owed their popular vitality. Their plots, though conventional, are put together with considerable skill. In spite of prolixity one constantly feels curious to know what is coming next. In spite even of lifeless characters, this skillful handling of plot makes one again and again feel unexpected interest concerning what these personages are going to do or what is going to happen to them.

BRYANT.—Always simple and always luminous, then, tenderly sentimental, melancholy and sweet, given to commonplace didactic moralizing and coolly careful metre and rhyme, Bryant, a far from prolific poet, had done, when he came to New York at the age of thirty-one, as good work as he was ever destined to do. In New York he lived for fifty-three years, and during those years most of what is now called American literature came into existence. His life, indeed, is really coeval with the letters of his country. As a matter of fact, the chief development of these letters centred in Boston. Had Bryant yielded to his first impulse, and gone not to New York but to the chief city of his native New England, the chances are that his eminence would have suffered. * * * Whatever one thought of his literary merit—and the great changes in literary fashion which occurred during his lifetime often made his younger contemporaries deem him less of a poet than calm reflection makes him seem now—there can be no question that his aspect was remarkably distinguished. * * * Partly, of course, this was a matter of mere personal appearance. * * * One does not remember his manner as in the least assertive. Rather to those who, without knowing him, saw him at a distance, his aspect was gentle, kindly, calmly venerable. But it had not the simplicity of unconsciousness. Whatever he really felt, he looked like a man who felt himself considerable; and certainly the qualities for which he most valued himself were not those which, as journalist and man of business, had made him a man of fortune. The thing for which he most respected himself was his work as a poet; and beyond question it was his work as a poet which the public most willingly recognized. * * *

In the nature of things he was never widely popular; and in the course of a century whose poetry has been chiefly marked by romantic passion, he has tended to seem more and more commonplace. But those of us who used to think him commonplace forgot his historical significance; we forgot that his work was really the first which proved to England what native American poetry might be. The Old World was looking for some wild manifestation of this new, hardly apprehended Western democracy. Instead, what it found in Bryant, the one contemporary of Irving and Cooper, whose writings have lasted, was fastidious overrefinement, tender sentimentality, and pervasive luminosity. Refinement, in short, and conscious refinement, groups Bryant and Irving with Cooper and with Brockden Brown.

POE.—Between Poe's work and Marlowe's there is another analogy, which has historically proved more characteristic of literature in America than in England. Marlowe's life, like Poe's, was ugly, sinful, and sordid; yet hardly a line of Marlowe's tragedies is corrupt. * * * In the case of Poe a similar contrast between life and work appears. * * * The very fact that Poe's work has been eagerly welcomed by Continental Europe is evidence enough, if one needed evidence, that his temper was such as the cant of the present day calls decadent. Now, the decadent literature which has prevailed in recent England, and far more that which has prevailed elsewhere in Europe, is prurientiy foul, obscenely alive with nameless figures and incidents, and with germlike suggestions of such decay as must permeate a civilization past its prime. In Poe's work, on the other hand, for all the decadent quality of his temper, there is a singular cleanness—something which, for all the thousand errors of his personal life, seems like the instinctive purity of a child. He is not only free from any taint of indecency; he seems remote from fleshliness of mental habit. * * * Intensely individual, then, and paradoxically sincere in all his histrionic malady of temper, Poe set forth a peculiar range of mysterious, though not significant, emotion.

EMERSON.—To say that Emerson's lifelong heroism won us what moral and intellectual freedom we now possess would be to confuse the man with the movement of which he is the great exemplar. As the years pass, however, we begin to understand that no other American writings record that movement half so vitally as his. As our individual freedom becomes more and more surely established, we may delight in Emerson more or less. According as our individuality responds or not to the idealism which touched him, we may find him repellent or sympathetic; and, although it may hardly be asserted, it may fairly be surmised that even in Emerson's most memorable utterances the future may find no considerable truth better phrased by others. For his effort to express truth, just as in his whole knowledge of life, he was limited by the National inexperience which throughout his time still protected New England. Yet, whether or no, in generations to come, Emerson shall prove to have made lasting contributions to human wisdom, one thing which will remain true of him should commend him to the regard of all his countrymen who love spiritual freedom. We may not care for the things he said, we may not find sympathetic the temper in which he uttered them, but we cannot deny that when, for 200 years, intellectual tyranny had kept the native American mind cramped within the limits of traditions, Emerson fearlessly stood as the chief representative of that movement which asserted the right of every individual to think, to feel, to speak, to act for himself, confident that, so far as each acts in sincerity, good shall ensue.

Whoever believes in individualism, then, must always respect in Emerson a living prophet, and just as surely those who find respect of salvation only in obedience to authority must lament the defection from their ranks of a spirit which, whatever its errors, even they must admit to have been brave, honest, serene, and essentially pure with all that purity which is the deepest grace of ancestral New England.

LOWELL.—The man was really at his best when he let himself be most fantastic, and this because of that whimsical instability of temper which he rarely managed quite to control. Beneath his wildest vagaries you will often feel a deep earnestness. But he lacked the power generally to sustain either mood quite long enough to express it with complete effect. The merit of his verses generally lies in admirable single phrases, single lines, or, at most, single stanzas. These flashing felicities never have quite the power which should fuse a whole poem into congruous unity. Like Lowell's personality, his most characteristic verse seems a bewildering collection of disjointed fragments, each admirable because of its sincere humanity. * * * For all the oddities of temper which kept him from popularity, the man was always true to his intensely human self. In his nature there were constant struggles between pure taste and perverse extravagance. As a man of letters, then, he was most himself when he permitted himself forms of expression in which these struggles needed no concealment. But through it all there persists just such wholesome purity of feeling and purpose as we love to think characteristic of New England. Throughout, despite whimsical extravagance of phrase, you may finally discern a nature at once manly and human.

HAWTHORNE.—Some critics, then, have lamented the accident which confined Hawthorne's experience for almost fifty years to isolated, aesthetically starved New England. In this opinion there is considerable justice. The extreme localism of Hawthorne's life, until his maturity was passing into age, may very likely have made world literature poorer. "The Marble Faun" is our only indication of what he might have done if his sensitive youth had been exposed to the unfathomably human influence of Europe. * * * * * *

He was not, like Emerson, a prophet, striving to glean truths from unexplored fields of eternity; he was not, like Whittier, a patient limner of simple nature, or a passionate advocate of moral reform; he was not, like Longfellow or Lowell, a loving student of world literature, moved by erudition to the expression of what meaning he had found in the records of a wonderful foreign past; he was not, like Holmes, a combatant, who, with all the vivacity of lifelong wit, and all the method of scientific training, rationally attacked the problems of his time; he was an artist, who lived for nearly fifty years only in his native country, daily stirred to attempts expressions of what our Yankee life meant. Of all our men of letters he was the most indigenous; of all, the least imitative. * * *

It is hard to sum up the impression which such a writer makes. He was ideal, of course, in temper; he was introspective, with all the self-searching instinct of his ancestry; he was solitary, he was permeated with a sense of the mysteries of life and sin; and by pondering of them he tended to exaggerate them more and more. In a dozen aspects, then, he seems typically Puritan. His artistic conscience, however, as alert as that of any pagan, impelled him constantly to realize in his work those forms of beauty which should most beautifully embody the ideals of his incessantly creative imagination. Thus he grew to be of our writers the least imitative, the most surely individual. The circumstances of his life combined with the sensitiveness of his nature to make his individuality indigenous.

WALT WHITMAN.—In temper, then, Walt Whitman seems less American than any other of our conspicuous writers. It does not follow that in some aspects he was very American indeed. Almost as certainly as Hawthorne, though very differently he had the true artistic temperament; life moved him to moods which could find relief only in expression. Such a temperament would have expressed itself anywhere; and Whitman would probably have found the most congenial material for expression in those European regions which have been most disturbed by French revolutionary excess.

Despite his eccentric insolence both of phrase and of temper, you feel that in a region where another eye would have seen only unspeakable vileness, he has found impulses which prove it, like every other region on earth, a fragment of the divine eternities. The glories and beauties of the universe are really perceptible everywhere; and into what seemed utterly sordid Whitman has breathed ennobling imaginative fervor. Cultured and academic folk are disposed to shrink from what they call base, to ignore it, to sneer at it; looking closer, Whitman tells us that even amid these base things you cannot wander so far as to lose sight of the heavens, with all their fountains of glorious emotion. * * * Whitman's style, then, is as little characteristic of America as his temper is of traditional American democracy. One can see why the decadent taste of modern Europe has welcomed him so much more ardently than he has ever been welcomed at home; in temper and in style he was an exotic member of that sterile brotherhood which eagerly greeted him abroad. In America his oddities were more eccentric than they would have been anywhere else.

MR. HEWLETT'S Great Novel

20th Thousand

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF

RICHARD YEA-AND-NAY

By MAURICE HEWLETT, author of "The Forest Lovers," "Little Novels of Italy," etc., etc. Cloth, 12mo, $1.50

THE NATION, in an extended review, points to it as a specimen of the author's power of characterization, quoting his description of Richard, and goes on: "THAT IS RICHARD IN ACTION, AND, PERHAPS, HERE LIES HIS FASCINATION. IN ANY CASE, MR. HEWLETT HAS TAKEN COEUR-DE-LION OUT OF THE PASSING SHOW OF ROMANCE, AND FIXED HIM AS A MAN SUFFERING AND CAUSING SUFFERING. HITHERTO HE MIGHT BE TAKEN FOR GRANTED, LIKE ARTHUR OR ROBIN HOOD; HENCEFORTH HE MUST BE RECKONED WITH LIKE TRISTAN OR TITO MELEMA."

FREDERICK HARRISON calls it "a great feat" in The Fortnightly, and in The Academy "the only first-class book of 1900."

"IT WILL HAVE ALREADY APPEARED THAT THIS BOOK SHOWS MUCH OF THE 'HIGH SERIOUSNESS' OF THE GREAT 'DRAMATIC' NOVELS. . . . THIS HAS NOT PREVENTED CERTAIN QUALITIES OF THE 'EPIC' NOVEL AS WELL. . . .

"THE ABBOT SILO, THROUGH WHOM MR. HEWLETT CHOOSES TO SEE RICHARD, IS A PRESENTATION SUCH AS FICTION HAD NOT YET SEEN OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL CULTURE OF THE TWELFTH CENTURY. IN HIM IS ALL ITS ELABORATELY GRACEFUL PEDANTRY, ITS SHREWD WORLDLY WISDOM, ITS CAPABILITIES OF ENTHUSIASM, WITH PRACTICAL DISREGARD OF THE DEEPER MORAL ISSUES."—THE NATION.

HAMILTON W. MABIE describes it as "a portrait of extraordinary human and artistic interest. . . . Executed with masterly skill."

"THE SOUND OF ARMS IN THIS BOOK HAS THE EPIC RING, AND IS IN NOWISE TO BE CONFOUNDED WITH THE MERE CLATTER OF PRESENT-DAY ROMANCE," elsewhere says The Nation, closing its almost enthusiastic review with the prediction that "MR. HEWLETT'S 'RICHARD YEA-AND-NAY' IS ONLY THE EARNEST OF THE GREAT ROMANCE THAT NO OTHER WRITER OF THE DAY IS SO LIKELY TO GIVE US."

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Enormous Development Within a Quarter of a Century—Herbert Putnam's Recent Article.

"A century of achievement" is the ruling phrase of the hour, and every enterprise is having its advancement during a hundred years set forth by picture and chronicle, until it is a question whether anything that has less than a hundred years to its credit can gain admission to the new century. Yet during the last quarter of the old century various movements originated which, by reason of the fullness of time and the enthusiasm of their promoters, have developed within a few years to the magnitude and attainments of those of a hundred years.

Prominent among these undertakings is what is known as the public library movement. Public libraries are so closely in touch with every phase of modern life; and already so great a necessity, that it is difficult to believe that they have existed by law only fifty years, in the public understanding only twenty-five years, and in popular usage only ten years. The current number of The International Monthly publishes an article by Mr. Herbert Putnam of the Congressional Library, in which he very ably sets forth the rapid progress in American library development, and discusses at length the reasons for this phenomenal growth—for libraries have come into being and attained maturity with the rapidity of the mushroom, yet with the stability and strength of the giant oak.

Mr. Putnam touches first on the establishment of libraries, showing that from the first their inception was democratic; originating as a proper auxiliary and complement to the public school, progressing with the advance of education, and becoming so generally useful that it was but a step for the community to adopt them as a means for recreation and self-improvement. An institution so eminently active and touching so many lives and interests appealed at once to men of wealth, who sought to pass on to others their own success or to perpetuate their name and memory among the people; and their gifts of $24,000,000 within the past ten years have made free public libraries a power in the land, which they never could have become had they been like that of Alexandria, a mere accumulation of books. The State has been quick to encourage libraries, recognizing in them a means to carry higher education and better morals to every locality. Seventeen States have even considered it worth while to establish library commissions whose province is to promote library interests, and by direct appeal to local effort, by offering State aid and sending traveling libraries, by all kinds of counsel, suggestion, and illustration, to arouse and interest every community to organize a library.

It is true that with the community, the individual, and the State enlisted in their behalf, there has been every reason for the wonderful growth of libraries; few public enterprises have ever been so eagerly received, so willingly supported, as this institution without social bounds, which seeks to reach out to all humanity. Mr. Putnam gives some statistics which are astonishing evidence of the place the library has so quickly made for itself.

The total number of libraries established between 1875 and 1896 was 3,546, as against 2,240 established between 1850 and 1875. In 1876 the number reporting 300 volumes or more each was 2,039; in 1896 they had become 4,029, and their contents had in the meantime nearly trebled. The total number of volumes reported in 1876, by 3,647 libraries having 300 or more each, was 12,276,964; the total number reported in 1896, by 7,191 libraries, was 34,596,258; 567 of them reported in 1896 realty owned to the value of $33,000,000, and 604 of them endowments exceeding $17,000,000, aggregates both of which must have enlarged considerably since that time.

In the past decade alone, he reminds us, there have been erected or begun five library buildings—Library of Congress, the public libraries of Boston, Chicago, New York, and Pittsburg—costing more than $1,000,000 each, whose aggregate cost will exceed $15,000,000. It will be noted that these libraries stand for National, popular or local, and individual expenditure, and that the great sums involved are conferring ireatimable benefit upon hundreds of thousands of people. The vast amounts that were invested on mediaeval institutions availed only the learned few, and because of this distinction brought about their own destruction. No greater proof of the advance of democracy and humanitarianism is needed than the ready support given by the people and the State to the public library.

The palaces for books in the large cities of our land are not the only ones to be considered, for, turning to the statistics again, we read that there are various other library buildings representing an expenditure of from $100,000 to $700,000 each, while buildings, very largely the result of private gift, costing from $5,000 to $100,000, are scattered throughout the land. These small libraries have a far-reaching influence, and are not the least vital part of the movement; for a stately building, with appropriate and pleasing surroundings and artistic decorations, often with some art treasure or historical collection, in a community that has few or no other attractions, stands for culture, education, recreation, perhaps for all that makes life worth living in a place where ideas and ideals were before quite wanting. It serves, besides, as a centre of inspiration for the entire region, and its fame brings visitors from many miles around to see for themselves what a library really is. Who can estimate the silent influence of the Richardson library buildings in those New England towns that are so fortunate as to possess them, as well as the buildings of later model scattered throughout the Middle and Western States?

Mr. Putnam dwells at greatest length on what has occasioned this remarkable development, touching upon every phase, yet with the master hand so succinctly that there is small opportunity to speak of it in review without quoting the whole. He emphasizes the prodigious activity of the library, which is extending its service by branch libraries and delivery stations, by the use of the press, by public lectures, and by various advertising methods that every man, woman, and child may know of his heritage, for it is not enough that the library has books, these books must be used, and the demand for them must come not only from those who already appreciate their value and seek them eagerly, but from those who must first have urged upon them their need of books and the delights of their use. To this end books in English are not enough, but books in all languages are needed. A circulation for home use reaching 40,000,000 books a year from the libraries as a whole shows that this democratic institution is truly reaching out to all sorts and conditions of men.

And the children have a large share in this popular institution, with special rooms and a librarian for their own in many libraries, special books, special attention, and always a friendly welcome. They are to be the readers of the future, and if trained to an understanding use of books in their youth, the future of the library, the future of the land in a higher culture and broader civilization, cannot be reckoned.

Improvements in methods of administration, increased facilities for the greater variety of service, better organization and equipment have been promptly forthcoming as the needs demanded, making this educational institution a model business house, some of whose devices have been eagerly copied in business circles.

A new type of librarian has arisen to administer the affairs of this wonderful new institution, one who knows art and literature, philosophy, and science not as a scholar, but as a teacher; one who has wisdom and skill in practical affairs, great public spirit, and a readiness to help and serve his fellow-men. An administrator, a man of letters, yet a man of the world, a friend, a patriot, is the professional librarian of to-day, ruling with equal zeal the small library and the great. Library assistants are now trained in special technical schools, which are tending to establish a standard of qualification for library service as definite as that in other professional careers.

It is not the attainment of the individual library that is the glory of the movement which has achieved a century's growth in less than a quarter of that century, but it is the esprit de corps, the co-operation of all the libraries, conferring in their various associations and through their professional journals, on every subject and method that will increase their usefulness and extend their domain throughout the land.

This placing the book in the reach of all, this popularization of learning, is undoubtedly not to the liking of the scholar, for whom alone the library of former times was designed, and with a naïve reference to the student, who sees his old-time haunts invaded by the hurrying, eager public, Mr. Putnam brings his comprehensive review to a close.

But there are compensations even for the student, who has yet the university, the National and State, and the few remaining proprietary libraries, besides the rare special collections in various of the despised popular libraries, for his particular use. He has the increased advantage of inter-library loans, the use of better catalogues and improved bibliographic service. And, above all, he is assured of greater public sympathy and appreciation, since the world, too, is becoming scholarly and is more ready to receive the work of the thinker.

The Authorship of "Dies Irae."

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Jan. 19 there are several ironical and acrimonious letters regarding my article on Major André. To these I shall give no reply. I tried to write fairly, and to give my impressions on this subject. So let it go. One of these letters, however, by Mr. Louis F. Benson, editor of the "Hymnal" of the Presbyterian Church, is so different from the others and so kind in its tone, that I ask a little space in which to reply.

Mr. Benson says, regarding the author of the "Dies Irae," that in ascribing that wonderful hymn to Bernard de Cluny, "Mr. Stone probably made a slip of the pen." Now, as Mr. Benson has so kindly written to correct my error, let me give an extract from the preface to the admirable translation of this hymn by Mr. Eduard Slosson. Mr. Slosson writes:

"The 'Dies Irae' at once took rank as the first of the hymns of the Middle Ages, and has ever since maintained its place. * * * Dr. Johnson could never repeat the seventh stanza without tears. Scott's spirited version of a portion of it is well known. The Requiem of Mozart was founded upon it. The greatest composers have set it to music; and every European language has contributed its scores of translators.

"The authorship has been attributed by some to Bernard de Cluny, and by others to Thomas di Celano, both Franciscan monks. It is, however, a question of little moment. There is enough of poetic grandeur in the depth and sublimity of the hymn itself to furnish fame for both."

In conclusion, I merely submit this to the readers of THE SATURDAY REVIEW, and to my carping critics that they may see that I was not alone in ascribing the hymn to Bernard de Cluny.

Do You Wish an American Novel?

THE DARLINGTONS

By ELMORE ELLIOTT PEAKE

YOU who are so anxiously awaiting the Great American Novel—a pointer! Some one once said that the G. A. N. would be the work of many hands. That is, instead of having a single novel, we would have to have a veritable cycle of romance, to comprehend the whole of America. Now all we claim for "The Darlingtons" is that its racy suggestion of the soil of a single section will surely constitute it a chapter in any Great American Novel of the whole and not of the part, like that of which we have spoken. Perhaps you never expected to live to see the appearance of the Great American Novel. Yet if you will read "The Darlingtons" you can at least make a beginning. Maybe we'll add another chapter one of these days.

ROBERT BRIDGES TWO TIMES.—The appearance in The January Scribner of a poem entitled "A Prayer of Old Age," by Robert Bridges, has caused several London literary paragraphers to reproduce some of the verses, and to give its author no mean praise for his graceful and sympathetic lines. This is all right. The poem is worthy of all the praise that it has thus received. Unfortunately, however, the London critics by scraps of internal evidence show that they are mistaken as to the identity of the author. The poem was not written, as they imagine, by Dr. Robert Bridges, the well-known English poet and essayist, but by Mr. Robert Bridges, assistant editor of Scribner's Magazine, a gentleman who is best known to a large American reading public by the pseudonym of "Droch," under which he contributed literary articles to Life during several years. "Droch" is also the author of "Overheard in Arcady" and "Suppressed Chapters," besides occasional verse. He received his master's degree at Princeton in 1882. The English Robert Bridges is nearly fifteen years his senior, and a Fellow of Oxford on the honorary list. He studied medicine at St. Bartholomew's, and after filling several posts in London hospitals, retired from active work in his profession in the very year that the American Robert Bridges was made M. A. at Princeton. The former is the author of various plays, poems, and essays, and is the manipulator of a cultured and erudite style. Possibly his best-known publications are his essays on Milton and Keats, "The Growth of Love," "Prometheus, the Firegiver," "Eros and Psyche," and a series of plays with ancient Greek and Latin background.

A LIFE OF BENEDICT AND MARGARET ARNOLD.—The Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, who is at present engaged in writing a life of the traitor Arnold and his second wife, has appealed to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW in the hope that some of our readers may be acquainted with unpublished material which may aid him in his work. We cheerfully comply with his request. His address is 6347 Woodbine Avenue, Philadelphia. He asks that "any persons who may have documents, letters, manuscripts, or other matter which has not been published, which they are willing to allow me to make use of, would kindly send their names to me? I am especially anxious for matter bearing on Arnold's pre and post Revolutionary life, and also upon the life and character of Margaret Shippen Arnold, his second wife." We have no doubt that the local historical societies of Norwich and New Haven could be of great assistance to Mr. Brady. In fact, at the former place, where Arnold was born in 1741, grew up to be an unruly youth, burned a barn, and became a druggist's clerk, the "oldest inhabitant" is always ready to relate stories of the traitor's boyhood, handed down through three or four generations. In New Haven Arnold sold drugs and books and acquired considerable property. There he married his first wife, a daughter of Samuel Mansfield. She died in 1775. Arnold's second wife was a daughter of Chief Justice Shippen of Philadelphia. J. N. Arnold's and Sparks's life of Arnold indicate that few difficulties will be encountered while tracing the career of Arnold in America. The London end, however, which has too often been made the subject for fiction and poetry, will be filled with obstacles for the biographer, particularly as the early historians strove to establish a moral by making the traitor's last days as dark and dismal as possible.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.—Major Pond recently received a letter from the author of "The Light of Asia," which goes far toward contradicting recent paragraphs in London literary journals saying that Sir Edwin Arnold has practically given up writing on account of ill-health, and that his signed column in The Daily Telegraph was merely inspired but not executed by him. The letter, which seems to be full of hope and a fine enthusiasm, if not absolutely reassuring, is as follows:

My Dear Old Friend: My long silence has been due to a long illness. Three years and a half ago a mysterious affection seized me, hindering my walking, causing me much pain at intervals, with other inconveniences. After two or three months the specialists called in declared it to be "ataxia," and since then I have fought the battle of life with a broken sword. Latterly the troublesome malady has fastened on my eyes. At present my right eye is useless, and my left has very imperfect vision. I cannot read or write myself, and my doctor, in hope of arresting the mischief and preserving or amending what sight remains, is injecting into me daily strychnia. I have not, however, given up work, and finished the year with some really triumphant literary labors.

THE ELSTON PRESS "PHILOBIBLON."—The second publication of the Elston Press, now nearly ready for delivery, is to be the "Philobiblon" of Richard de Bury; the text of which is that of the translation made in 1832 by John Bellingham Inglis, from the original edition printed at Cologne in 1473, the copy for which is thought to have been De Bury's original manuscript, finished by him in 1345. The printing of this edition is to be done entirely on a hand press, from a new font of Chaucer type, cut on pica body, and specially cast for this book; all the typographical details of the volume being an embodiment of Mr. Clark Conwell's ideas as to fitness and relationship between text and mechanical details. The blocks for the numerous initial letters, as well as the individual line-endings, have been cut on wood by hand directly from drawings made by H. M. O'Kane. The paper used is of the same quality and texture as that used in "The Sonnets From the Portuguese," having been made in Holland, entirely by hand, the edition in Holland paper being limited to 485 copies, numbered in manuscript, and stoutly bound in specially prepared boards, with vellum back. This edition is published at $5 net, while a few tall copies, on Japan vellum, bound in full English vellum, gold lettered, with silk ties, are to be had at $15 per volume. The specimen pages of this "treatise upon the love of books," given in Mr. Conwell's prospectus, show a most attractive page; with beautifully cut type set solid, the book as a whole being one to delight the collector and booklover. Subscriptions and remittances may be sent to Mr. Clark Conwell, 139 Fifth Avenue, New York City, the subscriptions being entered and numbered as received.

SOME MODERN AMERICAN BOOKPLATES.—The January number of The Optimist contains a bright article on bookplates, a rapid survey of the subject, which its author, Jay Chambers, calls "a thumbnail history." The most attractive feature of the article, however, will be found to lie in its illustrations, process reproductions of about a dozen modern plates by some of the younger artists. Hayden Jones is represented by two charming plates, one for Randolph Lewis, showing a seated figure in Colonial dress, poring over the pages of an open book—all the accessories being of that period; while one for Angus Shaw is even more interesting—a Colonial interior with an old man standing by a table examining a pile of books, which the boy in the foreground, three-cornered hat under arm, has evidently just brought. The plate for Mary Elizabeth Weir, by E. J. Barrows, shows a charming stretch of road fading away into the distance, while one or two trees in the foreground aid in making a charming composition. Best of all, however, is one by Jay Chambers, which shows a wide stretch of landscape, as carefully finished, down to its smallest detail, as might be a miniature. In the foreground, behind a curiously clipped hedge, is a man in Colonial costume, three-cornered hat, powdered hair, queue and all, walking along intent upon a folio volume, while in the middle distance is a quaint old house, with gabled roof and leaded panes, trees and fields showing in the distance—all being remarkably attractive specimens of modern work.

THE PORTRAITS OF T. E. BROWN.—Readers to whom T. E. Brown's poetry was either little known or practically unknown before the recent appearance of his delightful "Letters," will be surprised at the amount of work, between 700 and 800 pages, contained in the "Collected Edition" recently published by Macmillan & Co., which was prepared on behalf of Mr. Brown's daughters by his old friends, Mr. F. H. Brown, Mr. H. G. Dakyns, and Mr. W. E. Henley, to the first two of whom, and especially to Mr. Dakyns, so many of the letters are addressed. The "Collected Poems" contains a delightfully made portrait of the poet, in cap and gown, taken nearly full face, which shows a most attractive personality, in which humor is at once discoverable. But Mr. Sidney T. Irwin of Clifton College, Clifton, Bristol, Brown's friend and the editor of the "Letters," to which he contributed a good biographical introduction, says that he does not like any of Mr. Brown's portraits, which was probably the reason none was added to the "Letters." A portrait made in 1886, a side-face view, which exists only in a poor reproduction, is the least unsatisfactory of any, while the one in the "Collected Poems" is a fine reproduction of a likeness he thinks far from good. His chief criticism is that Mr. Brown's pictures are all too common for the man. A glance at the known portraits of Brown reveals the apparent truth of this criticism. They show an attractive face, it is true, but rather that of the country squire than that of the writer of charming poems, which their author felt some day would win their way, as well as of some of the most delightful letters of the age.

MRS. WARD'S HERO AS BUNTHORNE.—Miss Hulbert, writing of "Eleanor" in the January Book Buyer, says of the hero: "Had Mrs. Ward given the faintest suggestion that her point of view regarding Manisty was humorous, scornful, or even that of righteous indignation, he would undoubtedly stand forth as one of the finest specimens of character delineation in recent fiction. But as a hero he is not convincing. One thing at least, however, can be said on his behalf. He was not, in Matthew Arnold's sense of the term, a Philistine, and this, doubtless, is why Mrs. Ward likes him. But he will seem to many to be one of the most objectionable Bunthornes ever hatched."

BOOKS OF THE VICTORIAN ERA.—For some reason or other English literature took a wonderful bound forward with the beginning of the reign of England's late Queen. According to the old "London Catalogue" there were less than 600 new books published annually in London during the first twenty-seven years of the last century. The English Catalogue, however, issued by Sampson Low & Co., tells a different story. Here we find that there has been a yearly average of about 5,000 new books during Victoria's reign. The English Catalogue contains the entries of more than 300,000 volumes published in English during the last sixty-five years. To every one interested in the serious study of English literature and history, Sampson Low & Co.'s Catalogue, which may be ordered through Charles Scribner's Sons, is almost invaluable. The British Museum Catalogue is, of course, the greatest help of all, and the most wonderful performance of its kind in the world. But there are 900 volumes of it, and the sets of it in circulation are few and highly priced not, by any means, too highly for their worth, but for the pockets of book-buyers, even if there are persons who would care to buy a catalogue in 900 huge folio volumes in which 40,000 new entries must be made every year. It will be recalled that the compilation of a Subject Index is to be the next great undertaking at the library of the British Museum. If it be taken in hand shortly, the public of the year 1915, or thereabouts, will see its completion.

"ALICE OF OLD VINCENNES," AND ITS AUTHOR.—When the manuscript of Maurice Thompson's new novel first came to the publishers there was much uncertainty as to whether the title should be "Alice Roussilon" or "Alice of Old Vincennes." The determining factor was the belief that Vincennes is more easily pronounced than Roussilon. But now, to the publisher's surprise, there comes from Boston, where everybody seems to be reading the story, many inquiries how to pronounce the name of the old Indiana town. Mr. Thompson, who was recently reported to be quite ill, was born in Indiana, near Brookville, Sept. 9, 1844, and was taken to Kentucky and thence to North Georgia when a child. He was educated by private tutors on his father's plantation with a view to becoming a civil engineer. He went to Indiana in 1868, a little later took charge of the construction of a railroad, married and settled at Crawfordsville, where he soon opened a law office, and, in partnership with his brother, Will H. Thompson, who is now attorney of the Great Northern Railway at Seattle, pursued the practice successfully for some years. His first literary success was his novel, "A Tallahassee Girl," published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1881, which is still popular. Since then his books and contributions to leading magazines have been very numerous and widely successful. He is considered to be an authority in natural science, Greek poetry, and old French. From 1885 to 1889 he was State Geologist of Indiana. In 1890 he accepted a call to the staff of The New York Independent as one of its literary editors, with a roving commission to do his work wherever he chose. Since then he has devoted his time wholly and successfully to literature, residing at his beautiful old home, Sherwood Place, in Crawfordsville, during the Summer, and on the Gulf Coast of the South in Winter.

"QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER."—Apparently the custom, so conspicuous in New York, of decorating a shop window with interesting relics of a popular book has been transmitted to Boston, for we hear that the window of the Old Corner Bookstore, at School and Washington Streets, has thus been made attractive to readers of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," by Charles Felton Pidgin. The artist's water-color sketches of some of the principal characters and incidents of the book are shown there and are attracting much attention. One sketch shows Silas Putnam mounted on the ridgepole of his barn, in his night clothes, on a cold night, blowing his trumpet for Gabriel's call in anticipation of the end of the world. Another shows Quincy and Alice Pettengill singing a love song. There is Obadiah Strout, the village singing master, in his extraordinary rig when he led the chorus in singing his "immortal" composition, "Hark and Hear the Eagle Scream." The best of the collection is that showing Zekiel Pettengill and Huldy Mason sitting before the fireplace in loving embrace, with their backs to the observer, with the faces of the old folks looking in the door reflected in the mirror over the mantelpiece. There is also a pretty country picture of Hiram Maxwell and Mandy Skinner drawing water at the old-fashioned well. The C. M. Clark Publishing Company finds from the reports of some of the leading booksellers that though their first publication, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," has been out only since Nov. 5, in some stores their novel was first and in some second in the list of best-selling books in December. The great popularity of the book is shown by the fact that, after disposing of the first edition of 5,000 and the second edition of 10,000, the publishers are now selling the third edition, the extraordinary demand for which necessitated an issue of 50,000 copies.

Librarian Bostwick in New York.

The Trustees of the Brooklyn Public Library received on Monday a communication from the Librarian, Arthur E. Bostwick, announcing his resignation. He had accepted the position of Superintendent of Circulation in the New York Public Library. Mr. Bostwick said:

The authorities of the New York Public Library wish me expressly to state that it is their desire not to hamper the work of the Brooklyn Public Library in any way, and I shall be glad, after Feb. 1, to devote to the Brooklyn work such part of my time—say, one-half—as may be necessary to carry it forward without delay until my successor shall be appointed.

Mr. Bostwick's place is a new one. It was recently created as a result of the consolidation of the New York Free Circulating Library with the New York Public Library. The salary will be $4,000, the same that he received in Brooklyn. Mr. Bostwick, before going to Brooklyn, had been for several years the Librarian of the Free Circulating Library. He was succeeded by J. Norris Wing, who died several weeks ago, to the deep regret of his wide circle of friends. Mr. Bostwick is quoted as having said on Monday:

My work in Brooklyn has not been just what I expected; the conditions have been far from what I anticipated, and at no time during the two years I have been here have I been able to do my best. This offer came to me last Saturday, and I accepted it almost immediately.

Mrs. Gilbert's Stage Reminiscences

In introducing these interesting memoirs, the editor, Mrs. Charlotte M. Martin, says: "Those who have been so fortunate as to know Mrs. Gilbert well must have been placed often in the position so familiar to the editor of these pages, of listening to a delightful flow of reminiscence, anecdote and 'good talk.' To repeated requests that she write her autobiography, Mrs Gilbert finally answered, 'I have never done it for anybody, but I will do it for you,' and these delightful reminiscences of fifty years of the American stage are the result. The articles are profusely illustrated from rare photographs.

Russia of To-Day

"Mr. Henry Norman is revealing Russia as few writers have done," says the Chicago Advance. The fourth of his notable Russian articles describes the romantic region of Turkestan, going through such strange cities as Merv, Bokhara and Samarkand. Mr. Norman's account of the picturesque people and their unusual industries furnishes one of his most interesting chapters. The illustrations are mostly from his own photographs.

The Amateur Cracksman

Raffle reappears in a new and ingenious enterprise, this time invading the halls of the British Museum itself. "Shrewd as Sherlock Holmes," the inexhaustible Raffles has been pronounced by many of the readers of his earlier adventures, and his new enterprises, as described by Mr. E. W. Hornung in Scribner's, offer fresh cause for surprise. The stories are fully illustrated by F. C. Yohn.

Mrs. Edith Wharton

has a new story entitled "The Angel at the Grave." It is a fresh revelation of the author's skill, a brilliantly told story which no reader of her former works can afford to miss.

Mr. Arthur Colton

in "The Place of the Abandoned Gods" tells a genuine Golden Age story, a charming romance written from the standpoint of the young, the chief actors being a group of boys in a Connecticut town.

Punishment and Revenge in China

Thomas F. Millard, the war correspondent, sends from China a remarkable summary of the international conditions prevailing there at present, and a very shrewd analysis of the part played by the various armies and the representatives of their governments.

Modern Athens

The description of Modern Athens is completed by George Horton, recently United States Consul there, who gives an intimate account of housekeeping in Athens, with details of the life of the streets and cafés. It is fully illustrated with paintings by Corwin Knapp Linson.

The Sense of Nonsense

Under this title Carolyn Wells gathers together with interesting comment many of the classics of nonsense literature, including examples of the poetry of Lewis Carroll, Edward Lear, W. S. Gilbert.

E. C. Peixotto

exhibits his skill as an artist in pen and ink in a continuation of his series of picturesque sketches made from old French architecture—this time in the towns of Carcassonne and Albi. He also writes the text.

NEW BOOKS OF VERSE.*

Poets in partnership, even from the time of Beaumont and Fletcher, have not been numerous, since the close sympathy of two imaginative minds, intimate enough for jointly creative work, must always be a somewhat rare event to look for either in prose or in verse. If the poet then, like the sacerdotal Delphic oracle, is usually a solitary medium on which the interior inspiration beats with its celestial breathlogs—the message which emanates having been imbibed in secrecy and mystery—it must be a powerful spiritual kinship that brings two poets to blend their inspiration and utterance in a single seamless fabric. Occasionally, however, we must take account of this union.

In the "Last Songs from Vagabondia," by Bliss Carman and Richard Hovey, we have their third attempt to bring us in yoke fellowship, from some unknown fairy land, a bundle of poetic fancies—in this instance made somewhat pathetic by the recent lamented extinguishment of one of these musical voices. Each of these writers has held the technique of his art high, with a notable intolerance of unmelodious singing, and an aspiration for graceful, unhackneyed forms, that contribute in their combination to flawless and pleasing expression. Yet there is this to be noted with respect to the Vagabondia lyrics—that their individuality in the three volumes seems one. You can separate, to some extent, Beaumont and Fletcher, and even the personal authorship in the Tennysonian "Poems of Two Brothers," but whose is each poem here, or whether the lines and stanzas are of intermingled creation, or whether one sometimes plotted and the other poetized, neither the text nor an introduction tells us.

It would be called prophetic indeed if Mr. Hovey happens to be the author of the following lines—having a spiritual touch which recalls a few lines by Whitman—entitled

"AT LAST, O DEATH": A FRAGMENT.

At last O Death!
Not with the sick-room fever and weary heart
And slow subsidence of diminished breath—
But strong and free
With the great tumult of the living sea.
Behold, I have loved.
And though I wept for the long sundering,
I did not fear thee, Death, nor then nor now.
I girded up my loins and sought my kind,
And did a man's work in a world of men,
And looked upon my work and called it good.
Now come, then, in the shape I love the best.
In the salt, sturdy wrestling of the sea,
I give thee welcome.

Without blamable borrowing from Whitman's manner—for they are more musically lyricized—a few of the lines in the poem entitled "Day and Night," some of which are given below, repeat the Whitman mold:

Night of the clasped hands of comrades!
Night of the kiss
Of lovers trembling at love's mysteries!
Night of desire!
Night of the gaslight-necklaced city! Night of revel and laughter and delight!
Night of the starlight Sea!
Night of the waves shot with strange witch-fire!
Night of sleep!
Night of dream!
Night of the lonely soul under the stars!
• • • • • • •
Night!
The masked, mysterious Night!
The infinite unriddled beautiful Witch!
The Sibyl of the universal Doom!

There are very many delicate fancies in this volume that seem to appeal for quotation, but the bit of nature presented below—having a flavor like Emily Dickinson—must suffice:

MARIGOLDS.

The marigolds are nodding;
I wonder what they know.
Go, listen very gently;
You may persuade them so.

Go, be their little brother,
As humble as the grass.
And lean upon the hill-wind.
And watch the shadows pass.

Put off the pride of knowledge,
Put by the fear of pain;
You may be counted worthy
To live with them again.

Be Darwin in your patience,
Be Chaucer in your love;
They may relent and tell you
What they are thinking of.

Where "Vagabondia" is, and whether it may not be found in the maps that mark the geography of Bohemia and Arcadia, and give a peep into Philistia also, may be safely left to the reader of these poems to guess.

In "The Masque of Judgment," a masque-drama, Mr. William Vaughn Moody selects a theme made of the stern elements which inspired Dante's "Divine Comedy" and Milton's "Paradise Lost." Mr. Moody has lately gained considerable notice for two or three exceptionally virile lyrics, which show no ordinary power of imagination and are marked by an execution every way worthy of his fine fancies. While these pieces are quite above the average plane of magazine verse in merit, the present dramatic effort is distinctly ambitious on the lines that distinguish some of the later work of Swinburne and the newly acclaimed poetry of Stephen Phillips.

The action in this drama begins immediately before the incarnation, and ends with the judgment. The chief characters, entering with the versed prelude to the five acts, which for the most part are divided into various earthly scenes, are the archangels—notably Raphael, Uriel, and Michael. In conversation with them and with each other are shepherds, youths, and maidens, various angels, and women and men. While the great drama, based on human sinfulness, is going on, Raphael seems touched with tenderest pity, almost becomes truant to his office and calling, and is chided therefor by the sterner guardians of paradise, especially by Uriel. Raphael says:

Another night like this would change my blood
To human: the soft tumult of the sea
Under the moon, the panting of the atara,
The notes of querulous love from pool and clod,
In earth and air the dreamy under-hum
Of hived hearts awarming—such another night
Would quite unsphere me from my angelhood!
• • • • • •
With song I shelter me, who else were left
Defenseless amid God's infinitudes,
Bruised by the unshod trample of his hours.

Again he says:

My heart makes question which were worthier state
For a free soul to choose—angelic calm,
Angelic vision, ebbless, increscent,
Or earth-life with its reachings and recoils,
Its lewd harsh blood so swift to change and flower
At the least touch of love, its shell of sense
So subtly made to minister them delight,
So frail, so piteously contrived for pain.

Here Uriel speaks:

Brother, thou dost not well to wander here.
If thou wilt roam, choose some less troubled star.
The roaring midst of the insatiate sun
Where God has set my watch, is peace to this!
Of all the bitter drops that dewed His brow
In His old agony, this earth-drop fell
Most bitter salt, and ever since hath been Fuller of travailing than other worlds.

But Raphael finds his speech confusing and dark, and lingers for pity, uttering, among other things, this description of man:

O Dreamer! O Desirer! Goer down
Unto untraveled seas in untried ships!
O crusher of the unimagined grape
On unconceived lips!
O player upon a lordly instrument
No man or god hath had in mind to invent;
O cunning how to shape
Effulgent Heaven and scoop out bitter Hell
From the little shine and saltness of a tear;
Sieger and harrier,
Beyond the moon, of thine own builded town,
Each morning won each eve impregnable,
Each noon evanished sheer!

The crucifixion at length happens, and the tragedy of earth goes relentlessly on until Michael, by violence, grasping Raphael, bears him from the Valley of Judgment to heights near Heaven. The inscrutable purpose of the Infinite with reference to this earth and man is fulfilled:

The moon smolders; and naked from their seats
The stars arise with lifted hands, and wait.

Mr. W. J. Lampton, who has had a various experience in journalism, and who avoids for the most part serious topics and artistic expression, has collected in a volume of fair size his newspaper verse, of more or less perpendicular prose, built up in short layers, and crooked at times, in the similitude of a Virginia rail fence. In both his preface and poem he disarms criticism by pretending not to be a poet, but merely "a Yawpist" and devoted to "Yawpery." Of his work he says:

No POET, I,
Who sings about a sapphire sky,
Or silver sanded streams,
Or dim delicious dreams,
Or birds,
Or lowing herds,
Or flowers fair
Upon the fragrant air,
Or hearts that throb,
Or souls that sob,
Or forty dozen other things
Of which the poetry poet sings
Out of his soulful sufferings.

Mr. Lampton's topics are, therefore, mostly selected from daily news events, and the lines improvised in ragged fashion for the next morning's use, or, they are some apothesis of "pie," or an "owed to the ground hog" on Candlemas Day, or almost anything that can furnish food for chaffing and levity. The critical reader of these pieces cannot well apply a standard to their author that he has deliberately chosen to disrespect, and must simply say that he has accomplished his rollicking purpose with much happy characterization, marked by a decidedly frolicsome spirit. Some of these poems are written in normal form, but those fashioned otherwise are not—as he probably supposes—an accomplification of a new type. Both Shakespeare and Emerson have written short, irregular, rhymeless lines, though not for a hilarious or humorous purpose.

There is a pleasing, gentle quality in the simple verse-making of Charles Elmer Jenney that atones for any lack of deep-furrowed thought, or lofty expression. You feel about it as the squirrel felt of himself in his colloquy with the Mountain, as reported in Emerson's tender lyric thereof, and admit at once that there is room for the unpretentious, no less than for the large, and therefore for this light, low treatment of familiar and ever-endearing themes which Mr. Jenney has put forth. His first three titles—"The Orchard," "The Meadow," and "The Deep Tangled Wildwood"—show, without necessity of specific description, just what it is that this author's muse is concerned about, and they are topics that force their way into every mature and retrospective mind.

Mr. Jenney writes chiefly of old-fashioned things:

The way they used to do when we were young,
The tales our fathers told, the well-sweep high
From which the moss-grown oaken bucket hung,
The blazing back-log's hospitality,
The spinning wheel, the songs our mother sung,
The worn blue China plates—and you and I.

The following brief description of a May spectacle is all that we have space to quote further from this book, which is pictorially adorned with typical subjects, in the best process style:

APPLE BLOSSOMS.

At Mid-May noon the old trees bask and doze,
Soothed by the toiling bees' low droning hum,
And visions of long-vanished Winter snows
To their pleased dreaming fancy softly come,
Yet half awake, stirred by a passing breeze,
That melts their fluttering snowflakes, one by one,
They stretch and sigh, and then as dreamlands flees,
Blush at the ardent wooing of the sun.

VICTORIAN LITERATURE.

When we speak of the Victorian age of literature we probably do not always measure the significance of our words. It is not discernible that the good Queen who has just passed away had any direct influence on the literary product of her reign. Indeed, she has been quoted as speaking in terms of admiration of Marie Corelli, a fact which might indicate that she was not of the purest taste in letters. But there can be no doubt that the simplicity of her character, the loftiness of her nature, and the aspirations of her reign have had an indirect and yet potent influence upon the literary output of her time. At any rate she is one of three female sovereigns of England whose names have been applied to distinct eras in the literature of their country.

The Elizabethan era was one of dramatic poetry, and its one great name in letters is that of Shakespeare. The names of Ben Jonson, Beaumont and Fletcher, and the rest are of minor import. It is to the everlasting credit of Elizabeth that she was interested in Shakespeare and was acquainted with his works. But it did not occur to her to ennoble any author on account of his writings, for the social status of the writer in her day was low. With the familiar literary term, "The wits of the reign of Queen Anne," we are all acquainted. But they have dwindled into comparative insignificance. Pope and Swift and Addison are the names which at once rise in mind when this particular group of writers is mentioned. But it is unlikely that many besides students of the history of English literature read their works in these days. In this respect the Elizabethan era has the advantage. It has given us at least one living name.

What will be the future of the numerous distinguished writers of the Victorian era no one can now predict. But the reign of Victoria was notable for the royal official recognition of men of letters. The ennoblement of such men as Macaulay and Tennyson was as creditable to the monarch as it was gratifying to the guild of writers. And in the character of their work the writers of the Victorian age showed a natural advance over their predecessors. While the era produced no such poet as Shakespeare, it did bring forth a host of literary workers whose ambition was to penetrate to the heart of the spirit of their age and embody its philosophy and its ideals in their works. If the three ages were to be judged by their literature alone, the Victorian era would certainly be distinguished for purity of thought, for chastity of feeling, and for largeness of ideals.

THE COSMOPOLITAN NOTE.

The other evening the Society of Colonial Wars of this city met to celebrate the one hundred and eighty-seventh anniversary of the founding of Manhattan. Its usually cheerful President, Mr. de Peyster, in the course of some remarks on the comparatively small space that the city is given in the great volume of American history, gently scolded our first distinguished writer, Washington Irving, for having held up to the smiling gaze of posterity the Knickerbockers, of whom Mr. de Peyster and all who really know them are and ought to be proud. To this Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie, who has the advantage or disadvantage of not being by birth or descent a New Yorker, but one of the multitude that have come from outside to build up and extend the mighty town, took exception. He declared that Irving's merry play with the memory of the Knickerbockers was but a proof of the "cosmopolitan note" which has always characterized New York, and has never been reached by any other city. And he hinted that it was quite as serious a failing not to be proud of this note as it was not to be familiar with and proud of the early history of New York.

Undoubtedly Mr. Mabie is right. It is the cosmopolitanism of New York that is at once its distinction and the cause of its relatively modest place in the annals of the country. It is not quite true that the city has done more and talked less than its neighbors on the Eastern coast, though there is some truth in that. It is not what it has done, though unquestionably important, has not been as interesting to its own people as in the case of other cities. There has never been in New York, and could not be, with its varied population, the same unity and sympathy of action, sentiment, and prejudice that existed elsewhere. Then its rapid growth has relieved its citizens of the need and prevented them from feeling the desire to promote that growth, or to secure for their town the reputation of superiority which every one acknowledged. What the people of other cities did for those cities was largely a means to an end which New York, by the fortune of its situation and its trade, reached without special effort.

Doubtless New York has suffered in some regards from this fact. It is not so beautiful, or so healthful, or so civilized as it would have been had there been stronger motives for its people to exert themselves. It lacks some things which smaller cities have derived from the local pride of their citizens. But so far as the intellectual and literary life is affected by the "cosmopolitan note," we think that the effect has been almost wholly good. The essential condition of cosmopolitanism is freedom. In a community where it prevails, a man may do pretty much what he wishes and has the talent to do. He is not hampered by local prejudice. He is not tempted by local petting. The only obstacle he has to fear is indifference, and from the dawn of time it has been the task set for talent by the Fates to overcome indifference. It is never easy, but it is wholesome. And it is this task, with all its difficulties, delights, and rewards, that has drawn the most active and the strongest minds to the great cities. The benefits of cosmopolitan freedom to this big town of ours have, on the whole, been far greater than the disadvantages to which we have referred. We do not say that it is a matter for pride, for mere local pride, no matter how big the place in which it is nourished, is not the highest motive for the action of citizens. But it is something to be recognized, not without reasonable satisfaction and gratitude.

AUTHOR AND ILLUSTRATOR.

In discussing the modern magazine and its audience with a well-known illustrator recently, he remarked that "the writer owed a large debt to his illustrator." It is indeed the "picture magazines" that attain the large circulations. Those that deal with literature alone have to be content with a comparatively small sale. In spite of pictures, however, there is no reason to depreciate the literary quality of our illustrated leading periodicals. Their general average is pretty high.

No one will deny the very great attractive power of illustrations, and now, with every mechanical facility for reproduction, we are getting the work of many able artists. Pictures were before writing, and it was by the addition of the illuminations and woodcuts to the early printed books that they were made to appeal to a wider audience. It was with books as with the old moralities and miracle plays. They were made objective, the one by drawings, the other by action.

The history of illustration has yet to be written, but we may easily trace its influence here in America within recent years by a reference to the growth of our periodicals. Beginning with Harper's Magazine in 1850, there has been a steady progress in illustrative art. In 1870 Scribner's Monthly followed, and it has continued to carry on the best traditions as The Century. The new Scribner's Magazine began in 1887, just about the time that the halftone and the line plate were asserting their full value and the wood engraver beginning his swan song.

There is a most interesting field of study in the pages of these and other magazines. American illustrative art in any broad sense had its beginning in them, and they have, more than anything else, contributed to its widespread appreciation and popularity.

Paintings are for the few. A man may win distinction and money by his actual pictures, but if he cares for fame in its widest sense and a larger market for his work, there is no better introduction than through the pages of a magazine. The illustrator was, not many years ago, almost without recognition as an artist among his fellow-practitioners, who either would not or could not draw for reproduction.

The artist illustrator has his audience now, quite as much as the author, and his drawings that appear in the periodicals have for them and him a large commercial value. Men like Frost, Abbey, Reinhart, Smedley, Kemble, Clarke, Remington, Castaigne, Gibson, Christy, Yohn, and a host of others have given lasting fame to many characters in story. They have indeed made them known in the flesh, as it were. Not every reader can see in his mind's eye a favorite character; the artist brings him out of obscurity and stands him up for our inspection. Then, too, he dramatizes scenes and gives us action; makes them more real than the author can hope for by words alone.

How much we should miss if Du Maurier had not drawn Trilby or Frost shown us the tenants of "Rudder Grange"! Abbey has made Herrick's and Shakespeare's England bloom again, and Vierge has given us a host of unforgetable people and types.

The art of the world is brought to us in the magazines, and the names of the men who create it are household words. With the advent of the ten-cent magazines the value of "pictures" as such was made evident in a surprising way. They deal in literature, it is true, but the "reading matter" is more or less a minor consideration and their illustrations of about everything and everybody under the sun would seem to give them first claim upon their audience.

MORRIS'S BOOKS AND RICH COLLECTORS.

Commenting upon the artistic printing which is being done by the London Guild of Handicraft, who have acquired the presses of the late William Morris, and hope to "continue the traditions" of good printing established by the Kelmscott Press, a recent short newspaper article continues in the too familiar strain so often heard, that William Morris and his followers put forth books which are inaccessible to all but a few wealthy collectors. The other side of this question has been set forth more than once, and yet as the caviling at Morris and his successors still remains unabated, it is perhaps permissible once more to take up the side of those who issue fine hand-made books in small editions.

As far as the Kelmscottt Press issues are concerned, one of the finest and most attractive of its smaller books, "Gothic Architecture," could be had in London for two shillings and sixpence for some little time after its issue, while a copy was secured from one of the best of the New York bookshops two years after its publication at the price at which it was first held here—a dollar and a half per copy. That, of course, is an extreme instance, but it would be possible to particularize issue after issue from that press which could have been secured in the leading New York shops at from three to four or six dollars per copy. For instance, "Child Christopher," in two volumes, was offered at the latter sum for quite a long time after its publication.

Indeed, at one time the New York shops were so full of Kelmscott books at low prices as to be almost overstocked, and those who either entirely lack specimens of William Morris's beautiful work or lament the fact that their Kelmscott treasures are few should be quite willing to allow it was not their prohibitive price, but lack of appreciation of their fine craftsmanship and good judgment which lost them the chance of securing such books at about their issue price, which, except in the case of large folio editions, was always extremely low for the beauty of the volumes and the actual expense attendant upon their issue. And in fact it was not until after the death of William Morris and the subsequent suspension of the press that the world in general began to realize the importance of his work and the great artistic beauty of the Kelmscott issues. We might also add that it was not until these books began to fetch high prices at auction that a full realization of their beauty and value dawned upon the world at large.

The Vale Press books attracted comparatively little notice for a considerable period after the press was estsblished, and the rapidity with which the small editions of books published by Messrs. Hacon & Ricketts are now exhausted is partly due to the fact that collectors and book lovers have become better educated in the appreciation of fine work, and partly because the purchase of these books has been recognized as being a good investment by dealers and others.

Mr. William Loring Andrews's books, to come nearer home, are perfect specimens of fine bookmaking, which are often offered at the time of their publication at remarkably low prices, and especially when we consider the beauty of the volumes and the expense attendant upon their preparation. One such volume, "A Stray Leaf from the Correspondence of Washington Irving and Charles Dickens," which sells at from $35 to $40 at auction, was on sale at the time of its issue—on Japan paper, with beautiful illustrations, be it remembered—at $5 per copy, while one of "Angler's Pages," which came out last year was to be had at $4 per copy.

The beautiful privately printed issues of the Marion Press, deserve to every way, being equally notable for the interest of their text, their fine typography, paper, and binding, as well as for the perfection of their presswork, were in many instances issued as low as $1 or $2 per copy, as, for instance, "The Courting of Dinah Shadd: A Contribution to a Bibliography of Rudyard Kipling," originally issued at $1 per copy, although now selling at a considerable premium, and the equally beautiful "Two Poems of Sea Fights with Spain," on Holland hand-made paper, which was originally sold at $2 per copy, although the issue in both cases was restricted to 120 copies. So that the assertion made in the article above alluded to, "It is time for the édition de luxe to come down into the market place as a no less beautiful, but much cheaper institution," and the equally ill-founded suggestion that it would be well to "treble the edition and halve the price," seems sufficiently well met.

It must also be remembered that the books of ordinary commercial issue, "the specimens of the highest class of bookmaking at a reasonable price and in fairly large editions," for which the aforesaid writer is crying, the article being fairly representative of the popular view of this matter, are being constantly issued in increasing numbers by the best of our city's publishers. On how much good commercial work do we now see the imprint of the De Vinne, the Gillis, the Merrymount, and the Marion Press, in the cheap, unlimited editions for which appeal is made, and yet which will be found thoroughly artistic from beginning to end! Nothing could be finer than the folio edition of the Knickerbocker "History of New York," lately issued in this city, which, although published at a comparatively low price, may be said to fairly represent the best work of the Merrymount Press, while perhaps the most extreme instance of artistic workmanship in ordinary issues will be found in the fact that the catalogue made for the sale of the collection of American first editions, formed by Mr. William Harris Arnold, which may be had free upon application to the auctioneers, is in the fine typography of the Marion Press.

Quite outside of the beauty and desirability of the fine limited editions of books from the Kelmscott Press and its successors, is the educative value and influence exerted by William Morris and the Kelmscott Press upon printers, publishers, collectors, and book lovers in equal measure.

It is hard, indeed, at this late day, when we see around us in all directions the result of such influence—Morris's example being sometimes blindly and not too wisely followed, it is true, and yet his influence always leading us in a forward direction—to realize the conditions existing when the idea of the establishment of a private press first suggested itself to him. The plan, it will be remembered, presented itself largely to William Morris because, try as he might, he could find no printers capable of carrying into successful operation his ideas as to the printing and other mechanical details involved in the preparation and publication of his own books.

Had William Morris been content to give us well-made commercial issues in the trebled editions and lowered prices before alluded to, the world would have lost, not only the beautiful issues of the Kelmscott Press, (which, by the way, could hardly have been a money-making investment,) but also the influence exerted by these beautiful models, upon all the world of bookmakers and bookbuyers for all time.

IS THE LITERARY TEMPERAMENT TOMMYISH?

It has been proclaimed from a literary housetop of good standing and whispered in confidence in the more secluded alleys of Inkdom that Barrie's Tommy is a study of the literary temperament.

Remembering the long line of mighty dead, who, living, were literary, but never Tommyish; remembering also the noble band of living authors who are literary, but never Tommyish, shall not some loyal, grateful reader gently but firmly throttle this random charge in its irresponsible infancy ere it waxes to a base and slanderous maturity?

In attempting such virtuous violence, it will first be necessary to determine the precise nature of Tommyishness and the essential qualities of the literary temperament; for it is to be demonstrated that they are no more identical than the blossoms of the thistle and the rose. As it is written in the book of Barrie, the distinguishing marks of Tommyishness are an abnormally developed imagination—whose excess is balanced by a defect of common sense—and a hopeless sponginess of fibre and feeling. In other words, Tommy had too small a boat for the spread of his sail, or too many blossoms in proportion to his foliage and stalk.

On the other hand, the distinguishing characteristics of the literary temperament—as it has been exemplified in the lives of the majority of authors, living and dead—are imagination and common sense in such proportions that the world is given assurance of a man—or woman—along with the parallel assurance of genius. Without going abroad, this statement may be verified from the biographies of American authors, living and dead. Was there anything Tommyish about Franklin, Irving, Cooper, Emerson, Whitman, Lowell, Hawthorne, Holmes, Whittier, Bryant, Longfellow, Thoreau, Bancroft, Parkman, Prescott, Bayard Taylor, George William Curtis, Charles Dudley Warner, Eugene Field, or Sidney Lanier? Is there anything Tommyish about Howells, James, Crawford, Cable, Eggleston, Mark Twain, Bret Harte,

Stockton, James Lane Allen, Joel Chandler Harris, Thomas Nelson Page, Aldrich, Stedman, James Whitcomb Riley, John Burroughs, John Fiske, E. E. Hale, Lyman Abbott, Henry Van Dyke, Edwin Markham—not to mention a host of younger writers—men and women—now in the field, who are equally free from any taint of Tommyishness?

From what other class of men, professional, business, or idle, can one select a random list of forty men among whom imagination is more uniformly ballasted by solid worth and character? Can any of us so juggle our fancies that we can imagine Emerson, Whittier, Bryant, (or any other man here mentioned,) capering after some vacuous Lady Pippinworth or dislocating his ankle for histrionic effect, or inadvertently proposing marriage to fill a pause in a conversation?

In the identification of Tommyishness and the literary temperament injustice is done not only to the reputation of an honored calling—and to those who honor it—but also to one of the highest faculties with which man is endowed—the imagination itself, the parent of discovery, invention, science, and art. Nor do the good offices of the imagination end in the higher callings to which it lends its aid. Wherever it is found sympathy, and every gentle deed which sympathy prompts, would be almost impossible without the imaginative power which enables a man to put himself in another's place. The most heroic feats of Tommy's life were performed at the suggestion of an imagination whose excessive exercise made him foolish and false. Not less dependent upon the imagination for its existence is tact, that sage and gracious quality which foresees and forefeels the words that will give pleasure or pain. Nay, more, are not those goodly Biblical graces, faith, hope, and charity, the very goddaughters of an imagination bred in the heart and head?

The Tommy-literary fallacy under consideration, like many other conclusions, rests upon a very well-known form of argument, which runs like this:

Tommy is an author;
Tommy is inordinately imaginative and sentimental;
Authors are generally Tommies.

With the same simple logic we may draw a conclusion concerning bankers:

Silas Greene is a banker;
Silas Greene has red hair and wears a blue tie;
Bankers are generally Silas Greenes.

The late lamented query, "Is marriage a failure?" was deduced by a similar process of reasoning. Exceptional cases that were made conspicuous in divorce courts were used as data for drawing conclusions which ignored the thousands and thousands of unobtrusively happy couples whose experiments had been successful. In like manner, the public is periodically warned that the Skiddaddle College students are notoriously depraved young gentlemen, because, forsooth, a few unruly members of Skiddaddle have won a bad eminence which casts a damaging shadow upon all the rest. Nor can the public be convinced of the incorrectness of such a statement by the most careful statistics, which show that the percentage of really depraved young men in the institution mentioned is far less than among an equal number of non-collegiate men of the same age in the miscellaneous walks and callings of life.

Of course, it is much easier to draw an inference from one or two exceptional cases than from a careful and exhaustive examination of a majority of cases. To this easy style of logic nearly all superstitions owe their origin. The tippler who sees the new moon over his left shoulder makes the fact responsible for his undignified repose in the gutter, although the same berth may have served him under every other phase of the moon. Like his logic, too, was the reasoning of a beggar who once confided to the writer that she had never had any luck since the overthrow of the Greenback Party. But the post-hoc argument is—and always will be—as dear to some people as an automatic interest computer. If ten or eleven different qualities in combination make a man a fool, why take account of them all, says the post-hoc reasoner, when one or two may as well take the responsibility and share the odium with some class conspicuous for those two qualities?

In Tommy's case a good many qualities and a lack of other qualities worked together for the making of a fool. That these disaster-working qualities are the peculiar property of the literary man is a groundless assumption, which history disproves. Pity him as we must, Tommy by any other name than author would still have been a fool, for he had a weak chin, which is a most unliterary mark, and "the accursed thing which is in all of us" (according to Barrie himself) in Tommy was so strong that it finally wrought his ruin.

Tommy, then, is not a study of the literary temperament, but a study of an abnormal type, by no means confined to any color, calling, or condition. There are butchers, bakers, candlestick makers, farmers, clerks, artists, musicians, scientists, inventors, doctors, lawyers—aye, and high-browed clergymen, who are also Tommies. But the Tommy who happens to be a literary man—like the city that is set upon a hill—cannot be hid, wherein he is more to be pitied than his brother Tommy, concealed by the kindlier folds of obscurity.

HORACE SMITH'S POEM ON THE DEATH OF GEORGE III.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

The sad event that has just stamped the British Nation in sorrow and awakened the deepest sympathy in the hearts of our own people—the death of Queen Victoria—has brought back to my recollection a few verses, written by an unknown hand, on the death of King George III., which came under my eye more than sixty-five years ago in one of the souvenirs of that day, long since destroyed. There may be some mistakes due to lapse of memory, but I think they are few.

George III., as all your readers know, was the paternal grandfather of Victoria, who was the daughter of the Duke of Kent. The reign of George III. was, next to that of Victoria, the longest in the annals of England, but during its last twenty years the country was governed by a Regent. The monarch's mind was a blank, yet his people loved him, and I think the verses fairly represent the beating of the public pulse of that day.

G. H. HANSELL.

New York, Jan. 25, 1901.

I.

I saw him last on this terrace proud,
Walking in health and gladness,
Begirt with his Court, and in all the crowd,
Not a single look of sadness.

II.

I've stood with the crowd beside his bier,
When not a word was spoken,
But every eye was dim with a tear,
And the silence by sobs was broken.

III.

From the time that he walked in his glory thus,
To the grave 'till I saw him carried,
Was an age of the mightiest change to us,
But to him, a night unvaried.

IV.

A daughter beloved, a Queen, a son,
And a son's sole child had perished,
And sad was each heart save his alone
By whom they were fondly cherished.

V.

By the force of our arms from his lofty throne
The foe of our land we've tumbled;
And glad was each heart save his alone,
For whom that foe we humbled.

VI.

His silver beard o'er a bosom spread,
Unvexed by life's commotion,
Like a yearly length'ning snowdrift shed
On the calm of a frozen ocean.

VII.

His mind benumbed and dark,
He sat in his age's lateness,
Like a vision throned, a solemn mark
Of the frailty of human greatness.

When the above letter and poem reached this office, we already had put into type for use in this number the complete poem reprinted from a collection by the brothers Horace and James Smith, authors of "The Rejected Addresses." Mr. Hansell's copy, however, furnishes such a remarkable example of tenacity of memory—a matter of sixty-five years in this instance—that we have thought readers would be interested in seeing Mr. Hansell's letter and the poem as he remembers it, followed by the correct text of the poem as written by the author, Horace Smith. Accordingly we print it below in full:

THE CONTRAST.

Written under Windsor Terrace the day after the funeral of George III.

I saw him last on this terrace proud,
Walking in health and gladness,
Begirt with his Court; and in all the crowd
Not a single look of sadness.

Bright was the sun, and the leaves were green,
Blithely the birds were singing,
The cymbal replied to the tambourine,
And the bells were merrily ringing.

I have stood with the crowd beside his bier,
When not a word was spoken;
But every eye was dim with a tear,
And the silence by sobs was broken.

I have heard the earth on his coffin pour
To the muffled drum's deep rolling,
While the minute gun with its solemn roar,
Drowned the death-bell's tolling.

The time since he walked in his glory thus,
To the grave till I saw him carried,
Was an age of the mightiest change to us,
But to him a night unvaried.

We have fought the fight—from his lofty throne
The foe of our land we have tumbled;
And it gladdened each eye, save his alone,
For whom the foe was humbled.

A daughter beloved—a Queen—a son—
And a son's sole child have perished;
And sad was each heart, save the only one
By which they were fondest cherished.

For his eyes were sealed, and his mind was dark,
And he sat in his age's lateness,
Like a vision throned, as a solemn mark
Of the frailty of human greatness.

His silver beard o'er his bosom spread,
Unvexed by life's commotion,
Like a yearly lengthening snowdrift shed
On the calm of a frozen ocean.

O'er him oblivion's waters boomed,
As the stream of time kept flowing;
And we only heard of our King when doomed
To know that his strength was going.

At intervals thus the waves disgorge,
By weakness rent asunder,
A part of the wreck of the Royal George,
For the people's pity and wonder.

HORACE SMITH.

ETCHINGS BY THE QUEEN'S OWN HAND.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Now that so many millions of people throughout the civilised world are bearing affectionate testimony to the memory of Queen Victoria, the following little story may be of interest to your readers as showing an unexpected broad-mindedness on the part of a monarch who had been accustomed to flattery all her life.

Two years ago I got possession of a collection of thirty-four etchings done by the Queen's own hand. I made an exhibition of this collection in my gallery, but knowing that, while interesting, they were in no respect great works of art, I said as much in the short introduction which I wrote for the catalogue of the exhibition.

When in London, a few weeks later, I met the official keeper of the Queen's pictures, Sir Charles Robinson. After greeting me, he asked if the report could possibly be true that I had held a public exhibition in New York of her Majesty's etchings. He explained that very few proofs had ever been given away, and that these had only been given to distinguished persons, who would never dream of parting with them. "Where had I found them? From whom had I bought them?" My answer was: "Sir Charles, I will tell you all I can. The Queen's etchings were bought here in England, and I came by them honestly. That is all I will tell you." He then asked me to send him a copy of the catalogue, which I promised to do. In leaving me he added, "I shall lay the catalogue before her Majesty." I detained him to say that I was very glad he had mentioned this, because the introduction which I had written was not meant for the eyes of royalty, and that it would never do to have the Queen see such a thing. Sir Charles said that he would use his own discretion in the matter, and so we parted, I assuring him that he would never show it to her Majesty. Here is what I had printed:

The name of Queen Victoria is about as certain to remain a great name in history as that of any individual of the nineteenth century, but it is not through her work as an original etcher that she will be immortalized. And yet these etchings of hers come distinctly nearer to being works of art than do those of some more pretentious amateurs. They are not very far from being as good as the etchings of Thackeray—although that great man of letters was at one time in treaty with Charles Dickens to illustrate the works of the latter with etchings such as those of "Vanity Fair."

These etchings by Queen Victoria and her husband are intimate souvenirs of her happy young wifehood and motherhood. The dates run from 1836 to 1846. The Queen took lessons from Sir Edwin Landseer, whose father, John Landseer, was a good etcher. These etchings were, of course, never published; she sometimes gave proofs of them to her near friends, and these are the only ones in existence—so that at least this exhibition shows prints of extreme rarity. While many of the plates are both designed and etched by the Queen, others are done by her from drawings by her husband. Prince Albert is represented by etchings after his wife's drawings as well as by some which were designed by himself.

On this occasion we cannot invite the public to view a collection of masterpieces, but if Martha Washington had etched some plates we would all have been curious to see them. We know that the latter lady had some taste, because a letter of hers expresses strong disapproval of the practice of some of the "Whiggs," who had the reprehensible habit of leaning their heads back against the immaculate walls of her parlors.

A circumstance may illustrate the kind feeling of Americans toward her Majesty, Queen Victoria: It is our custom to speak of the Emperor of Russia, or the Queen of Holland, or the King of Italy—but when it comes to the mention of Victoria, we simply call her "the Queen."

Shortly afterward I was astonished to receive the following letter from Sir Fleetwood Edwards, one of Queen Victoria's private secretaries:

Dear Sir: I am commanded by the Queen to thank you for a copy of the catalogue of the exhibition, made in New York, of her etchings. Her Majesty has perused this catalogue with much interest.

CRITICS WHO WENT WRONG.

A history of literary criticism would contain many striking examples of critics famous in their days who, in writing of books afterward to become celebrated, went wrong. In the Jan. 12 issue of Literature, the periodical published by The London Times, are reprinted several notices that appeared in British reviews sixty, seventy, and even eighty years ago, which afford interesting illustrations of this fact. We copy them below:

WORDSWORTH.

[From a Review of "The Excursion" by Jeffreys, in The Edinburgh Review for November, 1814.]

Did Mr. Wordsworth really imagine that his favorite doctrines were likely to gain anything in point of effect or authority by being put into the mouth of a person accustomed to higgle about tape or brass sleeve buttons? Or is it not plain that, independent of the ridicule and disgust which such a personification must give to many of his readers, its adoption exposes his work throughout to the charge of revolting incongruity and utter disregard of probability or nature? For, after he has thus wilfully debased his moral teacher by a low occupation, is there one word that he puts into his mouth, or one sentiment of which he makes him the organ, that has the most remote reference to that occupation? Is there anything in his learned, abstracted, and logical harangues that savors of the calling that is ascribed to him? * * * A man who went about selling flannel and pocket handkerchiefs in this lofty diction would soon frighten away all his customers, and would infallibly pass either for a madman or for some learned and affected gentleman who in a frolic had taken up a character which he was peculiarly ill-qualified for supporting.

KEATS.

[From a Review of "Endymion" by John Wilson Croker, in The Quarterly Review for April, 1818.]

This author is a copyist of Mr. Hunt, but he is more unintelligible, almost as rugged, twice as diffuse, and ten times more tiresome and absurd than his prototype, who, though he impudently presumed to seat himself in the chair of criticism, and to measure his own poetry by his own standard, yet generally had a meaning. But Mr. Keats had advanced no dogmas which he was bound to support by examples; his nonsense therefore is quite gratuitous; he writes it for its own sake, and, being bitten by Mr. Leigh Hunt's insane criticism, more than rivals the insanity of his poetry.

TENNYSON.

[From a Review of "Poems Chiefly Lyrical," by Christopher North in Blackwood's Magazine, 1833.]

One of the saddest misfortunes that can befall a young poet is to be the Pet of a Coterie; and the very saddest of all, if in Cockneydom. Such has been the unlucky lot of Alfred Tennyson. He has been elevated to the throne of Little Britain, and sonnets were showered over his coronation from the most remote regions of the empire, even from Hampstead Hill. Eulogists more fulsome than the archdeacon of the pettiest Shagbreast have been found to rise into panegyrical piles in commemoration of [illegible]

THE WORLD'S WORK

for February is the best number yet published. It is for sale on all newsstands everywhere. 25 cents a number and 3.00 a year, and well worth it. This letter from a far-west subscriber has just come:

Last Camp Ranch, Napa, Cal.,
January 15, 1901.

To the Editor and Publishers of "The World's Work":

Dear Sirs:

I congratulate you on your splendid achievement—the conception and creation of a magazine for the workers of America—the workers of the world. With the writer who has already addressed you, "I thank heaven that one magazine has been bold enough—ORIGINAL enough—to emancipate itself from 'literature,'" FROM TRASH. The shelves of my closets are piled high with magazines, half of whose pages are uncut. At last I have a magazine which I can read from cover to cover, and find food instead of foam; a magazine which seeks partnership with those who WORK—and not with those who DREAM in hammocks and verandah chairs.

I know your FIELD, the widest and best on earth. My friends OCCUPY it. You are on the right track. Don't let any one turn you from your course. I hope and believe the workers of America will support you generously.

Very truly yours,
D. J. BROWN.

P. S.—For gracious sake don't let any one dictate to you or change your plans.

We are glad to be able to inform Mr. Brown that The World's Work is doing well.

THE ANTIQUE FURNITURE BOOK.

The second part of "The Furniture of Our Fore-Fathers" is ready. It is more beautiful and more interesting even than the first part, coming down as it does to the time of the fine mahogany pieces used and loved by our American ancestors.

We will send a beautiful plate from the book if the following slip is inclosed. But don't send it unless you are interested in the subject:

DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & CO.,
34 Union Square East, New York.

Please send me particulars concerning your book on antique furniture.

Wordsworth Rehearsing for the Queen's Ball.

From the Memoirs of Georgiana, Lady Chatterton.

I called * * * at Rogers's house to ask permission for some friends, who are coming to town for the day, to see his house and pictures to-morrow afternoon. He was at home, and sent word that he particularly wished to see me. I got out of the carriage and was shown into the drawing-room, where, to my great surprise, I found him, and dear old Wordsworth in Court dresses, with swords and cocked hats, dancing the minuet de la cour. Wordsworth said he was rehearsing his bows for the Queen's ball, and getting a lesson from Rogers about it. Wordsworth's dress did very well, except his thick, gray worsted stockings, which we all exclaimed against. He declared that he could not wear any other kind, as it pretended that to put a thinner pair on was very bad for him. They stayed the difficulty, he consented, and we had the gratification of seeing the dear old poet in

ELEANOR

BY MRS. HUMPHRY WARD.

The real test of a book published during the fall is not its sale before Christmas, when all books are at their best, but its success or lack of success during the dull weeks that succeed the holiday rush. ELEANOR has stood this test admirably.

Its sales during the past two weeks have ranged between 500 and 1000 copies a day, and this although it has been but little advertised during that time, because as we said recently we believe the book to be its own best advertisement.

The Roycroft Edition of Emerson.

R. A. DIX, New York, writes to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW: "A year or so ago, Hubbard of Roycroft fame issued an edition of Emerson's essay on 'Friendship' bound with his usual care. A copy was sent to a friend in Massachusetts who recently wrote as follows: 'Some friends came over one evening with their Emerson, and we read "Friendship" together, I using your Roycroft. You would be surprised to know how different the texts are. In my copy there were words, phrases, and even whole sentences added, so that we were filled with wonderment. Sometimes the addition sounded more like Hubbard than like Emerson, and yet it does not seem that a man would dare "improve" upon a man so nearly contemporary as Emerson. There can be no more approved edition than that of Houghton & Mifflin. Can you explain it?' Did Hubbard actually add to or 'substract' from Emerson, and no one before notice the same? If so, it leads to a long train of reflection. How, in the future are we to tell where Emerson or Plato or Herbert Spencer leaves off and Hubbard begins? This is worth looking into further."

Orthoepical Sins of the Pulpit.

"ERA," Sharon Springs, N. Y., referring to Mr. J. D. Champlin's remarks in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Dec. 29, writes: "Poor dear old pulpit! It surely must be worth something—as also its occupant—else it and they could not survive the 'flings' so many indulge in at the expense of both. It is generally deemed undignified and unworthy to notice these flings, and this silence may perhaps be thought by the critics justification 'by default.' Would Mr. Champlin kindly look up the 'classical derivation' of the one 'proper name—Jacob—of the Scripture,' and let your readers know if he does not think that to pronounce it as he claims the eminent and respected Bishop advocates would be promptly condemned as 'intolerable impertinence' in the extreme?

Methinks your correspondent has all unintentionally put a very opposite interpretation upon Bishop Potter's criticism by failing to quote the context. Perhaps, therefore, he would favor us with chapter and verse for the strictures he quotes from, or, better still, give us a more generous excerpt."

"C. E. H.," Brooklyn, writes to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW: "I want, through the columns of THE SATURDAY REVIEW, to thank Mr. Champlin for his communication 'Orthoepical Sins in the Pulpit,' in your issue of Dec. 29. I hope it will bear fruit. I wonder if Mr. Champlin's eye will catch this phrase, 'run south along the sea incarnadined by the blood of the drowned Pharaoh,' and, if so, what he will think about it. It is in Mr. Warner's review of 'Arabia, the Cradle of Islam.' Is not Mr. Warner letting his fancy run very loosely? I wish some authority would give us, in your columns, an article on the curiosities of words. For instance, I would like to know about these three words, 'broth,' 'brother,' 'brothel'—so similar, and yet so very dissimilar. The dictionaries tell me nothing."

The Rev. Samuel Dunlop and the Cherry Valley Massacre.

HENRY U. SWINNERTON, Cherry Valley, N. Y.: "The Presbyterian Church at this place contemplates the erection of a memorial to its first pastor, the Rev. Samuel Dunlop, one of the few survivors of the massacre of 1778. After that event Mr. Dunlop, whose wife had been murdered by the invaders, went to New York City, and is understood to have died in or near that city or in Newark. But the exact places of his death and burial are unknown. Can any reader of THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW give me this information?"

Mr. Dunlop had been one of the founders of the Cherry Valley settlement in 1740, and was the pastor of its church until the massacre. He owed his escape and that of his daughter to Little Aaron, the chief of the Oghwaga branch of the Mohawks. Campbell describes the incident as follows: "Little Aaron led him out from the house tottering with age, and stood beside him to protect him. An Indian passing by pulled his hat from his head and ran away with it; the Chief pursued him and regained it. On his return another Indian had carried away Mr. Dunlop's wig; the rain was falling upon his bare head, while his whole system shook like an aspen under the continued influences of age, fear, and cold. He died about a year after; his death was hastened by his misfortunes."

Washington's Newburg Headquarters.

ARTHUR GUITERMAN of New York writes to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW: "A review of 'Rambles in Colonial Byways' in THE SATURDAY REVIEW of Jan. 12 retells from that book the story of the graceful act of François Marbois in reproducing in Paris the dining room of Washington's headquarters on the Hudson as a pleasant surprise for Gen. Lafayette and other French and American veterans of our Revolution.

"I am afraid that the author has erred in stating that the chamber thus reproduced was one in the old house at Newburg, for Washington did not establish himself there until March 31, 1781, and although the old Hasbrouck House undoubtedly contains the famous room of 'the seven doors and one window,' Lafayette returned to France in December, 1781, two months after the surrender of Cornwallis, and therefore hardly could have dined there with his beloved General. I am loath to abandon a fine tradition, and it may be that the mess room of the commander's headquarters, in the Ellison House, at New Windsor, two miles southwest of Newburg, where Lafayette is known to have spent part of the Winter of 1780-81, was imitated by the French Minister.

"Marbois (his title, by the way, was not Count Marbois, but Marquis de Barbé) was Secretary of the French Legation in America during the Revolution, and in 1803 increased his claim to our regard by concluding the treaty by which the Louisiana territory was ceded to the United States. His unique banquet was probably a tha last at which Lafayette appeared, as the old General died soon afterward. Among the American guests were Edward Livingston, former Mayor of New York, United States Senator from Louisiana, and at the time (1834) Minister Plenipotentiary to France, and Col. Nicholas Fish, who was with Lafayette in the storming of a redoubt at Yorktown."

Gen. Shields and Stonewall Jackson.

F. W. PAGE of the University of Virginia writes to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW: "In THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Dec. 15 the following sentence occurs in a notice of the life of Major Gen. James Shields by the Hon. W. H. Condon: 'The author gives much space and care to the narration of the battle of Winchester during the civil war, in which the Mexican veteran was pitted against Stonewall Jackson, and succeeded in wringing a victory from that redoubtable warrior.'

Manchester, May 26, 1862.

General S. Cooper: During the last three days God has blessed our arms with brilliant success. On Friday the Federals at Front Royal were routed, and one section of artillery, in addition to many prisoners, captured. On Saturday Banks's main column while retreating from Strasburg to Winchester was pierced, the rear part retreating toward Strasburg. On Sunday the other part was routed at this place. * * *

T. J. JACKSON,
Major General Commanding.

"I have looked in vain through the operations in the Shenandoah Valley, as reported in Volume XII., and do not find that Gen. Shields claimed a victory over Gen. Jackson at any time."

A Few Schoolboys' Ideas.

CLASSICUS, Brooklyn, writes to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW: "It may not be uninteresting to your patrons to read the inclosed schoolboy 'howlers' which I have recently run across and for the authenticity of which I can vouch:

"'While Caesar was leaning against a pole he was attacked; he put his hands above his head and then he fell dead. They all say Brutus stabbed him.'

"'The enemies of Pericles charged him with cheating the government out of money and so they tried to oxidize him.'

"'The Greek drama developed from a number of people who used to dress and sing to entertain their gods.'

"'The last heard of Alcibiades was his death.'

"'Athens treated her allies with imperialism.'

"'Greek religion was very queer, and they believed that the people would lead a better life when in their graves.'

"'The Greeks never believed in idols, but they did believe in gods, and they always thought it was a very great shame if a man died.'

"'When the Greeks thought of death they would grow cold and would do anything than to die.'

"'Each family had a different god, and thought that the body was still alive and the soul took a walk.'"

In Northern Georgia.*

Ethnologically, the cracker of Northern Georgia springs from the same stock as the mountaineer of Tennessee, only the Georgian is very much less crude. The reason is because the Georgian has not been isolated. The Georgian living in the upper tiers of counties may be rough in manner, entirely ignorant of the amenities of life, but nevertheless he has many sterling qualities. Certainly since 1880, the period when the episodes in the story under notice take place, education has very much improved in Northern Georgia.

The fiction has to do with the redemption of a small settlement in and around Walesca. It may have been that the author has taken the traits of certain individuals, peculiar of their kind, and by no means prepossessing, as typical of the cracker. The particular idiom of the people is represented. The "we-uns" and "you-uns" are, however, common to several of the States adjacent to Georgia. This is descriptive of a cracker marriage. Bill takes Becky for a wife. "The young girl with slat bonnet, blue calico dress, and bare feet, emerged from the bushes. The minister tried to persuade them to go to his house, but they stubbornly refused. He told them witnesses were necessary, and with some difficulty succeeded in persuading them to allow him to go for two of his schoolboys. They were married, and both bride and bridegroom thanked him for his services." The "schoolboys" who acted as witnesses with the groom were of course of age. Ten cents' worth of candy, so the author has it, would often be the gift which would win a cracker bride. Moonshiners were common, and the consumption of strong drink universal. Something must be said about the good intentions of the author. Ramla is a philanthropist, bent on bringing the Walesca settlement out of darkness into light. For this laudable end no obstacle remains long in his way. Bill, who at the opening of the story is a braggart, not overtruthful, and inclined to that ugly trait of the Boers which is designated as "slimness," turns out at the conclusion to be a paragon of excellence.

Outing for February will contain an article on "American Figure Skating," from the pen of George H. Browne. Margaret N. Barry revives the glories of old-time "Fox Hunting in Virginia," Stanley Waterloo writes about "Coon Hunting in Michigan," and Clifton Johnson contributes a sympathetic study of "John Burroughs," as a naturalist.

THE MOVING FINGER WRITES.

By GRACE DENIO LITCHFIELD, author of "In the Crucible," "The Knight of the Black Forest," "Little Ventze," etc. 12mo, $1.25

"Miss Litchfield has ideals, and she is not afraid to write up to them. Her book is uplifting in the purity of its love and in the strength and nobility of its main characters. . . . She writes nothing hurriedly, and this story is a finished piece of work. . . . The book might be called a study in character, if one might add a footnote to the effect that it is not a morbid study, for there can not be morbidity where there is so much beauty. . . . Miss Litchfield is one of the few women of to-day who have written a sex novel without morbidity and without the questionable psychology which stamps the work of many women novelists."—Commercial Advertiser.

"The title of Grace Denio Litchfield's book 'The Moving Finger Writes' is an evidence of the permeating influence of Khayyam. The author's pen as planchette, guided by the 'moving finger,' has written an interesting story."—Chicago Evening Post.

MAYA:

A Story of Yucatan.

By WILLIAM DUDLEY FOULKE, author of "Slav or Saxon." Illustrated. 12mo, $1.25.

"A new romance by William Dudley Foulke, written on entirely new lines, has just been published by Putnam's Sons.

"It deals with the life and adventures of a crew of castaways who were shipwrecked on the shores of Yucatan and taken prisoners by the half-clad savages of that country. Their sufferings and experiences among these aborigines are portrayed graphically by Mr. Foulke, as is also the dainty love story of Maya and Sandoval. The descriptive part of Mr. Foulke's book is striking and it can be seen at a glance that the author has traveled extensively over the ground he describes. The chapter of legends which Maya relates to her lover, Sandoval, is beautiful in the extreme, and were the rest of the romance common-place this one would raise it to a high standard of descriptive writing.

"Mr. Foulke has written intelligently, entertainingly, and poetically, and his narrative unquestionably will delight the cultivated reader."—New York Press, Dec. 13, 1900.

"The story throughout is unlike anything in modern fiction; it is more like a legend than a novel. It is very evident, too, that the author has not got the facts set down here from books, but has walked amid this mystery, seen the ruins, and has traveled over the places where once the fierce tribal battles were fought. In places the story reminds one of 'Paul and Virginia,' very simple and charming, healthful; breathing the story of a great love."—The Indianapolis News.

EDWARD VII.

This sketch of the intimate life of England's new sovereign is presented with much sympathy and with great discretion. It brings the reader into close relationship with the man, showing him where he has touched the public heart, recounting at close range his life at Sandringham, in the country, at Marlborough House, as a student, observer, and churchman; as a husband and father, as the arbiter of fashion and the patron of the race track. From this volume, which is said to be written by "a member of the royal household," we make a few extracts which cannot fail to have wide interest at this time:

It is difficult to say whether the Prince is at his best among the people or in society. Those of the humbler classes who have come in contact with his Royal Highness are invariably brought to regard him with the deepest affection and respect. They feel, when they are talking to him, that they are laying their troubles before a man who is absolutely sympathetic and genuinely anxious to alleviate them. It has been the Prince's lot to receive many scores of deputations of workingmen, and he will show their representatives as much courtesy as he would an assembly of crowned heads. He makes it a rule to enter fully into the subjects of such addresses, and frequently by his influence will achieve for a little band of workers the end that they themselves are unable to bring about. When this is impossible, he will assure them in the kindest way that their wishes have his fullest sympathy, and that he will see them again at any time. More than once the excellent advice that he has given the working classes has proved of infinite use and advantage to them.

* * * * * * *

Meanwhile the owner of Sandringham has all the cares of his estate upon him. Every morning he spends at least an hour in a small business room just off the saloon. Here, in company with the controller of his household, and his secretary, Sir Francis Knollys, the Prince receives reports of all kinds. Mr. Jackson, the head gamekeeper, has a word to say about the hatching out or rearing of young pheasants. The stock keepers give advice as to what should be fattened for show and what should be killed. One man has heard of new machinery, another reports on the advisability of building more glasshouses. Every detail of the management of the estate is laid before his Royal Highness, and is duly considered, weighed, and commented upon. No complaint is neglected and no reasonable request refused. The room in which all this work takes place is severely plain, with its writing tables and desks and half a dozen chairs. The walls are simply painted, and their surface is only broken by a few portraits and Vanity Fair caricatures, the most striking being a sketch of the Prince's old racing friend, Admiral Rous.

* * * * * * *

As the Prince chats and smokes he paces to and fro, now moving to the high writing desk, to which he alone can obtain access with a little gold key he always wears, and where his private correspondence is answered and kept; then over to a larger table, where books, papers, and memoranda concerning the fixtures for the current day are strewn. While discussing the morning's news the Prince from time to time presses one of the half dozen knobs set in a movable frame that communicate with the controller or private secretary in their offices below. Sir Dighton Probyn and Sir Francis Knollys answer questions through call pipes, and messages are constantly being brought and sent, without, however, disturbing in the least Vennie, the late Prince Eddy's Irish terrier, or Peter, a well-bred French bulldog, which lie soft and warm on the Oriental carpet, and take the place in the Prince's affection of a green parrot of many attainments.

* * * * * * *

The same touching affection which exists between the Prince and Princess of Wales was again displayed during his own illness, when her Royal Highness scarcely ever left her husband's bedside. Other trials, that must come to all people who undertake to journey through life together, be they Princes or peasants, have only served to draw closer the bonds of affection that unite the royal pair.

Further proof, if such were needed, of the Prince's claim to be considered a thoroughly domesticated man, is the wonderful love and respect that from the very first his children have shown him. Boys are very quick to see holes in their fathers' armor when they exist; but the Prince's two sons have always regarded him as the beau ideal of all that a father, a man, and a Prince should be. They rightly considered that in points of etiquette, tact, and knowledge the Prince could do little wrong, and in all ways they have regarded his taste as a reliable model.

The Prince's marriage was a romance savoring of the most poetical traditions of the Middle Ages.

When his position and the exigencies of his life are taken into consideration it cannot be said that the Prince is extravagant with his clothes, and perhaps it is the fact that he possesses the largest wardrobe in the world of uniforms and State robes that induces him to restrict himself in the matter of what may be called mufti. But what is wise economy in a Prince might be considered undue extravagance in a subject. It must be remembered that, as a matter of course, the Prince's wardrobe includes every variety of attire for ordinary and for special use, so that suits for wear in town, or adapted for smart and quiet race meetings, are in abundance. His valets have charge of all shades and makes of tweeds, checks, shooting, fishing, and riding equipment, and Norfolk suits, which the Prince's example has made so popular for country use. There also are clothes used only for traveling, light, cool suits for wear at foreign watering places the Prince visits annually, besides fine furs and overcoats of every pattern and texture.

* * * * * * *

His sympathy for others has always been singularly acute. When an accident occurred to a sailor on the Britannia he was as deeply grieved as if it had injured one of his own retainers, and failed to shake off the shock he had sustained for several days. While visiting Holland in his yacht he went over from Flushing to Middleburg and made some purchases at a bric-a-brac shop. When the old Jew who kept the shop came on board with the goods it was apparent that he had discovered who his new customer was. He was dressed in his best clothes, and showed loath to part with his goods except to the purchaser. The Prince very soon knew what the matter was, and good-naturedly extending his hand greeted the old fellow with: "I am the Prince of Wales. This is my brother, Prince Leopold. We are both very glad to see you. Will you have a drink?"

Walt Whitman as a Young Man.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

The paper, in your recent issue, on Walt Whitman, from the pen of my old and respected friend, Joel Benton, (for several years a favorite contributor to The Mercury newspoper, of which I was for many years editor and proprietor,) brought to mind my acquaintance with Mr. Whitman, when, a youth of seventeen or thereabout, I set type for The Sunday Atlas on the same floor of 162 Nassau Street (where The Tribune Building now is) on which he, as editor of The Daily Aurora, wrote editorials for that journal. The Aurora was the New York organ for the John Tyler Administration and was published by Herrick, West & Ropes, the proprietors of The Sunday Atlas. When the successor of the deceased President, William Henry Harrison, in 1841, sundered his relations with the Whig Party, which had elected him, and antagonized its policy by his veto of Henry Clay's bill for a National bank, he desired an organ to help him ingratiate himself with the Democracy and with the hope of promoting his chances for a second term; hence The Daily Aurora.

Thomas L. Nichols, who had been educated for the medical profession, but who had so strong an inclination for journalism that he took his chances as a "penny-a-line" contributor to the journals of that day, was the first or original editor of The Daily Aurora, until he married a lady physician, the widow of Dr. Gore, when he retired from journalism and was succeeded as editor of The Aurora by Walt Whitman.

Mr. Whitman was at that time, I should think, about twenty-five years of age, tall and graceful in appearance, neat in attire, and possessed a very pleasing and impressive eye and a cheerful, happy-looking countenance. He usually wore a frock coat and a high hat, carried a small cane, and the lapel of his coat was almost invariably ornamented with a boutonnière. This was some years before he indulged in "Leaves of Grass."

Mr. Whitman, for some reason, took a fancy to me, and always accorded me a cheery greeting, and, notwithstanding the difference in our ages, we became quite chummy. Frequently, while I was engaged in sticking type, he would ask me to let him take my case for a little while, and he seemed to enjoy the few moments' recreation. If I remember correctly, I think he informed me that he had spent a year or two in a printing office.

After he looked over the daily and exchange papers, (reaching the den he occupied usually between 11 and 12 o'clock,) it was Mr. Whitman's daily habit to stroll down Broadway to the Battery, spending an hour or two amid the trees and enjoying the water view, returning to the office location at about 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon to have an interview with Anson Herrick, the senior partner of the concern, who, as a supporter of the Administration, held a position as Custom House weigher under the Collector of the Port. Mr. Herrick got his "inspiration" for the conduct of the paper, The Aurora, from the Collector, and Herrick, in turn, sought to "inspire" Whitman," but in this he had a tough job; for often, after a heated discussion, the conference between the two grinders of the party "organ" ended in Whitman picking up his hat and cane and marching out of the office in high dudgeon. Soon, however, his good nature got the better of his temper, and he would return and take his medicine with as few wry faces as possible. According to agreement, as I could understand, Whitman was to have full swing to write just what he chose in any other part of the paper, (of course not antagonistic to its politics,) but the senior proprietor, Herrick, who ran the political crank, was to have the toning of its leaders. "If you want such stuff in The Aurora write it yourself," Whitman more than once said to Herrick, and in reply Herrick would denounce Whitman as "the laziest fellow who ever undertook to edit a city paper."

After the expiration of the term for which Whitman had engaged he had had, as he said, enough of editing a party "organ," and he sundered his relations with The Aurora. Then, according to my recollection, some of his friends helped him to start a paper of his own in Brooklyn.

Anachronisms in Literature.

S. J. SHIELDS, Vernon, Ala., writes to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW: "While reading THE SATURDAY REVIEW of Jan. 5 I came upon an article in the 'Hints from the Mail Bag,' entitled 'Anachronisms in Literature,' which afforded me much amusement in observing the absurdity of the writer's blunders in the very same respect in which he criticises others. He very gravely brings Conan Doyle to judgment as 'The very worst offender in his novel "The White Company."' This story relates to the time when Edward the Black Prince invaded Spain in the interest of Pedro the Cruel, about the year 1368. Your critic takes the author to task for making a young monk, the principal character in the book, 'claim that he had read the great work of St. Thomas Aquinas, when, in fact, at that time, if born at all, that great theologian was in his cradle.' The dullest student of history could inform the learned critic that St. Thomas Aquinas died in 1274 nearly a century before the incidents narrated in 'The White Company.'

"Again, he charges Dr. Doyle with anachronism, and in doing so displays an ignorance of history only equaled by the temerity of his assertion, that the author had resurrected the great French Captain, Bertrand Guesclin, from the grave to take command of that body of knights and squires who joined issue with the same Black Prince! Now, the chronicles of that period show that Bertrand Du Guesclin was captured in the same expedition, described in 'The White Company,' at the battle of Navarette, having espoused the cause of Henry the Bastard. History will further show that the Black Prince was in his grave four years before the death of Bertrand Du Guesclin. (See Froissart's Chronicles.)

"Lastly, your critic hath suggested that said is a grievous sinne of vaine unfeeling swellyngs that the speaking of it with a little pebble would be a fast worthy of Noble Regarding."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE FOR FEBRUARY.

As you go by your news stand to-day stop and turn over the cover of the February number of Harper's Magazine. Look at the Table of Contents, and you will probably want to take it home with you. There are eighteen titles on this Table of Contents—no long, tiresome aricles, but many short, good ones. There are stories by Edith Wharton, Frederic Remington, W. W. Jacobs, Grace King, Hayden Carruth and George Bird Grinnell, all illustrated by well known artists.

There is an extremely practical article by Professor Brander Matthews on which settles some points that come up every day in our conversation and reading. The question of the split-infinitive, for example.

Questions of Usage in Words

A notable art feature of the Magazine is Sidney Whitman's paper on the great portrait painter, illustrated with many splendid reproductions of his most famous works.

Franz von Lenbach

An article of uncommon interest is that on which shows the influence that changed him from a wild, pleasure-loving boy into the strong, forceful man who became the real creator of German unity. The illustrations are from early photographs of Bismarck and his fiancee and are very interesting.

Prince Bismarck's Love Letters

Paul Meurice, the literary executor of Victor Hugo, contributes his second delightful article on

Victor Hugo, Artist

The reproductions of Hugo's hitherto unpublished drawings and paintings give us a new idea of the great man who wrote "Les Miserables."

Booth Tarkington's

dainty romantic story, Cherry, is concluded, there is a tremendously dramatic instalment of Gilbert Parker's wonderful new romance,

The Right of Way

and a continuation of Professor Woodrow Wilson's charmingly written history, Colonies and Nation.

THE EASY CHAIR, THE EDITOR'S STUDY and THE DRAWER conclude a notable number of the Magazine.

Harper's Magazine,

A Good Book of Travel.

Few travelers of the present day write literature that can be permanent; they depend too much upon personal observation, which while it adds a vitality and freshness to their pages, goes a short way toward establishing a criterion of actuality. The old travelers, although less interesting perhaps, wrote with more judgment and less impression. Yet, most of our contemporary globe trotters who put pen to paper believe that what they so entertainingly set down will in time become serious literature. It is a relief, therefore, to come upon an observing tourist who entertains no delusions in regard to his work. Mr. Jerome Hart writes in the preface to one of the most fascinating books of foreign travel and sojourn that we have seen for some time:

No one better than the writer knows how ephemeral are these pages. No one better than he knows that they are not literature because they are bound in boards. They are merely newspaper jottings of travel during some pleasant months abroad. Their only right to be is the desire which many readers have expressed to obtain them in permanent form. To that desire the writer has yielded.

We do not go so far as to say that Mr. Hart is mistaken, but we certainly are in accord with the readers he mentioned who desired to have "Argonaut Letters" "in permanent form." We cheerfully subscribe to their good taste. Mr. Hart saw much that was interesting abroad, and he writes of it as it impressed him at the moment. He writes, too, like an American who is judiciously confident and who is able to draw a fine distinction, not altogether free from irony, between the culture that is dying and that which is living. He has great respect for the monuments of the past, but he pins his faith on those which will arise in the future. His practical way of regarding things is everywhere displayed. In writing about the "Passion Play" at Oberammergau, he dispassionately makes up a list covering several pages regarding what not to write about, then he discusses the play in the light of modern histrionic art, and adds:

I have already said that actors can play peasants better than peasants can. I will go further—irreligious actors can play a religious drama better than religious peasants can. I saw the "Passion Play," when it was put upon the American stage by Salvin Morse years ago. James O'Neill, a good actor and a good Roman Catholic, played the Christ. He played the difficult rôle reverently and well—far better, in my opinion, than any peasant could—even Josef Mayer. * * * This train of thought suggested to me the idea: How would Edwin Booth have played the Christus? As there rose up before me the recollection of his magnetic person, his handsome, haunting face, his melancholy eyes, I could not help but think that in his early manhood no one could have played the Saviour better than Edwin Booth, player.

Mr. Hart takes his readers through the Mediterranean, to the cities of Italy, to Egypt, to Lombardy, and to Savoy, and his impressions of all that he sees and experiences make delightful reading, which is pleasantly enhanced by many fine reproductions of photographs of unusual and interesting scenes.

Death of Hamlet and His Mother.

E. S. B., Litchfield, Conn., writes to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW: "As a near connection and sincere admirer of the late Senator C. K. Davis, I beg to protest against a paragraph in the letter entitled 'Appleton Morgan's Appreciation of Senator Davis,' printed in THE SATURDAY REVIEW of Dec. 29. Mr. Morgan ascribes to Senator Davis an inconceivable blunder in regard to the death of Hamlet. He says that in a discussion on the question of Hamlet's madness, he (Senator Davis) replied that if Hamlet had not been mad he would not have killed himself as well as the King and Queen, but would have himself seized the succession instead of leaving it to Fortinbras. No man ever knew his Shakespeare better than Cushman K. Davis, and to believe for a moment that such a report of his expressed opinion is correct does him a serious injustice, for every child who has read or seen the play of 'Hamlet' knows that Hamlet did not kill himself, but was slain by the poisoned weapon in the hands of Laertes in the duel, and that Hamlet did not kill the King until after he knew that he himself was dying; neither did he kill the Queen at all, because she died just before in consequence of drinking the poisoned wine prepared for Hamlet.

"To permit this mistake to remain unnoticed and to pass as a true statement of Senator Davis's remarks would be to leave the memory of one of the closest and deepest students of Shakespeare that ever lived under the imputation of gross ignorance of even the plain story of a play that is familiar to all 'as household words.'"

A New Law Review.

The Columbia Law School has just issued through the Macmillan Company the first number of a new law periodical which takes the title of Columbia Law Review. Publication will be monthly. Each number will include articles dealing with problems of higher jurisprudence, together with a collection of current notes, recent decisions, and book reviews. The January issue has for its principal features "The Burden of Loss as an Incident of the Right to the Specific Performance of a Contract," by William A. Keener; "The History of the Law of Nature; a Preliminary Study," by Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart.; "Another Philippine Constitutional Question—Delegation of Legislative Power to the President," by Edward B. Whitney. The Review is small folio in form, of about seventy-five pages, and attractively bound in heavy, parchment-like paper. At this time Mr. Whitney's article may be said to have much general interest.

NOTES AND NEWS.

What is probably the most intimate life of the late Queen ever published was presented "by royal authority" through the Century Company in 1897, at the time of the Diamond Jubilee. The work was prepared by the Queen's librarian at Windsor, Richard R. Holmes, F. S. A. It is a royal quarto of 200 pages printed from types, with frontispiece in colors and forty photogravures. Of the Japan-paper edition there were 475 copies, 25 of which were reserved for presentation by Queen Victoria and 100 were disposed of in this country. Of the less elaborate edition only 50 copies remained unsold at the time of Victoria's death.

"A Journal of Our Life in the Highlands," being part of a diary kept for many years by Queen Victoria, is about to be issued in a new cloth edition by Harper & Brothers.

Harper & Brothers have so arranged that their two important books of sentimental as well as of historical interest, "The Love Letters of Bismarck" and "The Love Letters of Victor Hugo," will be published simultaneously about the 1st of February.

Robert Grant's "Unleavened Bread" will make its début in dramatic form this evening at the Savoy Theatre, when the rôle of Selma White will be portrayed by Elizabeth Tyree. Whether there is a moral to be found in the "hard" career of the heroine still remains to be seen. There are many people who believe that the book simply reveals the success of unrevealed insincerity. The stage version may throw some light on the subject. The adapter is Leo Ditrichstein. The call for the book is now as great as at any time since publication. About 40,000 copies have been sold to date.

The G. W. Dillingham Company has in preparation for early publication three novels which it considers of more than usual interest. The first is a story of New York life by R. H. P. Miles, which will be presented under the title "Three Men and a Woman"; the second, by John P. Ritter, has its scene laid in the romantic surroundings of the chivalry of the fifteenth century, and is called "The Cross Roads of Destiny," and the third, which is "One American Girl," by Virginia Webb, discusses the much-mooted question, Should American girls of wealth wed foreign rank and title?

Sir Martin Conwsy's long-expected book of travel in South America, "Climbing and Exploration in the Bolivian Andes," will be published by Harper & Brothers March 31.

A book which contains much interest and information for boys and girls has been published by the Abbey Press under the title of "The New Swiss Family Robinson." The author, Miss Helen Pomeroy, is said to have a good knowledge of the scenery and natural products of the country of which she writes, which is the Amazon region of South America. The tale deals with the experiences of the Armitage family in looking up an abandoned heritage in that little-known part of Brazil.

Major Pond's "Eccentricities of Genius," being a collection of memories of famous men and women of the platform and stage, published by the G. W. Dillingham Company, is now in its fourth edition.

A new edition is announced of Ralph Connor's "The Sky Pilot," published by the Fleming H. Revell Company. Miss Katharine E. Oliver has been giving readings from this book with conspicuous success.

The Macmillan Company is publishing Reginald Blomfield's "A Short History of Renaissance Architecture in England, 1500-1800," with drawings by the author and other illustrations; "Essays from De Quincey," edited by J. H. Fowler; Harbottle and Dalbiac's "Dictionary of French and Italian Quotations," and John La Farge's "Considerations on Painting" in a new $1.25 edition.

It may interest those of our readers who have followed the West Point investigation to know that a good description of the hazing formerly carried on at that institution is presented in "Cadet Days," by Capt. Charles King, United States Army, which, with illustrations by R. F. Zogbaum, is being published by Harper & Brothers.

Mrs. Gilbert will begin her stage reminiscences in the February number of Scribner's. The same issue will also contain a new story by Edith Wharton, entitled "An Angel at the Grave." There is too a long poem by George Cabot Lodge, son of the Senator, in which the life of a Greek galley is said to be pictured in fine movement.

Dodd, Mead & Co. are publishing a new edition of Schouler's "History of the United States of America under the Constitution," which includes a supplementary volume covering the civil war. Of this volume alone three editions have already been issued.

A volume of short lyric poems by Charles D. Platt is in active preparation by the A. Wessels Company. The main theme of the book is domestic life, not so much in what it leads up to as in its outgoing and consummation. It may be recalled that in 1896 Mr. Platt published at Morristown a little volume entitled "Ballads of New Jersey in the Revolution," which received a considerable amount of commendation.

The prize winners in The Smart Set competition are announced in the February number of that periodical. As has already been said, John D. Barry, with his novelette, "The Congressman's Wife," took the first prize of $2,000. The other awards are as follows: Second prize of $1,000 for a novelette, "The Middle Course," by Mrs. Poultney Bigelow; first prize of $500 for a short story of not more than 12,000 words, story unnamed, by Henry Goelet McVickar; second prize of $250 for a short story, "In Palace Gardens," by Julien Gordon, (Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger;) a prize of $100 for a short story, "In My Wife's Eye," by John Regnault Ellyson; a prize of $100 for a short story, story unnamed, by Kate Jordan, (Mrs. F. M. Vermilye;) a prize of $100 for a short story, story unnamed, by J. A. Ritchie; a prize of $100 for a short story, story unnamed, by Beulah Downey Hanks; a prize of $100 for a short story, "According to Gibson," by Erin Graham; a prize of $250 for a poem of about 100 lines, "The King's Chamber," by Theodosia Garrison, and a second prize of $100 for a poem of about 100 lines, "The Dancing of Suleima," by Clinton Scollard. By reason of the fact that the jokes and witticisms entered in the competition number many thousands, announcement of the prize winners will be delayed until the next issue of The Smart Set.

In the current number of Harper's Bazar Margaret Deland, in her "Studies of Great Women," treats of "Queen Elizabeth." Among the other features are "Holiday Happenings in Paris," by Catherine de Forest, and the "Children's Theatre," by John J. a'Becket.

Lord Rosebery's "Napoleon, the Last Phase," published in this country by Harper & Brothers, is now in its sixth edition here.

The true story of "Prince Charley" is now available in a little volume just published by the New Amsterdam Book Company, and entitled "The Rising of 1745." It is compiled from contemporary State papers and correspondence, by Charles Sanford Terry of the University of Aberdeen, and contains also a bibliography of Jacobite history from 1689 to 1788.

Mr. Phillpotts's new novel, "Johnnie Fortnight," will be issued by Doubleday, Page & Co. on March 15.

With the current month the Hudson Library (series of novels) issued by G. P. Putnam's Sons becomes a monthly publication. The January number contains a new edition of Ambrose Bierce's "In the Midst of Life," formerly called "Soldiers and Civilians." The February one will contain Miss Anna Katherine Green's detective story, "Marked Personal"; March, Ethel Mumford's "Dupes," and April, Miss Green's "Hand and Ring."

BRIEF PERSONALS.—Charles G. D. Roberts is hard at work upon a new novel, called "The Counsels of Princes," which he hopes to finish before Spring. There is also the prospect of a volume of his collected poems.

—The cheaper edition of "Madame," being the life and letters of Henrietta, Duchess of Orleans and daughter of Charles I., which E. P. Dutton & Co. are publishing in this country, contains the transcript of a letter lately discovered in the Record Office written by Charles I. to the Queen on the day after the battle of Trepredy Bridge, in which he describes the fight as "the ugliest" that he had ever witnessed and rejoices to hear of the birth of his "youngest and prettiest daughter." The author of "Madame," it will be recalled, is Mrs. Julia M. Ady.

—Mr. Poultney Bigelow's forthcoming book, which will be presented through McClure, Phillips & Co., will bear the title of "Colonization and Its Problems." Its scope has already been defined in these columns.

—We hear that D. Appleton & Co. have delayed the publication of George Moore's new novel, "Sister Theresa," in order that "Evelyn Innes" might be retouched, so that a continued story might be presented in the two books. The author has not simply "retouched" his earlier work, however, but has completely rewritten it; the plot is changed, the characters walk differently through the pages, and these are shorter by a hundred.

—We have been requested to state that the taking over of The Anglo-Saxon Review by G. P. Putnam's Sons will not be followed by a reduction in the price of the periodical, which will remain as formerly, $6 a volume.

—Rudyard Kipling will contribute to the next number of The Fortnightly a satire, in the form of a story, entitled, "Railway Reform in Britain."

—The death of C. V. Nasarjev is announced from St. Petersburg. She was in her fifty-second year, and was the author of over fifty novels, sketches, and dramas.

—Mr. Frederick C. Conybeare, who wrote "The Dreyfus Case," published in this country by Dodd, Mead & Co., has just presented, through Messrs. Skeffington of London, a controversialist work on "Roman Catholicism as a Factor in European Politics," which has particular significance just now, owing to the debate in the French Chamber over the Associations bill.

Boston Announcements.

BOSTON, Jan. 24.—"Doing the chambered nautilus act," declared an irreverent clerk who had forsaken his desk to pack and pile books and convince porters that occasional obedience to orders is better than uniform perversity. "The more stately mansions are builded next door, and we are going into them; going to have separate offices and lots of room, six times as much room as we have here, but moving 500,000 books is no joke," and he turned to become part of the apparent confusion in which Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. are, changing their quarters for others providing the greater space which they have long needed. Once settled, they can begin to think of 1901.

In the same building Messrs. Dana Estes & Co. are quietly taking the annual account of stock and postponing much

COL. HILARY A. HERBERT, of Alabama, ex-Secretary of the Navy, continues the Atlantic Monthly's series on Southern Reconstruction in the February number. He deals with the Conditions of the Problem,—goes back to the cessation of hostilities in 1865, and shows how Southern soldiers and civilians faced the new political issues that resulted from the downfall of the Confederacy. Other contributions are:

Reminiscences of Huxley, John Fiske
A Plea for New York, J. K. Paulding
The Last Phase of Napoleon, Goldwin Smith
The New Industrial Revolution, Brooks Adams

The February Atlantic is for sale on all news-stands.

thought of the future until next month, being well contented with the past.

Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. make no announcements for any date earlier than Feb. 16, and their first book will be "Murillo," in the Riverside Art Series, with the Spencer portrait for a frontispiece, and fifteen other pictures. The lovely St. Anthony, the purely Spanish St. Roderick, the Holy Family from the Louvre with its wonderful St. Elizabeth presenting St. John the Baptist to Our Lord; the Education of the Virgin, with Mary as the most demure and earnest of little Spanish maidens; the Dice Players, the Fruit Vendors, are among the other pictures which are equally divided between those too great to be omitted and others less lofty in thought, but as pure in art.

With the Murillo will come "An Epoch for Faith," by the Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon; "The Turn of the Road," by Miss Frothingham; "Sam Lovell's Boy," by the late Rowland E. Robinson, from manuscript placed in the publishers' hands not long before his lamented death; one of Col. Theodore Ayrault Dodge's books about riding and riders; and three new Riverside Biographies: "Cooper," by Mr. Rossiter W. Raymond; "Jefferson," by Mr. H. C. Merwin, and "Penn," by Dean Hodges. Meanwhile, the public having discovered during the reign of "To Have and To Hold," that the Atlantic stories are none the less interesting because of the austerity of its cover, requires large editions that it may read "The Tory Lover," and wants to know, you know, whether the life refers to the girl who loved the Tory, or to the Tory who loved the girl.

At Messrs. Lee & Shepard's the demand for "Uncle Terry," for which the Northwest has just begun to make a vigorous call, keeps the force fairly busy in spite of theoretical "resting after holidays." As the book was almost the first planned in every detail from acceptance to cover decoration by the new management, its success gives no small satisfaction, but the compliment which came to it in the holidays rather amazed the publishers. The manager of the book department in a "store," a man with no apparent sentiment about anything, came and bought two copies, for gifts, saying "I know it's a little crude, but it takes hold of my heartstrings," articles which as an especially hard-headed person, doing business with both eyes on his employer's interests, he had never been suspected of possessing.

The liberal expenditure on the dress of "Uncle Terry" has proved to be so wise an investment that the same policy is to be followed with "A Boy in Old Japan," by G. Van Bergen, a book nominally for children, but containing in the history of the youth whose growth was coincident with the awakening of his motherland a much more vivid conception of the change than is possessed by most adults. The pictures are even better than the text, and are worthy of collection by themselves.

With the Lothrop Company conversation is not confined to "Eben Holden," although when St. Stephen's Day, the dullest in all the year, as it immediately follows Christmas, brings New York booksellers' orders for 25,000, a few remarks may very well be made.

One great service which the book has performed for its publishers is to reveal it to authors as a house not entirely devoted to Pepper books, quite independent of the author of the Pepper books, and ready to give excellent terms for a good novel, and to use every legitimate means to advance it. In consequence, mail and express no longer bring it tons of perfectly impracticable little tales from minister's sons and deacon's daughters, but the neat manuscript of the practiced author, and the typewritten folios of the new author, who flatters himself that modern improvements are an equivalent for genius.

Among those soon to be published is a novel by Mrs. Burton Harrison; "A Carolina Cavalier," by Mr. George Cary Eggleston, a Revolutionary story introducing many historical personages, and "The Potter and the Clay," by Miss Maud Howard Peterson, a story of America, Scotland, and India, will come later.

Miss Francesca Alexander's "Hidden Servants" has the very uncommon good fortune of being a success volume of poetry, and is now in its fourth edition and selling steadily. Another book issued by the same publishers, Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., after selling moderately for some time, finds itself suddenly brought into a conspicuous position. This is "The Colombian and Venezuelan Republics," by Mr. William L. Scruggs, whose twenty-seven years in South America give him authority to speak of the countries which have made some instructive experiments in self-government, and in one of which the United States has been profoundly interested. The history of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty also figures in the latter, so that the book practically meets the demand of those Americans who have discovered that there is something nearer than China. The book contains maps of Colombia, Venezuela, and Guayana, and reviews the history of the Monroe doctrine, so that it contains exactly what is sought by those interested either in the canal or in South American matters.

Mrs. Myra Sawyer Hamlin, the author of "Chicopee Children" and "Nan's Sunshine at Chicopee," finds herself called Miss Hamlin in paper after paper, and is rather disposed to resent it. She is the wife of Mr. Charles Hamlin, and her first book, a novel, was published some thirteen years ago by Messrs. Appleton & Co.

The Newton Club seems to be recovering from Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith's remarks about "Uncle Tom's Cabin." In truth, when the audience left the hall after hearing that "'Uncle Tom's Cabin' was the most vicious book ever placed between covers," there were many who agreed with him. As for the war, did not Mr. Lincoln himself greet Mrs. Stowe as "the little woman who made the war?"

Besieged in Peking.*

When Dr. W. A. P. Martin, D. D., LL. D., and President of the Chinese Imperial University, after his most trying experiences in Peking, landed in New York, he carried a rifle in his hand. There was a lad who met the author of "The Siege of Peking," and the boy remarked: "You must have been hunting somewhere?" Dr. Martin's answer was: "Yes, in Asia; beyond the sea." "What kind of game?" inquired the boy. "Tigers," replied the doctor. He adds: "I ought to have said hyenas." Sentimentalism and the preaching of it may be a very nice thing for those who have never faced a cruel, a vindictive, and a stupid foe, but as far as the governing class of the Chinese are to be considered, namely the Manchus, all such fine talk, Dr. Martin thinks, is wasted energy and likely to do more harm than good.

The present troubles in China, the author believes, are due to three causes. "Political jealousy, religious antagonism, and industrial competition." Some kind of respect might be accorded to this Manchu dynasty, inasmuch as it seems to be in ignorance of when it is beaten. Stubbornness may be considered in certain respects as near to heroism, only according to European and American ideas there is nothing approaching to the grandiose in either the Chinese or the Tartars. Is it not strange that up to the present time the Manchus have failed to learn the futility of their attempt to expel the hated foreigner. "They have been beaten by England, later by England and France together; then by Japan unaided by other powers." The author compares these Manchus to a bull, stupid enough to charge a locomotive.

Particularly interesting are Dr. Martin's own experiences, having to do with the education of the present Emperor. When Tung Chi, the only son of the Dowager Empress, died at the age of eighteen, (1874,) the Empress selected a child of three years old, the son of the Dowager's sister. Kwang Su is now in the twenty-sixth year of his reign. "During one-half of that period she exercised a regency on the ground of his immaturity, and now for a third time she assumes to exercise it on the ground of his incapacity." Dr. Martin thinks that at the beginning of her regency the Empress was not the enemy of reform.

As a proof of liberal tendencies, may we not cite the fact that the young Emperor was early set to the study of the English language "Two of my students were selected as his instructors. Special lessons were compiled by them for his Majesty's use, and in order to be sure of their correctness these lessons were submitted to me. I might, therefore, plead guilty of having given some bias to the imperial mind. Nothing is more probable than that he derived his first impulse in the direction of progress from his study of English."

How much confidence can there be placed in the affirmations of the Chinese Government as to the first movement of the Boxers? The mandarins assured the Europeans in Peking that the Boxers were "innocent gymnasts," and that the Empress with a word would issue orders and the Boxers would all go home. "As to the comparative safety of Peking, I myself was as much astray as any of the Ministers, for I wrote to my relations that I thought the capital in no danger, as it was patrolled by a well-organized military force. 'Peking,' I said, 'is the safest place in China.'"

By this time we have become fairly familiar with the wonderful defense of Peking. It will always be considered as one of the proudest achievements of our times. It would be invidious to cite any particular nationality as having been more distinguished than another in the terrible strife. No one questions to-day Dr. Martin's statement that there were two stages during the siege. For ten days it was the Boxers who attacked the legations, the Chinese Government keeping itself in the background. "In the second stage, which lasted eight weeks, the Government and its soldiers come prominently forward, and the Boxers almost disappear." At last there was the day of deliverance. Out scurried the Empress Dowager and her Court, and more than half the population of Peking abandoned their dwellings. Dr. Martin has something to say about looting. "In their haste they left behind them their wardrobes filled with costly furs, their floors were strewn with the richest silks, and in some cases the whole ground was covered with nuggets of silver. What a temptation to plunder! The punishment of the guilty city would not have been too severe had it been given up to be sacked by the soldiers. Certainly the commanders of the allied forces, the Americans excepted, must have winked at the plundering. Suppose you had been starved and wanted something to appease your hunger, what would you do? There were the missionaries with their army of famished converts. What is mine or what is yours may hardly be considered in a case of this precise kind. So, when Dr. Martin found a deserted grain shop and helped himself to the wheat and the millet, never was there looting of a more justifiable character. After the entrance of the allies and the discomfiture of the Manchus, the peculiar quality of the Chinese shone forth. "The eight banners of the Manchus were nowhere to be seen, but in their stead floated from innumerable private dwellings small copies of those foreign flags, inscribed with Chinese letters, indicating that their occupants "were faithful subjects of the great Sunrise Empire," or "Submissive to the sway of the Russian Czar," or, "Humble subjects of the Great United States." On some of them might be read an inscription in "pidgin'" English, or bad French: "We be good people—no makee robbery. Please don't shoot."

In a final chapter the author devotes his attention to the most difficult subject of reconstruction. At the best, predisposed to give those who have spent their lives in China a certain authority, we must deem all such proposed arrangements as purely speculative. That jellyfish China is still a force, indeterminate, and what is in the future no man can tell.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS.

Y. O. TAYLOR, Providence, R. I.: "I have an old book in a fairly good state of preservation, entitled 'The Punishments of China,' illustrated by twenty-two engravings, with explanations in English and French; this book was published in London in the year 1808. I would like to know the value of the book, and the best place to offer it for sale."

The value of this book is slight.

"X.," New York City: "In answer to 'A. B. S.' I would say that Putnam's 'Pocket Gazetteer of the World,' a directory of general geography, would be useful to him. About 25,000 places are located and described in it."

"QUO VADIS," New York City: "Will you be kind enough to tell us through your paper who is the author of 'The Love Letters of an English Woman'?"

The author's name, as yet, has not been made known.

FRANCES S. DAY, Westport, Conn.: "Will you kindly give me some information regarding Lafcadio Hearn? I have looked in a number of encyclopedias with no success, further than a short Biography. It has been my pleasure of late to read a number of his works, and his charming, graceful style, together with his pure English, must always be a delight to the intelligent reader. Would more people read his 'In Ghostly Japan,' I doubt very much if we should consider it our 'bounden duty' to Christianize Japan."

Lafcadio Hearn was born at Leucadia, Santa Maura, Ionian Islands. His father was an Irish officer, and his mother a Greek. His early years were passed in Wales, Ireland, England, and France, and he was educated at a private school and at various Roman Catholic schools and colleges. His guardian, a grandaunt, losing her property, young Hearn was sent to this country when nineteen to make his way. He learned the printer's trade in Cincinnati, and later became a newspaper writer there. He then went to New Orleans, where he remained for ten years as an editorial writer. In 1887 he went to the West Indies. Two years later he came to New York, and then went to Japan, where he found employment as a teacher. He married a Japanese wife, and became a subject of the empire, taking the name of Y. Koizumi. He has made himself very familiar with the inner life of the Japanese. In 1896 he was appointed a lecturer on English literature in the Imperial University of Tokio. He is the author of the following books: "One of Cleopatra's Nights, and Other Fantastic Romances," by Théophile Gautier, (translated by Hearn,) New York, 1882; "Stray Leaves from Strange Literature," Boston, 1884; "Gombo Zhébes," (a dictionary of Creole proverbs,) New York, 1885; "Some Chinese Ghosts," Boston, 1887; "Chita," New York, 1889; "Youma," New York, 1890; "The Crime of Sylvestre Bonnard," by Anatole France, (translated by Hearn,) New York, 1890; "Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan," Boston, 1894; "Out of the East: Reveries and Studies in New Japan," Boston, 1895; "Kokoro: Hints and Echoes of Japanese Inner Life," Boston, 1896; "Gleanings in Buddha Fields," Boston, 1897; "Exotics and Retrospectives," Boston, 1898; "In Ghostly Japan," Boston, 1899, and "Shadowings," Boston, 1900.

LEO E. FIRTH, Stapleton, N. Y.: "Will you kindly, through THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW, give me some information about David Ker, the boys' author, and give a list of his books?"

David Ker was born in England. He was long engaged in newspaper and literary work as a traveling correspondent. He wrote for many years for THE NEW YORK TIMES. Among his books of adventure are the following: "From The Hudson to the Neva," "Into Unknown Seas," "Lost Among White Africans," "The Lost City," "O'er Tartar Deserts," "A Prisoner Among Pirates," "Swept Out to Sea," and "The Wizard King." He can be addressed in care of Lippincott & Co., publishers, Philadelphia.

"A TIMES READER," 206 Henry Street, New York City: "Would you kindly inform me through your paper whether Count Tolstoi is classed as a poet? If not, what sort of an author is he?"

Count Tolstoi is a novelist and a profound and earnest student of life and character.

"A CONSTANT READER," New York: "Will you please publish in the Supplement or inform me where I may find out something concerning J. A. Altsheler, a comparatively new author?"

Joseph Alexander Altsheler was born at Three Springs, Ky., on April 29, 1862. He attended Liberty College, at Glasgow, Ky., and also Vanderbilt University. Since leaving college he has been on the editorial staff of The Louisville Courier-Journal and The New York World, with which latter paper he is, we believe, at present connected. He is the author of a number of historical novels, "The Sun of Saratoga," "A Knight of Philadelphia," "A Soldier of Manhattan," "The Last Rebel," "A Herald of the West," "My Captive," and two books for boys, "The Rainbow of Gold" and "The Hidden Mine."

J. S. M., New York: "Who is the author of the verses beginning:

"'The time has come, the Walrus said,
To talk of many things.'

I saw a quotation from them in Booth Tarkington's 'The Gentleman from Indiana.'"

Lewis Carroll, who wrote "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking Glass," is the author of the lines referred to.

Wanted and to Exchange.

H. F. HUNTINGTON, Gainesville, Ga.: "I would like to exchange a copy of the 1839 edition of Mrs. Hemans's 'Poems,' complete in one edition, pocket size, bound in red morocco, in good condition, for either of the following novels: 'The Cardinal's Snuff Box,' 'Alice of Old Vincennes,' or 'The Conquerors.'"

"E. F.," 58 Chestnut Street, East Orange, N. J.: "I want to secure a new or second-hand copy of 'Essays and Reviews,' written by several clergymen of Oxford, England. The first essay is on 'The Education of the World,' and is by Frederick Temple, now Archbishop of Canterbury."

J. E. D. SHIPP, Americus, Ga.: "I want to secure the following books: The Rev. J. Mercer's 'History of Georgia Baptist Association,' 1838; Richard Henry Wilde's 'Love and Madness of Tasso,' New York, 1842; E. R. Cotton's 'Life of Macon,' Baltimore, 1840; 'Our Forefathers: Their Homes and Churches,' Charleston, 1860; Thomas Palmer's 'Nine Years of Democratic Rule in Mississippi,' Jackson, Miss., 1847, and 'Memoirs of Col. Johnson Fry,' professor in William and Mary's College, Richmond, Va., 1800. I will give in exchange for these the first nineteen (bound) volumes of 'The Southern Literary Messenger,' with contributions by Poe, or bound volumes of 'The Athenæum,' or will pay cash. I would be glad to hear from dealers in Americana who issue catalogues."

JOHN SKINNER, 44 North Pearl Street, Albany, N. Y.: "I am desirous of obtaining the following works: Moore's 'Diary of the American Revolution,' Wilkes's 'Narrative,' 'Life of Philip Schuyler,' two volumes; Morse's 'Gazetteer and Geography,' Palmer's 'Lake Champlain,' 'Letters of Historicus,' 'New York State Marriages,' 'Colonial History of New York,' Volume XIV., 'Early History of New Netherland,' the volumes of Dunlap's 'History of New Netherland,' Darby's 'Tours,' 1818; Schoolcraft's 'Narrative,' 1854, and 'Remonstrance of New Netherland,' 1856."

MISS MARY CLIZBE, Rockton, N. Y.: "I wish to dispose of the following magazines: Several years of Munsey's, Cosmopolitan, McClure's, Scribner's, and odd numbers of other publications. Also, I have complete nine years of The Ladies' Home Journal, 1887-95, and three later years, 1898-1900, inclusive. In addition, I have some odd numbers of the years 1896 and 1897."

F. H. BAER, 786 Prospect Street, Cleveland, Ohio: "A large number of old Colonial prints, suitable for framing, for sale or exchange for rare books or early valentines."

L. D. CARMAN, 1,851 Q Street, Washington, D. C.: "Wanted, Neef on 'Education,' Philadelphia, 1808; Neef's 'Teaching,' Philadelphia, 1813; and a copy of the privately printed hand-illuminated edition of Eugene Field's 'Little Willie.'"

"E. T.," Box 124, Archbald, Penn.: "I wish to dispose of the following: 'The Illustrator,' (monthly and quarterly,) five volumes; Saturday Evening Post, from July, 1898, to Jan. 1, 1901; World Almanacs, 1890 to 1899; Cooper's 'Naval History,' Cooperstown, 1846; Duyckinck's 'National Portrait Gallery,' two volumes; 'Reports American Historical Association,' 1894 to 1898. I would like to get a good second-hand copy of the second volume of Edward John Payne's 'History of America.'"

LEON MEAD, Binghamton, N. Y.: "I will pay a good price for a copy of Shate'a 'Manual of Anglo-Saxon'; also for a copy of the 'Memoires of Chevalier d'Eon,' edited by François Gaillardet, Paris, 1866. Both books must be in good condition."

E. F. DELAHANTE, 75 Princeton Street, Cleveland, Ohio: "I have three 'Book Lovers,' No. 1'; three 'Cornhill Booklets, No. 1,' first edition; 'Lyrics,' by John B. Tabb, first edition; 'Rosemary and Rue,' by Ambar; 'Sea Mark: A Threnody,' by Bliss Carman, limited edition on hand-made paper, which I can spare for best offer, cash or exchange."

W. E. FINDLEY, 10 East Fifty-eighth Street, New York City: "Wanted, Bolton's 'History of Westchester County,' and 'The Townsends.'"

R. G. TAUSSIG, 119 East Sixty-fifth Street, New York City: "I want to purchase the September 'Bibelot' of 1900, published by Thomas B. Mosher."

MAX EMMANUEL, 178 East One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, New York City: "I have a set of 'The Crystal Palace,' 1851, with about 200 steel engravings, and will exchange it for Bartlett's 'Views of Canada,' or other works with steel plates."

M. GOINO, 392 Pine Avenue, Montreal, Canada: "I would like to purchase, in good second-hand condition, Prof. Hermann Muller's 'Fertilization of Flowers,' London, 1883. The preface is by Charles Darwin."

S. C. BECKLEY, 346 Broadway, wants to buy a copy of "The Swiss Republic," by Winchester, published by Lippincott.

J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bronson, Mich.: "I want to purchase the following books: Arrington's 'Desperadoes of the Northwest,' also portrait of Judge Arrington; Cora Montgomery's 'Presidents of Texas,' Wilkes's 'Exposition of the Apocalypse,' Thompson's 'Satires and Profanities,' Carruther's 'Knights of the Horseshoe,' La Roy Sunderland's 'Mormonism Exposed,' 'Anti-Mormon Almanack,' 1842, and 'Magnet,' Vol. II., 1843; Maximilian's 'Travels in North America,' London, 1843; Cobbett's 'Life of Paine,' Dr. Cooper's 'Political Economy,' with the portrait; Mary Wollstonecraft's 'Rights of Man' and 'Stories from Real Life,' William Ray's 'Poems,' Lee's 'Three Years Among Comanches,' Albany, 1859; Mrs. Horn's 'Captivity,' Cincinnati, 1851; Call's 'Scenes in Texas,' 'Memoirs of Lafitte,' Providence, 1820; Leslie's Popular Monthly, November, 1880; Vasari's 'Painters,' large paper edition; Cooper's 'Purgatory of Suicides,' Lippard's 'Quaker City,' periodical, and portraits and autographs of M. and S. F. Austin, Gen. Lane, C. W. Kendall, Bowie, Jones, Fanning, Bonham, Travis, Burnett, H. Smith, Gen. J. Wilkinson, E. P. Gaines, Col. M. Edwards, James Gaines, Gen. Lallemand, J. Gregg, R. S. Neighbors, and other early Texans."

A. K. GIBSON, 28 North Union Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "I have three copies of 'A Few Choice Words with Original Poems,' by Julia A. Moore, (Sweet Singer of Michigan,) first edition, 1878. Will sell or exchange for copies of Thoreau's 'Thoughts,' first edition, and Richard Jeffries's 'Field and Hedgerow.'"

Appeals to Readers.

W. A. LINN, Hackensack, N. J.: "Where can I find anything like a detailed account of the giving to the monk Cyril of the copper plates, by an angel, from which Abbot Joachim was said to have derived his Everlasting Gospel?"

E. M. LOW, 79 Ryerson Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "In 'Patience Sparkhawk and Her Times,' on Page 16, is a reference to the capture of Monterey, Cal., by the United States fleet in 1846. I knew that Monterey, Mexico, was captured in 1846, but not by a fleet, as it is far inland. Was Monterey, Cal., ever the scene of a battle during the Mexican war?"

D. M. CURTIN, 10 Monroe Street, New York City: "Can any one tell me who wrote the following lines?

'Friend of my soul, this goblet sip,
It will chase thy pensive tear.
'Tis not as sweet 'as woman's lips,
But it is more sincere.
Like her delusive beam,
It will chase away the mind,
And, like affection's dream,
It will leave no trace behind.'

"The person I heard recite them is a lover of Byron, but does not recall where he found them."

M. D. B. BRINTON, 50 West Sixty-fifth Street, New York City: "Can any of your readers kindly tell me where I may find the concluding verses of these lines?

"'You, that know the reader tell me,
Why it is that instinct still
Prompts the heart to like or like not
At its own capricious will.'"

M. E. HARDIMAN, Jr., Elizabeth, N. J.: "If possible, will you or any of your readers, kindly inform me who wrote the following lines, and in what work they appear?

"'Then I took a pencil and wrote
On the mossy stone as I lay:
"Here lies the body of Eleanor Dare
And the heart of Edward Gray."'"

MARY E. PHILLIPS, Nottingham Hotel, Copley Square, Boston, Mass.: "Can any one tell me where I can secure a copy of the Rev. Edward E. Hale's 'Story of a Day,' as illustrated under the copyright of L. Prang? For a number of years I have been trying to find a picture of the infamous famous Col. Percy Kirke, who flourished as a contemporary of Lord Chief Justice Jeffries during the reign of James II. of England. If such a portrait of any description is in existence I would like to find its whereabouts."

Mrs. KATHERINE D. CURLEY, 1,911 Seventh Avenue, Troy, N. Y.: "I am anxious to get information regarding a John Dowell, mentioned in some biographical dictionary as having written a book of 1663, an author born in Ross County, Ireland, on an estate there known as the 'Mantna estate.' Also, a relative of his, contemporary with him, named Felix Dowell or McDowell: a professor of theology in Paris and Rome; died in Dublin in 1701. I would be pleased to hear from any of their descendants."

J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bronson, Mich.: "Who is the author of a poem beginning: 'There was a tumult in the city!' What is the title of a novel having for its principal character Louis von Brinker, who goes to Hohenstauffer, where he is mistaken for Lorenz von Becker, and are instructed by the owner to sell by private treaty a well known collection of Byron Relics and Byroniana. The collection includes most of the items of great interest and importance that have been procurable at dates by Auction and privately, during the last twenty years. It comprises personal relics, jewelry, miniatures, documents, and autograph and other letters, including:

The silver sword in highly decorated scabbard presented to Lord Byron in recognition of his services in the Greek Nation, with dedication in Greek. A small travelling case of knife, fork, spoon, etc., in leather case, with initial B and coronet. A pair of small pistols marked B and coronet. A gold seal with musical box engraved with arms of Lord Byron. A gold bracelet, containing miniature of Lord Byron, also a lock of his hair, together with other locks of Sophia Maria Byron, Francis Leigh, and Sir Peter Parker, Bart. An ivory spill holder on stand, engraved "To my dear son George Gordon Byron, 1786." A large travelling flask, silver mounted, engraved arms, initial and coronet of Lord Byron, carried by him at the time of his death, when it passed into the possession of his cousin, Captain Hay. It was formerly the property of Lord Byron's sister, Mrs. Leigh. A silver traveling inkstand, initial B and coronet, constantly used by Lord Byron. A miniature, unmounted in leather case, of Lord Byron's mother. A carved horn snuff box, with miniature of Lord Byron at the age of seven. Lord Byron's marriage certificate. A miniature of Allegra, supposed daughter of Lord Byron, with hair at back. Portrait of "Ada" by Millard, signed and dated 1838, in pencil and water colours. The marriage settlement by Lord Byron, executed by him, dated 30th December 1814. A letter from Mrs. Byron to John Hanson, dated October 30th, 1803, complaining that she cannot get Lord Byron to go back to Harrow, that he is in love with Miss Chaworth. A letter from Augusta Byron (Lord Byron's sister) to Mr. Hanson, dated November 18th, 1804, as to what had best be done for the benefit of Lord Byron, and deploring the influence of Mrs. Byron. A letter from Lady Holland to Mr. Hayward, dated September 28th, 1869, having reference to the Leigh and Byron scandal. A letter from Pandra to Dimitri with reference to the sword presented to Lord Byron; mentioned above. And many other items of value and importance but too numerous to mention in an advertisement.

A rough list of the contents of the collection may be seen and full particulars as to viewing and price may be obtained of Messrs. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE.

The Joy of Captain Ribot

By ARMANDO PALACIO VALDES.

Translated from the Spanish by Minna Caroline Smith.

The Mexican Herald says of this new story from the most famous of the living Spanish novelists: "The book is full of fire, grace, and dignity. * * * So wonderfully presented is the psychological drama in the hearts of the two chief personages, so intense the human feeling, that the interest is enchained. And the merry, honest humor and delicious fun-making of Valdée has full play."

Mrs. R. H. BENARY, 7 Third Avenue, New Brighton, S. I., N. Y.: "Where can I get an old-fashioned, genuine copy of 'The Boys' Own Book' and 'Mother Goose'? This last was published, I think, in the latter part of the eighteenth century or very early in the nineteenth. I do not know when 'The Boys' Own Book' was published. Both books were sent to me from London, England, when I was a little child, forty-five years ago. If any of your readers can help me in my search I would be very grateful. Also, can you tell me if a book published somewhere in the early seventies called 'Ingemisco' is to be published now? It bore a strange little couplet, 'When "Ingemisco" not "all's well" was the watchword of the Rhine.'"

The Duerer Society.

The Honorary Secretaries of the Dürer Society of London, Campbell Dodgson, and S. Montague Peartree, 9 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, announce the publication of the society's third portfolio of reproductions of fine originals by Albert Dürer.

The plates contained in this portfolio, thirty-one in number, are, except in one or two instances, the size of the original engravings, woodcuts, and drawings, a few paintings, a portrait of Dürer from the Felix collection, Leipsic, and the "Adoration of the Magi," Florence, are reproduced in photogravure, and measure, respectively, 11 by 8 inches and 10 by 12 inches, while the "Calumny of Apelles," from a pen-and-ink drawing in the Albertina, Vienna, has been considerably reduced in size. These reproductions are all mounted upon white boards, and inclosed in an imperial folio case, cloth backed, and accompanied by descriptive, historical, and critical text by Campbell Dodgson, M. A., assistant in the Department of Printe and Drawings in the British Museum.

The scope of the society's work includes the reproduction of rare original drawings contained in public and private collections in England, France, Italy, and Russia; reproductions of engravings and woodcuts from proofs belonging to the British Museum, the Berlin Kupferstichkabinet, G. Mauer, Esq., and other well-known Dürer collectors, as well as of medals by, attributed to, or connected with, Albert Dürer.

The edition consists of 300 copies, 250 of which are supplied to members of the society, at an annual subscription of 1 guinea, the remaining 50 copies being reserved for public institutions, libraries, art schools, &c., the prices of which may be ascertained upon application. A small number of the first and second portfolios, issued respectively in 1898 and 1899, are in the possession of the society, and are reserved for candidate members, by whom they may be obtained at £2 5s. and £1 11s. 6d., respectively, the committee reserving the right to increase these prices without further notice. The publications of the society can only be obtained by its members, and no subjects can be furnished separately.

Subscriptions are now invited for their fourth portfolio, which will be published early in the Autumn of 1901. This issue will contain from thirty to thirty-five plates. The committee, both through the favorable reception of its earlier issues, in Great Britain, America, France, and Germany, and owing to the friendly co-operation of well-known photographic process workers and publishers, notably, such houses as Messrs. Braun, Clément et Cie. of Dornach and Paris, and the Swan Engraving Company, has been able to exceed the promises contained in its original prospectus, and at the same time to keep up the high artistic level of its reproductions. Applications for membership, remittances, or any further inquiries may be addressed to the Honorary Secretaries, at the above address.

The Town of the Conqueror.*

*FALAISE, THE TOWN OF THE CONQUEROR. By Anna Bowman Dodd. Illustrated. Pages xiv.-280. 12mo, cloth. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $2.

Readers who delight in a well-written book of travel will make no mistake if they select Anna Bowman Dodd's "Falaise, the Tour of the Conqueror," as a volume which will furnish a full measure of attractive reading and be a valuable addition to the library shelf. Those who are familiar with Mrs. Dodd's former volumes, "Cathedral Days" and "In and Out of Tbree Normandy Inns," will need no urging to induce them to read this work. Her range of vision is not limited to the features that are commonly noted by tourists, but includes many fascinating details that only an experienced and observing traveler would notice. She is also gifted with a peculiarly charming style and a well-stocked vocabulary, which enable her to describe all she sees in an unusually fascinating manner.

In this volume the author gives an account of a driving trip which started at the famous old inn Guillaume le Conquérant at Dives, the second described in her volume "In and Out of Three Normandy Inns," and ended at Falaise, the town of William the Conqueror, which is undoubtedly one town in a thousand. The journey was made in a Normandy char-à-bancs, certainly a novel vehicle, and, aside from the gratification of a sentimental longing for the picturesque and historical, the peasant's cart had its advantages which the reader appreciates as the story progresses. After leaving Dives, the cool, moist Caen plains were crossed, a section of the marvelous Normandy province which is replete with beautiful landscapes and furnishes for the man or woman in love with nature a completed sense of perfect enjoyment.

Falaise, the end of the journey, is one of the most interesting places in France. Its chateaux and churches are among the most exquisite architectural monuments that remain from the days of Norman supremacy. Here was born and lived the great Norman conqueror, the foremost man of his time, the victor at Hastings, and the man whose influence was greatest in securing for England the harmonized beginnings of a great nation. A large part of this volume is devoted to a history of the town and the conquests of William. The famous Falaise horse fair, an institution dating from the eleventh century, and which has drawn audiences from all over the world, is one of the sights which Mrs. Dodd dwells upon at length, and makes one hunger for a chance to see all the sights which she so brilliantly pictures. The volume is profusely illustrated with excellent half-tone reproductions from recent French photographs, is printed on heavy calendered paper, and is bound in a handsome decorated cover.

Reform Apparently Hopeless.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

I desire most heartily to commend your editorial article in the issue of Jan. 5, "Concerning 'Higher' Education." It expressed in a large degree the thoughts that have been in my mind for years. Often I have been tempted to give them wider utterance than among my friends, but the apparent hopelessness of a reform movement in the direction indicated deterred me. I hope your exploitation of the important ideas referred to will result in not only encouraging Mr. Coler, but arousing others to a sense of the vital importance of the reform suggested.

JOHN PAUL.

He Gives a Few Interesting Incidents in His Career as an Author.

Turning over the leaves of Mr. Stedman's "New American Anthology" to see how many new poets he had turned up, I came on a bit of verse entitled "Little Wild Baby," that seemed to me out of the common, to which the name of Margaret Thomson Janvier was attached. Wondering if this were a sister or cousin of our late Ambassador to Provence, I turned to the "Biographical Notes," where I found that she was a sister—and this "note":

"The beautiful dramatic lyric given in this volume has been refused publication in The Century, Atlantic, Harper's, and other leading periodicals—on what grounds of either criticism or policy it would be difficult for a lover of genuine poetry to determine. (E. C. S.)"

For one—and I'm rather a lover of good poetry—I couldn't determine even after a second reading. One always suspects the presence of the microbe of immorality, or at least of impropriety, in what one doesn't exactly understand. But I found not a sign nor a wiggle of a microbe in this. Could it be because the baby was a Little Wild? Possibly. In any event I've given up the idea of writing a book I had in mind, to be entitled "Wild Babies I Have Known." As I've never known any really tame babies I couldn't change the title, and literature suffers in consequence.

A queer lot, they are, these editors—as the devil said of the Ten Commandments. But such thin partitions do the bounds divide between propriety and impropriety that one cannot blame editors for being careful. As an illustration of how innocently one may transgress and get called down from his supposed innocent heights, I wrote several years ago one of those dreamy, delicious, little bits of verse that poets from the day of Homer down have been wont to write when the family's out of postage stamps and washing soda. I entitled it, "Minerva's Bird." It ran thus:

> "I wooed in a wood:
> But the birds understood.
> When I said, 'I'll be true
> Forever to you!'
> An owl cried, 'To who?'
> And I fled from the wood—
> That bird understood!"

That the jingle was open to criticism on the score of intellectuality I was prepared to admit, but that in it I had written what could bring a blush to the cheek of even the most aged sinner never entered my mind. However, I sent it to a magazine edited by an Advisory Committee, and to me it came back with the following comment:

"Minerva's Bird" is witty, but Mr. So-and-so thinks the moral ambiguous, and certainly it has that flavor. The owl should have said 'To whom?' Perhaps you considered the propriety of doing this, but thought you would shatter grammar for rhyme. Think of this before sending it elsewhere."

I did "think of this"—and seriously—before sending it to the editress of a ladies' paper, who took it and printed it with a promptness which has made me ever since suspicious of her right to sit among the truly good. Yet she to this day stands before the world as a synonym of what is good in woman, and her pure verses unsuspected of taint trickle to the popular heart through various channels. But to my friend the editor I simply wrote that while I might mend the nocturnal habits of owls with a shotgun, their morals and grammar were beyond me. A fragmentary line from Pope seemed pat, "Answer him, ye owls."

In the main I've found editors kind and appreciative—even generous. But it seems to me that too much is expected of them. They are neither infallible nor omniscient. When one considers the multitude of manuscripts that they read every day—are compelled to read—it is a wonder that they do not oftener err. Tea tasters, I'm told, take a bite of cheese between tastings to distinctly separate flavors. Why would it not be a good idea for the editor to read something distinctive between each manuscript? A bit of Walt Whitman, for instance, between two Spring poems? I don't suggest the editor's taking a bit of mine in his mouth, not that he might run away with it, but lest he might shy.

But because one's an editor, it doesn't follow that he knows everything, notwithstanding a popular opinion to the contrary. In the Long Ago I myself was for several years an editor, and I knew much less then than now. Yet then my opinion on anything, from the merit of a poem to that of an invention for picking the fleas off a dog, carried ponderous weight. My voice was that of a clergyman with the sounding board of the pulpit behind him—it carried conviction to and through the chancel, nave, and aisles. In those days I was positive in my opinions. I'm less so now that I know more.

As a curious illustration of the fallibility of editorial criticism, (all these illustrations seem to resolve themselves into a sort of personal panorama,) I once addressed to a popular poet and friend some verses on finding him domiciled directly opposite the late Mr. Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth. In them occurred this couplet:

> And Jumbo answers from his cotton shroud
> Back to the joyous Apes that call to him aloud.

This I sent to the editor of a critical journal, who returned it kindly with the remark that it seemed rather long for his short columns; and, in any event, he didn't pay enough for poetry to make it worth while for any one to send verses to him. But he would call my attention to the faulty metre of one of the lines—the second one of the couplet quoted. I then sent the verses unchanged to the editor of a leading magazine, himself an eminent poet, and to the full as generous as appreciative. In accepting them he called my attention to something to which his attention had been directed by one of his assistants—a faulty line in one of the couplets; still the second one of the above couplet.

I could not forbear replying by sending the original couplet which I had boldly and almost bodily borrowed from "Childe Harold," and which I supposed was familiar to every schoolboy—for under the title of "A Storm Among the Alps" it runs in most of the school books from which we selected pieces "to speak":

> And Jura answers from her misty shroud
> Back to the joyous Alps that call to her aloud.

This, however, was a different case from that of the owls. Byron's morals one might mend. But his metre and versification I dared not meddle with.

But if one is occasionally astonished at what editors refuse, is not one equally at times surprised by what they accept? Authors are, in any event. I dare to say that scarcely a mail arrives at editorial rooms that does not contain an inquiry from some indignant and injured author as to how the editor can in justice accept and print such a bungling piece of work as that or this in his last number—(not infrequently mentioning something of mine)—and yet refuse the writer's really clever and infinitely better contribution? It never seems to enter the writer's mind that "availability" has a definite meaning. The piece, though good enough, may be too long—rarely too short. It may not be in the tone of the magazine to which it is offered. Radical faults of style (especially if it be verse and in Byronic metre) which the editor has not time to correct may prevent its acceptance. Or, and not an infrequent reason, there may already be in the safe, perhaps in proof—and have been there in patient waiting for months, if not for years—an article on the same subject and treating it in a nearly identical—of course it would be impossible to treat it in a better—manner.

That the personal equation enters so largely as is supposed into the acceptance or rejection of manuscript I do not believe. Indeed, I sometimes think it is a misfortune, if not a fault, to know editors. In a desire to be impartial and dismiss personal feeling altogether, the editor may err on the other side—as in an endeavor to stand up very straight one may fall over backward.

When I was advertising a machine no end of newspapers were sent me. My attention was once attracted by finding a little poem that pleased me occurrent in very many of them. I wrote the author, whom I well knew, my congratulations. He was a popular man and well liked by the editorial fraternity, most of whom he was acquainted with. To my surprise, he replied that the piece in question was refused by every editor of his acquaintance to whom he offered it. In despair he finally sent it to The American Agriculturist, and it was accepted. He did not get much for it—beyond getting copied. But he felt vindicated. Fertile of brain and fruitful of resource was that friend of mine! But why did not the Man with the Hoe find his way to The Agriculturist—which I suppose is printed on a Hoe press?

The Religion of Confucius.

WILLIAM C. DORNIN, Jr., New York, writes to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW: "In reading Minister Wu's recent lay sermon on the teachings of Confucius, one cannot fail to be struck by its significance with reference to a tendency, of modern religious thought. This is the direction of one's efforts toward the perfection of this life, a concern more of ethics, perhaps, than of religion in the strictor sense. It is the religion which the writings of out-of-door men reflect, and has been called the natural religion.

"It has been attacked as being atheistic in its tendency, but most unjustly, it seems to me. It condemns those unnatural forms of religion which left no room for the development of the entire community by 'eweetness and light'; the selfish doctrines of the Epicureans and Stoics, as well as the asceticism which drove the Brahmins into the wilderness and the mediaeval Christians into the monastic cell. Nor does it recommend the materialism of Omar's advice to 'take the cash and let the credit go.'

"It has its most dignified expression, perhaps, in Tennysoh's 'In Memoriam,' where the poet is content to live consistently in this life, in the trust that 'all things work together for good' and 'toward one far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves.'"

The late D. D. Wells gave us those two amusing books "Her Ladyship's Elephant" and "His Lordship's Leopard," and it now seems a bit like a diminuendo to see the announcement of "His Lordship's Puppy," by Theodora C. Elmslie, presented by the Penn Publishing Company of Philadelphia. The coincideace—or whatever else it may be—recalls to mind the circumstance of a sequel to Ibsen's "Doll's House," written by an Englishman, under the title of "The Doll's Home." Ibsen and his active English translator, Mr. William Archer, most vehemently protested. But, alas! under somewhat similar circumstances, Wells cannot.

JULIA MARLOWE

MISS MARLOWE
Disguised as a Boy
In
When Knighthood Was in Flower.

Will appear on the stage as Pepeeta, the gypsy girl, the heroine in Charles Frederic Goss's stirring American mid-century novel, "The Redemption of David Corson," when she finishes with the role of Mary Tudor in "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Thus, this actress, one of the best known and loved of American actresses, becomes identified with another of the strong literary successes of the past year, issued by The Bowen-Merrill Company, who also published "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Julia Marlowe says, "It is true that I have completed arrangements for the dramatic rights to 'The Redemption of David Corson.' The book is a good book with strong dramatic possibilities, and, best of all, it is an American book on an American subject. It is a noble story to tell and it ought to be told on the stage. The character of Pepeeta is an unusual one in fiction, and it seems to me it should be one of great strength and power in a play.

"The public is so appreciative of 'When Knighthood Was in Flower' that a long 'run' of it is assured, and I should not be thinking of another play at this time, but 'The Redemption of David Corson' is such a splendid novel and presents such strong possibilities for a beautiful and unusual play, that I felt I must secure it at once."

Seven thousand copies of "With Ring of Shield" have been sold in New York, Philadelphia and Boston. The romance is in its 12th thousand.

The spontaneous response to our advertisement of last Saturday was, to express it mildly, very gratifying.

We do not claim that this novel is the greatest of the century or decade, but we are earnest in expressing the belief that to the average man, woman or maiden it will appeal as a splendid, wholesome, infatuating historical romance of uncommon merit. ($1.50.)

Other books worth owning are Mistress Penwick, by Dutton Payne, ($1.50;) The Heart of the Dancer, by Percy White, ($1.50;) Nella, the Heart of the Army, by Phillip Verrill Mighels, ($1.25;) The Elusive Hildegarde, by the author of Warren Hyde, ($1.25;) and The Boarder of Argyle Place, by George Toile, ($1.25.)

A handsome cloth edition of An Englishwoman's Love Letters sent free of charge with every order received for one of the above books if mention is made of this advertisement. R. F. FENNO & COMPANY, 11 East 16th St., N. Y.

TALK OF AN EXTRA SESSION

Many Senators and Representatives Call at the White House.

PRESIDENT NON-COMMITTAL

Friends of the Subsidy Bill Believed to Favor the Plan—Philippine Debate Would Be Lengthy.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Diligent inquiry at the Capitol to-day fails to discover any strong expectation there that there is to be an extra session of Congress, and no understanding that the President has intimated that he looks for an extra session. The talk about an extra session is always heard just before the close of a short session, but, as a leading Republican Senator said this evening: "There is never an extra session of Congress except to meet some highly important political emergency." That emergency, he declared, did not appear to have presented itself.

"If," he continued, "such action is made necessary because of the failure of some particular bill now before Congress, there will be many other reasons for calling the special session, for, as now planned, there will be no more important legislation except the appropriation bills."

Quite a crowd of Senators and Representatives visited the White House this morning, and many of them endeavored to ascertain whether the report of the intention of the President to call an extra session was founded on fact. The President did not refer to the report, and to suggestions that he might ask the Fifty-seventh Congress to convene immediately after the departure of the Fifty-sixth he made no response that could be construed into assent.

All the appropriation bills will get through, although some of them may be hanging by the edge even on the morning of adjournment. That has happened before, and will happen every two years.

Senator Frye, who evidently had gained the impression that the President expected legislation on the Philippines resolution before adjournment, or by another Congress as soon as possible, admitted that if such legislation was imperative "at once" an extra session was indispensable. That, too, is the feeling of Senator Hanna; but hope that the Subsidy bill might get through at an extra session, if it were not restricted to a line of work, may inspire him with the hope that the extra session will be called by the President.

What was spoken of by a few persons as evidence that an extra session is to be called was the sending out by the Joint Committee on Printing, which prints the Congressional Directory, of requests to members-elect of the Fifty-seventh Congress to forward their biographical sketches to the committee for use in the Directory. Such requests are commonly not sent out until late in the Fall before a regular meeting of the new Congress, but it was explained by a member of the Committee on Printing that the requests had nothing to do with the report about a special session, but was made simply to guard against any contingency that might arise.

There was a diversity of opinion as to whether the Spooner resolution could be passed if it were presented now, but there was no doubt that time for the consideration of it could not be secured after next week.

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—That Senators regard seriously the prospect of an extra session of Congress in view of the President's urgent recommendation of legislation concerning the Philippine Islands was evidenced to-day by the activity of those who desire to avoid an extra session. The speculation concerning the probability of a called session was rendered more definite by the fact that Senators known to be generally well informed concerning the President's plans joined in the discussion of the outlook.

Careful inquiry also developed the fact that the President has canvassed the subject with a few Senators. He does not appear to have indicated any fixed determination of issuing a call, but rather to have consulted them as to the advisability of such a proceeding. In all such instances he seems to have had the necessity of Philippine legislation in view, and Senators generally express the opinion that, in case a meeting is called, the Philippine question will receive the lion's share of attention.

The urgency of the Administration on this point is due to the importunity of the Taft Commission, the members of which appear to have supplemented their official recommendations for early action with private letters, not only to the President, but to members of the Cabinet and Senators as well. They insist upon the necessity of early recognition of the civil rights of the Filipinos, and of a government for them other than military in form.

Senators who have concerned themselves with these matters have canvassed the Senate somewhat to-day as to the possibility of getting legislation before the 4th of March in the line of that contemplated by the Spooner bill, but they have received little encouragement. One Senator, who has given much attention to the Philippine question, said that any legislation attempted on the subject of a government for the Philippines necessarily would cause prolonged debate. "The Senate would talk a month on a resolution declaring that the Philippines are the Philippines," he said, as an illustration of his idea of the hopelessness of securing legislation before the conclusion of the present session.

The Senators who are not in favor of the Ship Subsidy bill are especially opposed to an extraordinary session, and will do all they can to prevent the calling of one. Upon the whole, the most that can be said is that both the Executive and the Congress are discussing the wisdom of an extra session, and that no conclusion has been reached on the point. They admit the urgency of a number of questions which they know cannot be disposed of at this session. At the same time they hesitate seriously before the responsibility of a called session, which it is generally believed would continue, if called at all, until well into the Summer.

THE CUBAN CONSTITUTION.

Washington Officials and Congressman Not Ready Yet to Comment on the Instrument.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Very few members of the Senate or the House have yet read the Cuban Constitution. It has been looked over in a general and curious way, without attempt at analysis, and no member of either committee having Cuban affairs under consideration would venture a critical opinion of its provisions. Several Senators contend that Congress will not be called upon to act in any way upon the Constitution. Others admit the correctness of this view to the extent of saying that Congressional action will not be compulsory, but they advance the idea that the President will desire to have Congress share the responsibility of whatever step may be taken with reference to the Cuban Government. They also suggest the possibility of some things in the Cuban Constitution which may require close scrutiny.

"The Cubans have been using the better part of three months in the preparation of their Constitution," said a member of the Insular Affairs Committee of the House, "and may be assumed to have put some thought into it. We have not yet had a day to read it, or to find out why it is just what it is. It would be presumptuous in me, and I believe I utter the opinions of other members of the committee, to pretend to gain an opinion worth expressing on so important a matter in half a day."

A Republican Senator said he did not care to be quoted as holding an opinion about the Cuban Constitution until he knew more about it. He did not believe that the President expected the present Congress to act upon it. That would look too much like acting upon impulse, and no one who knew the President believed for a moment that he was impulsive or that he desired the Congress to dispose of the Cuban Constitution in an impulsive manner.

Secretary Root said that he had received something from Gen. Wood on the subject, but that he was not ready to express any opinion about it. He could not even say whether or not he would, when he transmitted it to Congress, send a memorandum with it. War Department officials say that it is impossible for them to express opinions on a document which is simply a subject for analysis and future discussion.

The Secretary of War is anxious to have the Cuban question out of the way, and would be glad to have the Constitution passed on at this session; but he evidently has no expectation that it will be. Even if it could be, it will be a long time before the United States can remove its troops and take its hands off.

A War Department official recalled the fact to-day that when the municipal elections were held in Cuba the date had to be postponed after the American Government had fixed it, because the Cubans were not ready. An election so important as this one will certainly not take place without considerable delay, even should the Constitution be approved, and the United States will undoubtedly wait until the new Government is installed and in working order before withdrawing.

ERIE ROAD EXPECTS A STRIKE.

Agencies Opened in This City to Engage Machinists and Boilermakers in Case of Emergency.

The reports of an impending general strike in the shops of the Erie Railroad obtained more confirmation yesterday by the opening of another agency in this city for the employment of men to take the places of strikers. This agency is on the first floor of 62 Greenwich Street, where two or three men were employed all day taking names of men who wanted to work as machinists. The machinists as well as the boilermakers are expected to strike in all the shops of the Erie Railroad. Every applicant for work was told that a strike was expected "between New York and Chicago," and that the men were wanted to take the places of strikers. Preparations had evidently been made by the agents to spend their nights in the office so as to be ready for work at a minute's notice, as a double bed and several cots were erected.

The principal agent, to whom every one was referred, refused to give his name or say anything to reporters. He would neither admit nor deny that the men were wanted on account of the threatened strike on the Erie Railroad.

Business Agent Ostrander of the New York District of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers made public the demands of the men yesterday. They were prepared by the Brotherhood, and are as follows:

To the officers of the Erie Railroad Company:

Dear Sirs: We, the boilermakers and flue setters, desire the following grievances adjusted:

First—The abolition of piece work.

Second—That the standard wages be established at 27½ cents per hour.

Third—That time and a half be allowed for all overtime, Sundays and holidays, central standard time, from 12 M. to 5 P. M.; sun time from 7 P. M. to 6 A. M.

Fourth—That there be one apprentice for every five boilermakers, exclusive of rivet boys.

Fifth—That the Erie Railroad Company shall not discriminate in any way against any one who may represent his fellow-workmen, acting on a committee to adjust grievances or any other unsettled matter pertaining to the boilermakers and the company.

Business Agent Ostrander said that, including machinists, about 3,000 people altogether would be affected by the strike in the shops. As soon as the boilermakers quit work the machinists are likely to go out, he said.

Horace V. Green, who is engaging boilermakers to take the places of strikers at an agency he has established in the United States Hotel, Fulton and Pearl Streets, was as uncommunicative yesterday as he was on Friday as to where the strike would take place, but would neither admit nor deny that the men were wanted for the Erie Railroad shops. He was taking no men, he said, except those who were competent and ready to start work if necessary at a moment's notice.

HANDSOME RESIDENCE BURNED.

E. H. Peck and Family Narrowly Escape from Flames at Stamford.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., Jan. 26.—The handsome Colonial cottage of Edward H. Peck, a New York real estate broker, was burned at an early hour this morning. The fire was discovered about 2 o'clock by a colored servant girl, who was awakened by the stifling smoke. She aroused Mr. Peck, who in turn awakened his wife and their three children, together with Mrs. Peck's sister and her daughter and Bertie Hall, a friend, all of whom were asleep in the house.

They had no time to dress, and were glad to escape with their lives. Adjoining houses and underbrush took fire, but resolute work by Mr. Peck and his coachman and a number of Stamford firemen prevented the flames spreading. The loss is approximated at $150,000, and is partially covered by insurance.

HEAVY GALE AT CAPE COD.

Huge Waves Tear Out Large Sections of the High Bluff.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 26.—The storm which passed over this section yesterday kicked up one of the worst seas on record on the Cape Cod coast, and incidentally tore away large sections of shore. A dispatch from Chatham says that in some places many feet of the high bluffs were washed away by a single wave, and in other places the sand dunes were undermined and are tumbling down this morning, the whole barren waste showing signs in many places that it was at times entirely submerged.

The members of the life-saving crews had great difficulty in covering their patrols last night, and much danger was experienced by them. At times they were waist deep in the rushing water, and again would be driven high up on the mainland to save their own lives. The millions of particles of fine sand which were hurled by the blast into their faces served to make the night more hideous.

BOSTONIAN WEDS A MARQUISE.

Major E. H. Eldredge Brings Home His Bride from Italy.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 26.—Major Edward H. Eldredge has returned to Boston from Italy with his bride, the Marquise Peruzzi di Medici. They arrived to-day and went immediately to their home at 23 West Cedar Street. It was three months ago that Major Eldredge sailed for Italy, and soon after his departure the news of his approaching marriage produced a sensation in Boston society. The wedding occurred on Nov. 29, their being two ceremonies as is customary in Italy. Afterward the couple traveled over the southern part of Italy, and on Jan. 10 sailed from Genoa for New York.

Mrs. Eldredge is a descendant of a very old and famous Florentine family. Her mother was a daughter of W. W. Story, the sculptor. A year ago she visited Boston, and it was then that the Major lost his heart to her. While she was in Boston her father, the Marquis Peruzzi di Medici, who was a distinguished member of the Italian Court, died, and it was Major Eldredge who broke the news to the Marquise. Mrs. Eldredge, who is destined to occupy a high position in Boston society, is a very beautiful woman.

DR. W. L. SIMPSON A SUICIDE

A Physician Shoots Himself in the Hotel Gerard.

He Was Well-to-Do, but Is Said to Have Suffered from a Chronic Ailment.

Dr. William L. Simpson, a specialist in obstetrics, and who was associated with Dr. H. F. Harvey in the medical firm of Harvey & Simpson, the office of which is at 22 West Twenty-seventh Street, committed suicide at noon yesterday in his apartments at the Hotel Gerard. The carriage was waiting at the door of the hotel at the time, ready to take him and his wife out for a drive.

His wife had finished dressing for the trip earlier than Dr. Simpson, and she was waiting for her husband in the reception room of their apartments, when she heard the pistol shot in her husband's room. When she hurried to ascertain what had happened she found Dr. Simpson lying on his bed, fully dressed, save for his coat, with a bullet wound in his right temple and the revolver still in his hand.

Dr. Alexander Abrahams, the house physician, was hurriedly called. He found that nothing could be done for the wounded man. Word reached the police about 2 o'clock that a man had shot himself in the Hotel Gerard, and Detective Lyons of the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station took possession of several letters found in the apartment. Coroner Zucca says there were four of these, in which Dr. Simpson gives the reasons for his act, and also gives instructions regarding the adjustment of his affairs.

The Coroner would not reveal the contents of the letters. It is known, however, that three of them were directed to his wife, Mabelle O. Simpson, and the fourth to Dr. Harvey, his business associate. The letters were unsealed, and in some way several persons connected with the case got a glimpse of them. Two of them were merely notes left in the room, calling attention to the two others, and indicating that they would give the information which would be desired because of his act.

The most significant statement in the letters is that which speaks of the insurance on Dr. Simpson's life. He is said to have been a policyholder in several companies, but speaks of a five-thousand-dollar policy which he held in the Equitable Life Assurance Society, and which he desired to go to his wife, Mabelle Simpson.

He gives a reason for his desire, and this reason hints at a woman in the case. Several of those who saw the letters asserted last evening that this woman had greatly annoyed Dr. Simpson and that he seemed fearful that she might make some claim upon his estate. Coroner Zucca, when confronted with these facts, said:

"Yes, Dr. Simpson did speak of a woman in one of the letters, but I don't think she amounted to very much."

The letter to Dr. Harvey, according to those who saw it, points at financial trouble Dr. Simpson claims to have been in. At the Hotel Gerard, however, an entirely different story regarding the Simpsons is told. The apartments on the seventh floor are the most expensive in the house.

The present management of the house took charge about a year ago, but the Simpsons had been there about a year at that time. For a year past Dr. Simpsons has been a sufferer from sciatica, and was not practicing his profession very actively. He was believed to have an income which enabled him and his wife to live in easy circumstances.

This is borne out by the statement of several persons who rushed into the room in which Dr. Simpson shot himself, and who claim that, during her lamentations because of her husband's act, she referred to the fact that he had no financial reasons for committing suicide, as he was in receipt of an income of between $1,000 to $1,500 per month.

The Simpsons came to New York from Boston. They are both said to be well connected there. They have no children, and were believed last evening not to have any near relatives in this city. The relatives in Boston were notified of Dr. Simpson's death.

Dr. Harvey, associated with Dr. Simpson, said that his partner was about thirty-eight years old. He said that Dr. Simpson's wife was Mabelle Sinney of Boston, before her marriage, and that she, as well as her husband, were well-to-do.

Dr. Harvey corroborated the alleged assertion of Mrs. Simpson regarding her husband's income. He said that the deceased had been during the years he knew him the recipient of an income of about $1,000 a month, or more, and that it came from Bangor, Me. He said that Dr. Simpson's ailment was appendicitis.

Dr. Simpson, he said, had secretly complained very much, and he had heard him say within the last few days after complaining of severe pains:

"I wish I were dead."

Through a misunderstanding, Coroner's Physician Williams, who was assigned to the case, did not reach the Hotel Gerard to make his investigations until about 7 o'clock. Before that time Mrs. Joseph J. Curran, an undertaker with an office at 464 West Fifty-first Street, had been given permission to embalm the body, and waited for the Coroner to complete his investigations so that the body could be removed from the hotel.

One of Mrs. Curran's employes said that the wound was in the right temple, and that the revolver which Dr. Simpson used was lying beside the body, and was of rather small calibre.

Manager Hamblen of the Hotel Gerard spoke highly of Dr. Simpson's deportment as a guest. He said that he was of a very quiet disposition and talked little with the other guests in the house.

Detective Lyons and those of the hotel attachés who rushed into Dr. Simpson's room after he had shot himself said that a mirror had been used by the suicide to insure correct aim.

BOSTON, Jan. 26.—Dr. Simpson was the proprietor at one time of five lying-in hospitals in various parts of the city. The returns from his profession were very large, his own estimate placing them at over $25,000 yearly. Some four years ago he was forced to leave Boston under circumstances which are said to have precluded his continuance in practice here.

The doctor was a regular physician, being a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society for many years. He was born in Vassalborough, Me., forty-two years ago, and was graduated from the medical department of Bowdoin College in 1879.

DEATH RATE OF G. A. R.

Department of Illinois Lost 3 Per Cent. of Membership in 1900.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—More members of the Grand Army of the Republic in Illinois died in 1900 than in any other year since the organization was founded. All records in the mortuary line were broken, and the ranks of the veterans were materially thinned. Assistant Adjt. Gen. Partridge has just completed the death roll of the Department of Illinois for 1900, and the statistics show that 720 members died during the year. This is a death rate of 3 per cent., and the largest in the history of the organization.

The largest number of deaths occurred in George H. Thomas Post, No. 51, and U. S. Grant Post, No. 206, each having 26. Outside of Chicago, the post with the largest death rate was Post No. 101, of Rockford, which lost 21 of its members. In Cook County there were 125 deaths among the different posts.

MOB THREATENS MRS. NATION.

Her Evening in Topeka a Lively One—Beaten by a Woman with a Broomstick.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 26.—Mrs. Carrie Nation caused a great flurry among the saloon keepers of Topeka to-night, and as a result was roughly handled by a mob. Mrs. Nation arrived in Topeka at 6:40 o'clock this evening and immediately hunted up a newspaper reporter with a request that she be shown some of the leading saloons of the city. Two newspaper men volunteered to pilot her around. She said she did not wish to begin a smashing crusade, but wanted to talk to the liquor sellers.

The keepers of the saloons had been apprised of her intentions, and when she arrived at Ed Myers's place, on Kansas Avenue, she was confronted by the wife of the proprietor, who rained blow after blow on her head with a broomstick, while Myers stood by and encouraged the effort. By this time a large crowd had gathered, among whom were numerous sympathizers with Mrs. Nation. Nobody attempted to interfere, and soon Mrs. Myers stopped her assault.

Mrs. Nation said she was not hurt by her experience in the least. "What does a broomstick amount to?" she inquired, "to one who has been used to rawhides, rocks, and rotten eggs? That woman should be immediately arrested, though. Where is an officer?" A policeman then appeared on the scene for the purpose of protecting Mrs. Nation. He commanded the mob to stand back and started up the street with Mrs. Nation, followed by hooting, jeering rowdies, who were sympathizers with the joint keepers.

Mrs. Nation at last found refuge in the editorial rooms of The Topeka Capital, where the crowd was not allowed to enter. Here she detailed the story of her experience, and gave her plans for the future. She asked how many "joints" there were in Topeka. On being informed that there were more than a hundred, she threw up her hands in horror, and said the condition must not last any longer. She added: "I would go out against these 'joints' to-night if I had some women to go with me. But I will rest for a day or two. Something will be done here yet. You may count on that."

Mrs. Nation then inquired where she could go to swear out a warrant against the woman who assaulted her. Policeman Luster, who was present, volunteered to take her to the City Attorney's office. Mrs. Nation readily consented to accompany the officer on his assurance that he would protect her.

As Mrs. Nation and the policeman stepped from the front door of The Capital Building, the crowd which had been waiting in the street surged toward her. The policeman instantly drew his pistol and shouted above the uproar: "I am here to protect this woman, and I will shoot the first man who makes a move toward her. Stand back, you villains!"

The crowd fell over each other in getting out of the way, and Mrs. Nation proceeded to the office of the Assistant City Attorney, where the warrant was sworn out. The crowd attempted to enter the office building, but was kept away by the police with drawn pistols.

Mrs. Nation addressed the mob for a few moments and then gave her attention. She gave an explanation of her action and said she was a law-abiding citizen whenever she raided a joint, as a joint had no rights.

Chief of Police Stahl is an ardent temperance worker and he will order his officers to protect Mrs. Nation from mob violence whenever necessary. She will deliver an address to-morrow night in one of the largest churches of the city.

IMITATED MRS. NATION.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 26.—Shortly before noon to-day six roughs entered the saloon kept by Michael Schwartz, at the corner of Goodwin and Washington Streets. They called for dinner, but before Schwartz served them one of the men suddenly said:

"Let's imitate Mrs. Nation."

Without another word the six men started in at once to demolish the place. They hurled pool balls through windows and against mirrors, smashed glassware with the cues, and threw chairs and other fixtures about. The proprietor and Louis Goldstein and Harris Garrison tried to stop the row. A pool ball hit Goldstein in the eye and laid him out. Garrison was hit on the head with a chair.

The noise of the fight caused a crowd to gather and the street was blocked when the patrol wagon dashed up with a half dozen officers. Paul and Barnet Setron and Sol Epner were arrested, but the others escaped. Goldstein and Garrison made charges of atrocious assault and battery against the prisoners and they were committed to jail.

THE CZAR AT ST. PETERSBURG.

His Return Signalized by Great Rejoicing on the Part of the Populace.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 26.—The Czar and Czarina reached St. Petersburg today. Their arrival was made the occasion for great public rejoicings. The city was decorated profusely with flags and evergreens, and an arch had been erected in front of the railway station, where the Dowager Empress, the Czarovitch, the Grand Dukes and Grand Duchesses, and officials greeted their Majesties.

Amid the cheers of the populace the Czar and Czarina proceeded to the Kazan Cathedral, where they were received by the Metropolitan and clergy. Thence they drove through the Newski Prospect, which was lined with troops, to the palace, in front of which students and school children were grouped. Throughout their progress to the palace the bells of the various churches were rung.

Later their Majesties visited the tomb of Alexander III. To-night the palace and the city are splendidly illuminated.

KILLED FRIEND WHILE BOXING.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 26.—As the result of a friendly boxing match between George R. Ainsworth, a Harvard student, and Curtiss L. Crane of Brookline, Mass., his most intimate friend, the latter is lying dead at the Cambridge morgue. The accident occurred in Ainsworth's room, in Craigie Hall, Harvard College, at 3:30 o'clock. Crane had been invited over from his home in Brookline, to give his chum lessons in boxing, and the two were sparring in the presence of four of Ainsworth's college friends. After they had been at it about three minutes, in which the Harvard man had received by far the worst treatment, he struck Crane a blow on the face, and the boy fell back against the mantel unconscious. His arm dropped limply to his side and he sank quickly to the floor. Dr. Bailey, the college physician, was called, but when he arrived, nine minutes later, the man was dead.

Ainsworth and Crane lived side by side in Brookline and had been chums from their earliest boyhood days. Both come from wealthy families. Crane was a tall, handsome fellow, and his friends say they never knew that he had had trouble with his heart. He was quite an expert in boxing, and had given Ainsworth frequent lessons in boxing before to-day. That his death was not caused by the blow given him by his friend is loudly asserted by all the men who witnessed the accident and by Dr. Bailey, who was the first to arrive after the young man's death. Dr. Bailey says that he does not believe that the blow was sufficient even to have thrown Crane to the floor.

Ainsworth has not been held by the police, but he has given to them the following statement:

"At about 3:30 o'clock I was sparring with Mr. Crane, and we had sparred about three minutes, when I struck him with the back of my gloved hand across the face. He sank against the mantel, and then to the hearth. He was unconscious. A doctor was sent for, and we worked over him for half an hour. Another doctor came, and they both pronounced him dead. Then the police were notified."

GOV. ODELL CONFERS WITH SENATOR PLATT

His Legislative Programme to be Carried Out.

POLICE BILL TO BE PASSED

Says that the Legislature Will Enact the Measure if Mayor Van Wyck Should Veto It.

Gov. Odell was at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday and held conferences with the Republican leaders of the Legislature and Senator Platt.

The legislative programme, as outlined by Gov. Odell in his message, is to be carried out, although several important measures will probably be amended as a result of the talks held yesterday. At the end of the political talks, Gov. Odell said:

"I am satisfied that all of the more important recommendations in my message to the Legislature will be adopted. Some of them, perhaps, are not vitally important, and it would make no difference if they were not made into laws. The important recommendations in the message will become laws."

When asked about police legislation, Gov. Odell said that there had been no change in the situation, and that the Single-headed Police bill would be passed.

"When will the bill probably become a law?" was asked.

"As soon as the Legislature passes the bill I will sign it, and it then goes to Mayor Van Wyck. He can hold the bill for fifteen days or he can approve it at once."

"If Mayor Van Wyck vetoes the bill, what then?" was asked.

"The Legislature would be very likely to pass the bill over the veto of Mayor Van Wyck," said Odell with a smile.

The Republican politicians about headquarters yesterday were discussing means by which the appointment of the Police Commissioner under the new law would be taken out of Mayor Van Wyck's hands. It was decided yesterday, however, that no feasible plan could be settled on to accomplish this object.

In his talks with the Republican politicians yesterday, Gov. Odell made it plain that his recommendations for the reorganization of the Charities, Prisons, Labor, and Forest, Fish and Game Commissions would have to be passed promptly, and that it was in the intertst of the party to pass these bills without delay. There were efforts made to have Gov. Odell retreat from the stand he has taken in regard to the bill to reorganize the State Charities system.

A petition is being circulated throughout the State opposing the proposed reorganization plan.

"Does the petition circulated protesting against the reorganization of the State Charities Department change your views on the subject?" was asked.

Gov. Odell said decisively:

"I guess I won't discuss that."

The question of the repeal of the special jury law was also talked of yesterday. Many New York lawyers favor the retention of the Special Commissioner of Jurors, and it was brought to the attention of Gov. Odell that Recorder Goff and W. M. K. Olcott held firmly to the opinion that the special jury law was necessary to obtain highly intelligent jurors to try difficult murder cases like that of Molineux, and also for technical cases like those against the New York bucket shops, which prosecutions were carried on by Mr. Olcott.

The lawyers who saw Gov. Odell yesterday said that the reason why the Special Commissioner of Jurors had not more work to do was because the constitutionality of the law had been established only about eighteen months. Gov. Odell holds that the place is a sinecure and should be abolished. It was stated to Gov. Odell that seven or eight panels of jurors had been drawn under this special law in New York City. "Do you still favor wiping out the Special Jury Commission?" was asked of Gov. Odell.

"I am still of the opinion that this commission can be done away with without impairing the efficiency of the courts."

Opposition developed yesterday to Gov. Odell's bill imposing a 1 per cent. tax on the actual value of the shares of National, State, and private banks, and also the bill placing a 1 per cent. tax on the capital, surplus, and undivided profits of trust companies.

Gov. Odell would not discuss this matter yesterday.

Senator Platt, when asked yesterday afternoon about the Mayoralty situation, said: "I think very well of several of the men who have been mentioned as possible candidates for Mayor, but to say that I have settled on any one man in particular is absurd. I will agree to support any man who is named by the anti-Tammany caucus."

The members of the Legislature from New York County met yesterday afternoon and had another conference regarding pending legislation. Executive Chairman Ten Eyck was asked about the conference, and said:

"We met to look after the interests of this city, and to see that objectionable measures are not put through. One thing we oppose is that feature of the Raines Bureau of Elections bill which provides for redistricting the city. It would cost the city $60,000 and the Republican organization $17,000, and would not do a bit of good. We favor the idea of making the Election Commissioners elective instead of appointive, but that's the only good feature of the Raines bill.

Gov. Odell will return to Albany to-day.

SENATOR DAVID MARTIN ILL.

Philadelphia Republican Leader Suffering from Pneumonia.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 26.—State Senator David Martin, leader of the insurgent Republicans in this city, is seriously ill at his home, in Torresdale, with pneumonia, the result of an attack of the grip. When at Harrisburg recently he contracted a cold, which resulted in the grip. He remained in his home, on the advice of his physician, and it was thought that he would be able to attend to his legislative duties in about a week or ten days.

Early this morning, however, he had a relapse, and his physician told the members of the Senator's family that he was sufering from an attack of pneumonia. his left lung being affected.

OPPOSE NEW WATER SCHEME.

Connecticut People Up in Arms Against Plan to Dam Ten Mile River.

Special to The New York Times.

WINSTED, Conn., Jan. 26.—According to information received here to-day from Gaylordsville, near the New York State line, Connecticut people will strenuously oppose the plan to dam the Ten Mile River, which flows into this State and is a tributary of the Housatonic River, in order to give New York City an additional water supply. For weeks sixteen surveyors have been at work getting out a detailed map.

The scheme is to construct a huge dam above the mouth of the Ten Mile River of sufficient height to flood an area eighteen miles long by four wide, and to build a dam at Bull's Bridge, in this county, to carry the waters of the Housatonic through a canal into the large reservoir. If the concern, which is said to be in opposition to the Ramapo Water Company, is allowed to do this, Webatuck, and part of Wassaic, N. Y., will be submerged, and the New York Central Railroad will be obliged to change the tracks of its Harlem Division.

Manufacturers and others deriving power from these rivers are up in arms against the project, which, if carried out, will cost many millions of dollars.

FROM 46 CENTS TO $120 A WEEK

Remarkable Success of a Harvard Student in Increasing His Income—All from a Tub of Butter.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 26.—An evening paper tells this romantic story of one of the most promising young business men of Boston, who achieved all his remarkable success while a student at Harvard. Clarence Bush came to Harvard from a farm in Western New York four years ago. He had no money. For a time he lived in an attic and boarded himself on 46 cents a week. To-day he is earning a salary of upward of $7,000, lives in Ware Hall, the millionaires' dormitory, and is rapidly becoming recognized as one of the leading produce men in Boston.

When Bush came to Harvard he had only a strong body to depend upon. His family had money, but was opposed to his getting an education, and a wealthy uncle, who had at first promised to see his nephew through college, went back on his bargain after Bush had been here a few weeks, because he thought the young man would become lazy and lose his grit.

He took an attic which cost him 50 cents a week. He lived on gruel, sugar, and hot water, and his total expenses for that year, outside of his term bill, amounted to only $75.

One day an old aunt, hearing that he was boarding himself, sent him a tub of butter. It was too expensive to eat, he thought, so he sold it.

That was the beginning of his success. Within three months after he had begun his canvass he had nearly 1,000 customers. At first he had delivered the butter himself in a basket thrown over his shoulder; now he sent for his ponies from home, and six months after he had five teams busy at work.

In January, 1900, when he had a business that amounted in some months to $10,000 and $12,000, he sold out to Brigham of Cambridge and became the New England agent of a New York butter company.

His work in every department has always been of a high grade, and, in spite of the vast amount of work which he has done, he has kept in the best of health.

PALISADE PLANS IN DANGER.

Most New Jersey Legislators Manifest Lack of Interest, and Some Are Hostile.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, Jan. 26.—A canvass of the legislators, particularly those from Central and Southern New Jersey, shows that there is need of an aggressive campaign of education, if the New York and New Jersey Joint Commission on the Palisades expects to get a particle of support, either morally or financially.

The prejudice that exists is as fixed as the rocks of the Palisades are now, and worse still, there is a widespread disinclination to be informed on the subject. The newspapers in the lower part of the State have treated the proposition flippantly and have prepared the legislators to resist any attempt that will be made to secure an appropriation for the Palisade scheme.

Scarcely any of the legislators here seem to understand, or even care to understand, just what the Joint State Commission will ask for. It is known that they are coming for something, for Gov. Voorhees, in his message, has commended the work of the commission and praised its cause.

A lack of sentiment is at the bottom of the disinterestedness. Others fear that New Jersey will be entrapped by New York into a scheme that will be a perpetual drain on the Treasury. Many think that it is purely a local matter and belongs more to individuals than to the whole State, making the argument that people in Cape May and Salem Counties get no good out of the Palisades and have no interest one way or the other, whether they stand or go into stone roads. Nearly all the legislators south of Middlesex were canvassed, and there was not a favorable expression, while one-half of them were opposed to the scheme.

There is a good feeling among the Democratic members from Hudson, but the Essex delegation is divided, both as to sentiment and as to the wisdom of spending any money for such project at a time when all expenditures are critically considered and have a political value. Union is indifferent, so is Morris and all down the line. Bergen has only three votes in the two branches, and this is regarded as the Palisade county. Out of the eighty-one votes in the two branches, not more than twenty could be considered safe at this stage of the legislative session for the most modest kind of a Palisade bill.

THE DELPIT DIVORCE CASE.

Attorneys for the Woman Hold that Ecclesiastical Court's Ruling is Void.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Quebec, Jan. 26.—The Delpit divorce case has advanced another stage. The counsel for Mme. Delpit have filed their answer in law to the allegations of the petition filed by Delpit before the Superior Court for ratification of the ecclesiastical court's judgment declaring the marriage null and void. They ask that the petition be rejected for the following reasons:

First—Because, even if the parties were Catholic at the date of said marriage, according to law the marriage of two Catholics can be validly solemnized by a Protestant minister.

Second—Because, according to law, the sentence of the ecclesiastical tribunal alleged in the declaration is null and of no effect, inasmuch as it pretends to nullify the lien of said marriage.

Third—Because, according to law, no ecclesiastical tribunal is competent or has a jurisdiction to pronounce the annulment of marriage as to the lien.

Fourth—Because the conclusions of the declaration do not flow from the allegations of such declarations.

MORMON INSTRUCTOR INSANE.

He Had Fasted and Prayed for Three Days, Hoping for Divine Aid in Solving a Mechanical Problem.

Special to The New York Times.

SALT LAKE, Utah, Jan. 26.—While hearing a class in manual training, Alfred T. Bond, an instructor in the normal department of the University of Utah, became violently insane. He had fasted and prayed for three days. His prayers were for help to solve a perplexing mechanical problem on which he was working. He is a Mormon, and he was confident of Divine aid if he fasted and prayed enough.

It was noticed that Mr. Bond acted rather strangely, and finally he spent an entire night in the manual training shop on his knees. This brought on the climax. He heard several classes in an abstracted manner, and finally broke into ravings which frightened the students and broke up the class.

SOUVENIR FOR THE PRESIDENT.

Ballot Box Used by California Electors Presented to Mr. McKinley.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The members of the California delegation in Congress, accompanied by S. M. Shortridge and Col. George Stone of California, called at the White House to-day and presented to the President a unique and richly ornamented ballot box, the gift of the California Electors. It was used by them in casting the vote of the State. On the back of the base is a shield inscribed:

"Presented to the Hon. William McKinley by the Electors, Samuel M. Shortridge, William J. Barrett, John W. Ryan, Harold T. Power, William R. Davis, Christian B. Rode, Frank McGowan, Warren R. Porter, and James McFadden."

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE FUNERAL OF THE QUEEN

The Pageant in London Is to be a Splendid One.

KING TO LEAD THE PROCESSION

The Great Functionaries of the Kingdom and a Large Body of Troops to Take Part in It.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The preparations for Queen Victoria's funeral are gradually assuming definite form. It promises to be the most tremendous pageant of the generation. The influx of members of royal families and representatives of foreign countries will be so wholly unprecedented that the Court officials are finding it difficult to provide suitable accommodation, the royal berta, to visit Portsmouth and meet Crown Prince Frederick William.

The Emperor drove in a closed carriage, before the town was astir, and only half a dozen persons witnessed his departure from Trinity Pier.

On the return of the Alberta, at 11:20 A. M., His Majesty and the Crown Prince were standing on the bridge of the boat. The Duke of Connaught boarded the yacht and welcomed them.

So soon as Emperor William debarked his flag at the masthead was lowered. Carriages were in waiting for the party. Emperor William, who looked decidedly pale and careworn, and the Crown Prince sat side by side in the leading landau, with the Duke of Connaught vis-a-vis. The party drove to Osborne House, returning the silent salutes of the bareheaded groups along the route.

The German Imperial yacht Hohenzollern arrived here yesterday. The suite of Emperor William and the crew of the Hohenzollern viewed the Queen's coffin in the afternoon. His German Majesty's suite reside on the Hohenzollern, which is now connected with Osborne House by telephone.

John R. Drexel's steam yacht Sultana, with her flags half-masted, arrived off Cowes at 3:50 P. M. She dipped the Stars and Stripes to the British craft and the Hohenzollern, and anchored near the royal yacht.

THE KING TO THE FORCES.

His Messages Thought to Bear Some Resemblance to the Kaiser's.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The King in his message to the navy, which, it is ordered, shall be read upon all ships, thanks the navy for its renowned services during his mother's reign. The message concludes with an expression of confident reliance upon the unfailing loyalty of the navy to him.

Similar sentiments are promulgated in an army order.

It is suggested by some observers that the King in these communications is taking somewhat the tone of Emperor William.

TRADE GREATLY AFFECTED.

Chance for American Exporters of Black Materials.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The after effect of Queen Victoria's death on business is vital and remarkably widespread. It particularly affects dealers in all sorts of clothing and furnishings and all goods connected with amusements, festivities, theatricals, and dinners. Black is the only color displayed in the shop windows throughout the empire. The milliners' stores are filled with black bonnets, and other establishments have a funereal show of black clothes, gloves, neckties, and hats.

In London every Englishman who can afford it is wearing black clothes, a black necktie, and black gloves. The women are all attired in black, and the officers of the army and navy have crape bands on their arms. All army flags are draped with black.

Naturally there will be loss on stocks of colored goods, particularly in the case of London firms accustomed to depend on Court and society business. On the other hand, dealers in black goods will be able to sell their entire stocks at a very great profit. In fact, a famine in black goods threatens the British markets and offers an opportunity for American enterprise. British orders are already exhausting the resources of the French and German manufacturers. It is said that Lyons, Dresden, and other Continental centres are already refusing more orders. One of the principal wholesale firms in London has, it is announced, already declined 2,000 orders. The same story comes from other factories, which are running night and day to supply demands. Says one wholesale dealer:

"It is difficult to say how and where the demand will end. Assuming that the period of mourning will be prolonged for whole seasons, trade will be revolutionized and some branches will be paralyzed."

AUTHORS OF "FAKES" PUNISHED.

Court Officials Secure Recall of Two Reporters from Cowes.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The Court officials have been exceedingly active in running to earth false reports regarding the events at Osborne House, like the fictitious deathbed scenes, and have already secured the recall of two correspondents. They are now investigating the sources of a premature announcement of her Majesty's death, published in America, for the purpose of acting against the authors. Having access to all the telegraph and telephone messages they have discovered that no report was sent from Cowes before the Queen's death, therefore it must have been "faked" in London or America.

Sober English journalism was shocked at the display around Osborne House, on the part of the correspondents of the new English sheets, of what The Times terms "American methods." The scene before the lodge gate, following the solemn announcement of the Queen's death certainly did not fit the occasion. A crowd of reporters assembled with cabs, horses, and bicycles. Hardly had the words, "Her Majesty has passed away," fallen from the official's lips when the reporters and messengers, with a wild whoop, started to race down the steep hill, half a mile, to the telegraph, some of them bawling to their assistants below: "The Queen is dead."

One English reporter sent a rival sprawling from his bicycle, whereupon the other man knocked down the aggressor.

American Mothers Wire Condolence.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The following cablegram was forwarded to-day: "To the King and Queen of England: The mothers of America extend sympathy for the loss of a mother whose nobility and purity of character added dignity to motherhood and strength to the homes of all nations. Mrs. Theodore W. Birney, President National Congress of Mothers."

Mr. Austin's Poem a Poor One.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The genius of the Poet Laureate, Aufred Anstin, is regarded as having fallen to the lowest ebb in the hastily turned out poem which appeared the day after the Queen's death. It was long, commonplace, and of faulty metre. A great outburst of poetry is flooding the papers, in which the effort of Mr. Austin is the only conspicuous poem yet printed.

Kaiser May Make the King an Admiral.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—The Vessische Zeitung announces that Emperor William has offered to King Edward VII. the dignity of Admiral of the German Navy.

The Flag Over City Hall.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Apropos to the agitation as to the flag on the City Hall, I would modestly make a suggestion which I have had in mind ever since Mayor Strong instituted the custom of flying the National flag as an indication of the Mayor's presence in his office. Would it not be more appropriate to run up the municipal colors for the purpose indicated? B.

New York, Jan. 26, 1901.

MASS MEETING FOR THE QUEEN

Committee Appointed to Arrange Details—The Service at Trinity.

The general committee, appointed at the meeting of English residents at the Downtown Club, met yesterday afternoon at the British Consulate to arrange for a mass meeting in honor of the memory of Queen Victoria.

A committee was appointed to arrange the details. This committee is composed of the following members: The Rev. Parker Morgan, E. K. Beddall, J. Pierpont Morgan, Alexander E. Orr, G. A. Morrison, William L. Dodge, and Sir Percy Sanderson. This committee, which will determine time and place as well as arrange other details, will report at the earliest opportunity.

The mass meeting will be entirely apart from the memorial service which will be held in Trinity Church at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon. The Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, rector of the church, called upon Sir Percy Sanderson yesterday and tendered him the use of his church. Bishop Potter will officiate at the service. Dr. Dix said that he would be able to give out the details on Tuesday. Admission will be by ticket only. To obtain tickets written application must be made to the Consulate. Tickets are being sent to the foreign Consuls in this city. A certain number are also distributed among the different British societies.

St. George's Society, it was said yesterday, would probably arrange a special memorial service in some other church, it was thought at St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church.

THE MAYOR AND THE FLAG

He Erred in Saying There Was No Precedent for Half-Masting It.

It Was Lowered in Pursuance of a Resolution of the Aldermen When Carnot Was Assassinated.

That Mayor Van Wyck was mistaken in his statement that the flag on the City Hall had never been half-masted on account of the death of a foreign ruler was brought to light by The World yesterday morning. There was printed therein a copy of a resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen on June 26, 1894, two days after the assassination of President Sadi Carnot of France. The text of this resolution was as follows:

Whereas, The death of M. Sadi Carnot, President of our sister Republic of France, at the hands of an assassin, has caused profound sorrow throughout the civilized world, whose whole people mourn the loss of an upright man, a pure patriot, and a sincere lover of his country; and,

Whereas, The amicable relations between the Republics of the United States and France have continued almost uninterruptedly from the dawn of American independence, the people of the United States must regard the death of President Carnot as a bereavement not confined to one nation; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Common Council of the City of New York, representing the citizens of the American metropolis, deeply deplore the untimely death of the patriotic President of the French Republic. His death at the hands of enemies of social order warns the civilized world against the promoters of Anarchy. They are a menace to peace and prosperity, against whom the forces of law and order should be united all over the world; and, be it further

Resolved, That we sincerely commiserate with the bereaved people of France in this bereavement; and be it further

Resolved, That as a token of our sincere sympathy, the National, State, and municipal flags be displayed on the flagstaffs of the City Hall at half mast on the day of the funeral; and, be it further

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect, the Board do now adjourn.

An effort was made to see the Mayor yesterday in regard to the apparent inconsistency between his reasons why the flag was not lowered at the death of Queen Victoria and this action on the part of the Board of Aldermen six years ago. He left the City Hall early in the day, nor was he to be found at his home in East Forty-sixth Street.

An examination of the files of the daily papers published on the day after the funeral of President Carnot showed that the flags on both the City Hall and the Post Office were lowered in deference to the occasion.

What the Mayor said in explanation of his failure to lower the City Hall flag the other day was issued in typewritten form. It was as follows:

"The flag was not ordered to be half-masted over the City Hall in following out a precedent established by this and a former administration—and, I think, administrations. The flag was not half-masted when President Carnot of the French Republic and the Empress of Austria were assassinated, or when the Czar of Russia died, nor when King Humbert was murdered, as I understand it. It is corroborated by a statement in the papers this morning that the President had not ordered the flag at half-mast on the White House when either one of these monarchs died. I followed the precedent established here.

"You must bear in mind that people come in here all the time about this. When Gen. Joubert, the commander of the Boer army, died, almost every personal friend I had in New York came here and wanted me to fly the flag at half-mast on the City Hall. Gen. Joubert was a friend of mine. If I had followed the dictates of my heart, I would have done it, because England was murdering these people and had robbed them of their land, and my personal feeling was to do it, but I could not. There is a precedent established here not to fly the flag on the City Hall at half-mast when foreign monarchs die, and I simply followed the rule in this case, and I think it is a very good rule."

When, several hours after making this statement, the Mayor heard that the flags of the Government in Washington had been half-masted, he said:

"I am informed that the flags on the White House and Government buildings were never before placed at half-mast on the death of a foreign ruler. I see that such action has been taken at the death of the Queen. I suppose that the present Government is establishing another precedent. I shall follow the established precedents in this city."

CALLS IT A HUMILIATION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Shame on the Mayor of New York for refusing to half-mast the flags of the chief city of America as a becoming and proper tribute to the honored memory of the great Queen and noble woman whom the whole world—except Tammany Hall—unites in mourning! But it is only what might have been expected from such a source. Does he imagine it beneath his petty dignity to show respect to a "foreign monarch"—still the "bugbear of little minds" on this side of the Atlantic? But no one can fathom the thoughts of the Mayor of New York. His indecent insult would be beneath notice did it not bring shame on his high office and his city. Even Paris—hostile to Englishmen—has furled her official flags in crêpe, and yet the largest English-speaking city of the world (except London) is placed by her Mayor in the ignoble position of churlishly skulking behind "precedent" as an excuse for an action quite akin to the boorish sympathies of the Chief Magistrate.

Evidently the Mayor's mind cannot grasp the fact that there are times and events above and beyond precedent, and "customs more honored in the breach than the observance." The only comfort is the fact that he alone it is who stands before the nations a unique byword of shame and reproach. The municipal buildings are the inglorious exceptions in a forest of flags at half-mast, by means of which the people of New York have proved to the world—in spite of him who should have done so—that they sincerely mourn the loss of the queenly woman who was America's best friend in adversity and prosperity, and to whom every loving and reverent tribute is being paid, regardless of politics, by the Governments and peoples of the earth. May it be universally understood that New York sharply resents this most characteristic action of her unspeakable Mayor, and that all right-feeling Americans are covered with shame at such caddish deeds done in their name.

It is a bitter humiliation to see the flag put to such dishonorable use as the refusal to honor a great and good woman who lies dead amid sorrowing millions. And as for the Mayor's precious "precedents," where, except in that which he calls his mind, is the parallelism between Humbert of Italy, the Empress of Austria, all the Czars of all the Russias, (good men and women though they may have been,) Gen. Joubert, forsooth, and Queen Victoria? The grace in lowering our flag now lies in its absolute lack of precedent. But how can the Mayor of New York understand that?

ELIZABETH C. BARNEY BUEL.

Litchfield, Conn., Jan. 25, 1901.

An Englishman's Opinion.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As an Englishman, allow me to state my reason for concurring with Mayor Van Wyck in his refusal to allow the City Hall flag to be half-masted on the present occasion of the death of Queen Victoria. That reason, no doubt, differs somewhat from the considerations which have prompted the Mayor's action in the matter, and is such as may not find acceptance with the majority of Americans; nevertheless, the conclusion being the same, I venture to hope it is not a waste of time to state it.

Whatever else may be said about the Victorian era, which, as a striking coincidence, has passed into history with the close of the nineteenth century, that era has been characterized in the domain of religion, which is the highest domain of all, by the surrender of distinctive ethical tenets to a principle of broad comprehensiveness—so broad, indeed, as to involve the obliteration, in great degree, of every characteristic truth of Protestant Christianity as established at the Reformation in the sixteenth century. This means the accession of a strong refluent wave from the high-water mark of Protestant Reformation principles, and, of course, meets with the approval of the Pope of Rome and of all others who, like him, are at heart opposed to the revealed truth of the Bible. But it also means retrogression and incipient decay in any nation where such a condition prevails, and, if not arrested, it means for England the loss of her position as head of the Protestant nations of the earth.

The Boer war, which has entailed the greatest loss of military prestige that England has sustained in modern times, is, if rightly viewed, nothing more nor less than a Providential retribution, through the instrumentality of a small nation—faithful to the light which God had given them—upon the greatest and most powerful empire upon earth, and that for the latter's defection from those God-given principles inherited from Puritan ancestors.

It is hard for an Englishman, whose convictions are such as the writer's, to keep silence on such an occasion as the present, nor does it appear incumbent upon him to do so, painful as it is to me to write in the above strain. I feel impelled, however, to place on record my deep sympathy with a small nation, who I regard as witnesses for the truth as it was given to them—imperfectly though this may have been—to hold it. C. W. MULLIN.

Brooklyn, Jan. 25, 1901.

In Its Proper Place, He Thinks.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"The Queen is dead; long live the King!"

Let the mortal remains of the departed ruler of a mighty empire be laid at rest amid all the pomp that her exalted rank requires, and let history take care of her memory. It may be that in two or three generations the students of the world's civilization will give her an important place among the benefactors of humanity, but the passions and hatreds of the present epoch are too fresh and too strong to enable us to judge her and her Government with the impartiality that such a judgment requires. We are all entitled to our opinion in the matter; we are living in a country and at a time where and when a man should not be branded as a blackguard, a corrupt politician, or a man without principle and education, because, being at the head of a city like New York, he refuses to lower the flag at half-mast in honor of a dead sovereign.

Do you not think that it is time that all the "indignant Britons" and the "indignant English women," who advertise their lack of self-respect in the columns of your "topics," should be reminded that, if they wish to show their dissatisfaction at the municipal act of our chosen Mayor, they ought first of all to become American citizens, and at the next election vote for a man who possesses all the requisites of an Anglo-American candidate? We are on "American soil, and not on English territory," and, while it is well that private individuals should honor the memory of one who was a good woman and an ideal mother, we cannot help thinking that our actions in public life cannot be dictated by all the "indignant" and tactless Britons in the world.

Patrick Henry, Washington, Henry Clay, and Perry would have lived useless lives if we had already forgotten that England is the foe, and that it is only owing to our love for freedom and republicanism that the Star Spangled Banner has replaced the union jack at the top of the flagpole. The flag of the City of New York is in its proper place, and should forever float there, Britain and the Britons notwithstanding.

PAUL J. ESQUERRE.

116 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, New York, Jan. 26, 1901.

Admires the Mayor's Courage.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Queen Victoria undoubtedly was one of the best monarchs not only that England ever had, but that ever ruled a country. Yet she was a monarch, not chosen by the will of the people, and, as such, to a truly republican mind, she is not and ought not to be the object of such almost Divine veneration as is tendered her in the greatest Republic of the world.

From the point of view of the republican it is really disgusting to observe that the American people have been thrown into the most violent hysterics by the natural death of an aged monarch, while the highly lamentable assassination of a worthy President of a great sister republic scarcely called forth a greater interest than any common sensational news. On this sad occasion public flags were nowhere lowered to half mast country, and nobody raised a voice against this contempt of the spirit of republicanism.

But now the only man who had the courage to maintain his spirit, by forbidding to lower our city flags for a monarch, has been overwhelmed with a shower of insults and abuses, not by the common people, but by the so-called "better classes"—by editors of our leading newspapers. This alone is sufficient to show that men are not yet worthy of and ripe for the republican form of government; it is not necessary to prove this assertion by the fact that in republics corruption is more prevalent and the man without means less protected than in monarchies.

Suggests Honor for Humble Virtue.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"De mortuis nil nisi bonum."

I readily grant at the outset that nothing but good can be said of the long life of the old lady who died a few days ago at Cowes.

But what, in the name of common sense, was there so remarkable about this goodness that we should go into hysterics because our City Hall flag was not half-masted on her account? Born and reared in luxury, living all her life amid greatest pomp and affluence, where was the incentive for her to lead the reverse of a good life?

Almost the same hour and day a woman died in the miserable rooms of a rear tenement in the poorest quarter of our city, virtually from overwork and under-nourishment.

Compelled to provide for a sick husband and five children, her life was an unceasing daily heroic struggle from early dawn to midnight to procure the plainest food for the hungry mouths clamoring for it. Being a woman of refinement and culture, she also devotedly watched over and directed their moral as well as mental growth. In spite of her incessant work, the scarcity of mere bread was such that she, frequently and secretly, went hungry from her exhaustive toil of needlework to her few hours of nightly rest, and yet, in the early bleak and dismal mornings she would wake her children with a merry song and encourage them to do likewise, in order to counteract as much as possible the gray and melancholy conditions of their existence. Completely vanquished in this cruel struggle with adversity, but with a cheerful hope in a better future for her children, she finally passed away.

To those who are eager to pay their mournful tribute to actual womanly worth and greatness, who have surplus tears of sympathy for womanly self-sacrifice and a surcharge of admiration for real womanly virtue, goodness, and heroism, I would humbly suggest they need not search for it thousands of miles away, but with honest and rational eyes and mind will they find it in close proximity.

As a citizen of our Republic, however, I emphatically protest against our flag recognizing monarchical mummery and clothes merely, even if they consist of purple and crown.

Trent Affair and Flag Question.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Are the American people not giving altogether too much prominence to the lowering or not lowering of the City Hall flag to half-mast in honor of Queen Victoria?

In the first place, the Mayor is entirely within his rights in refusing to recognize royalty on American soil. If we must lower the flag let us do it to Victoria the woman. Even then, what was ehe more than thousands of our mothers, wives, and sisters? We will concede that she was a virtuous woman, but what gives her prominence in that sense? Is it because Queens generally are not virtuous? As a mother she certainly was a success, inasmuch as she managed to accumulate $100,000,000 for her children.

But do you blame the Mayor that, like thousands of other men in this country, he cannot forget that Victoria, the Queen, honored the brute by whose orders old women, young women, and women in the travails of maternity were torn from their beds and their homes burned over their heads? Were these women any less women than Victoria?

It is argued by others that we should lower our flags if for nothing else than that she was the means of averting war because of the Trent affair. If she wrote that document, then, by all means, lower the flag. If we may believe Justin McCarthy's description of the Queen, she must have been a very mediocre woman intelectually, hence incapable of writing such a document. No doubt her husband, a Dutchman, wrote it, but let us give her the benefit of the doubt and lower the flag by all means on that account.

An Epitaph for the Mayor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a good American citizen I ask just a word or two on this Mayor Van Wyck flag controversy, in which the great majority are in condemnation. All who condone Mr. Van Wyck's action are as narrow and small minded as he has shown himself to be. His subterfuge of precedent is too flimsy to hide the spite that prompted him; one need scarcely be surprised, judging from the source from which he sprung into prominence and power, for scarcely anything else could be looked for.

The noble virtues of Queen Victoria, the most illustrious woman that ever lived, are of less interest to him than Ice Trust tactics and the Tammany vice rule of the city, which has been shown up so much of late. He has placed an official blot on the fair name of the Empire City of the New World, with which his name will be associated, and the contempt it merits, for a generation to come.

When the Tammany funeral takes place next November, and the official body of Mayor Van Wyck is laid to rest, let the following be his Possessed of small sense, and bad of its kind."

SUB-JUDICE.

New York, Jan. 26, 1901.

Thinks Van Wyck Pro-Boer.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a humble citizen of the United States and also a daily reader of your paper, I should like to make a few comments upon the action of the Mayor of this city in not lowering the flag over the City Hall in respect to the death of Queen Victoria.

The lame excuses he offers for not doing so and the names he mentions show his ignorance. The fact of the matter is he is pro-Boer—hence the spirit shown in connection with the Queen's death. But his private feelings should not be allowed to have anything to do with the matter. The lives of the people he refers to cannot for an instant compare with the life of Queen Victoria, and when we think that during the last fifty or sixty years some of the largest institutions in New York have grown to the proportions they now enjoy, we must realize that a very large degree of this prosperity is due to the conditions existing during the Queen's reign, and which were largely attributable to her influence. Therefore, the noble-minded citizens of this country have shown their respect for a sovereign never equaled, and who I believe will never be excelled. It seems to me that after the sympathy shown by the representative citizens of this city, the Mayor of New York should be compelled to place the flag at half-mast out of respect for the wishes of the better class of our people.

When the time comes, I hope to see a Mayor elected whom we may be proud of, and not a man who panders to that element of the community which is responsible for the conditions of vice in this city. I heard an American gentleman, who had lived in New York all his life, say that Mayor Van Wyck's position proved one of two things: Either that the people were afraid to take measures in their own hands, or else they preferred that style of politics which made him Mayor. Can this be true?

In Europe a man holding a position such as he occupies, who repeatedly outraged public opinion as he has done, would be dragged from his office by the mob and pitched into the gutter.

EDWARD C. J. FINCH.

New York, Jan. 24, 1901.

Lincoln Contrasted with Van Wyck.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial in to-day's issue is so forceful yet moderate that it leaves little to be said in relation to the Mayor's refusal to half mast the City Hall flag as a tribute to the dead English sovereign.

Some persons, however, harbor the erroneous idea that Mayor Van Wyck is merely following a precedent set by Mayor Hewitt. The latter refused to hoist any foreign flags over the City Hall; and, when his attitude was rightly understood, the sentiment of the whole community was substantially with him. Mr. Van Wyck was not asked or expected to hang out the British ensign. It was thought that he would have half-masted the American flag in honor of a sovereign who proved her friendship for us at a trying juncture.

Mr. Van Wyck now talks of precedent. If he had none, the time was propitious to establish one. "Why do you raise your hat to that negro, Mr. Lincoln?" inquired the Martyr President's companion as they walked along Pennsylvania Avenue.

"I return his salute," responded Lincoln. "Do you think I should permit a lately liberated slave to set the precedent of outdoing me in politeness?"

But Lincoln was Lincoln, big of heart and big of brain, knowing how to do the right thing at the right time. New York's present Mayor had the ill-fortune to be cast in a decidedly different mold. Luckily, the independent press will save our city from being condemned as sharing or indorsing his peculiar ideas of courtesy or propriety.

HENRY F. GILLIG.

New York, Jan. 24, 1900.

Says Mayor Shows Pro-Boer Sympathy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is a pity that the only discordant note at this time of universal mourning should be caused by the Mayor of this great city.

What a difference between his conduct and the action of President McKinley, whose letter of sympathy has touched the hearts of all sorrowing Britishers? But I suppose the Mayor of New York considers himself a bigger man than the President of the United States.

There will be few regrets when the present Mayor leaves office. During his whole term he has done nothing to enhance the honored position given him by the people, and has taken every opportunity to show his pro-Boer sympathies to the people.

Insulting the dead Queen, who was a friend of this country, will not help the cause of the Boers; neither will it bring them supporters, because it was by such narrow-minded, biased views that they have lost their country forever. Throughout the city flags are at half-mast, and some of the buildings are draped in crepe. It is done as a mark of respect to one who lived a pure, God-fearing life; who was the friend of the black race as well as the white race, and who used her power and influence in behalf of right and justice to all her subjects.

ROBERT S. BEATON.

284 First Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1901.

He Pities Mayor Van Wyck.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Pity rather than censure is due to the arrogant and imperious despot, Robert A. Van Wyck, Mayor of our noble city by virtue of his servility to a gang known as the "Croker-Carroll Company." His indirect insult to all good citizens of New York and his direct insult to all American-Englishmen, and particularly to her whose eyes are now closed in death, is despicable, outrageous, cowardly, and degrading.

The suggestion of a church parade by "A Scot" of all citizens and non-citizens born under the Union Jack and of their families is an excellent one, but let us have it on the day of the funeral of our late esteemed and much-beloved Queen. Let us organize at once for such parade. I implore my brother citizens, especially American-Englishmen, to resent such an insult by Tammany's puppet in November next. American-Englishmen, carry it in your breasts. Purge the city of such a gang. Drive them to the confines of the desert.

WALTER WEBB.

New York, Jan. 25, 1901.

Approves of Mayor's Course.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As one always Republican in local and National elections, and especially so as against Tammany rule, I notice in your paper many hard and unwarranted communications against the Mayor of this city for not half-masting our flag in respect to the death of Queen Victoria.

Not disputing anything that has and can be said of the good qualities of the departed Queen, your correspondents give vent to their feelings in language that shows they are very intemperate in their expressions. The interview with the Mayor, as you publish it, is in nowise out of place as I can see it. He certainly shows his reasons with good common sense—precedents—but comments on his action pound him without showing in any way why he should honor in the city's name one dead monarch more than any other who died before this one.

Those that wish to do such honor no one will prevent in any way they may wish, but the few, or the many, must not think to the extent of publicly having the special privilege of determining whether the Mayor is at fault because he did not mourn with them over a dead monarch, when no such thing was ever done before. Mayor Van Wyck's argument is a good one and well expressed.

A REPUBLICAN, PROTESTANT, ENGLISH-AMERICAN CITIZEN.

The Mayor and Precedent.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Inasmuch as the present incumbent of the Mayoralty of this city possesses in every respect a temperament and character entirely unprecedented, would it not be possible for the people of this city to establish a precedent by ousting him from the office he has so disgraced since his incumbency, and which he promises to disgrace so long as he occupies it? Let us lose no time, fellow-citizens, in establishing a precedent to be followed by future generations whenever public officers become contemptible, insulting, overbearing, bulldozing, undignified, narrow-minded, and deficient in all the instincts of true manhood. M.

New York, Jan. 24, 1901.

Calls It Hysteria.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to be one of those who believe that Mayor Van Wyck was right in not half-masting the flag of the City of New York when the Queen of England died. It is so easy to be a mob; so easy to make a virtue of being abject before royalty, that he could have saved himself much annoyance by falling in with the prevailing snobbery that begins for Americans in the State Department and waggles its many tails in the daily press. I am sure the Mayor must feel "dreadful" when he sees that Mr. Gillig disapproves his attitude on the flag question—Gillig, an international Buzz-fuzz, who has backed and filled between Trafalgar Square and the Fifth Avenue Hotel until he cannot for the life of him tell whether he is heading for the Bowling Green or St. Martin's le Grand.

But is not the Victorian half-masting mania altogether hysterical? The Queen of England did not stand for our ideal of government. "Oh, no! but think of her royal virtues," is the answer. Now, what were her "royal" virtues? Alas! there were tangibly none. The late Queen was reputed to have been sometimes in favor of peace when her Ministers and people were in favor of war. Is that virtuous? If it is, did it prevent a single war or soften the atrocity of any war once waged? No not at all. Did the late Queen favor a single popular reform or believe in reformers? The great electoral reform battle had been fought before her time; her greatest favor was always for the greatest Conservatives—Disraeli she almost idolized; Salisbury she blindly trusted. These surely were not signs of enlightenment.

There was no streak of "royal" mercy in the late Queen. Women were hanged quite freely during Victoria's reign. She had virtues other than royal, as most good women have. In fact, her possession of the "bourgeois" virtues and her being allowed fourscore years to exercise them so high up in the world, "in the white light," as some demented symbolist has said, has been the chief factor in her fame. To have saved $30,000,000 in sixty years shows a "virtue" that would please any broker in the world; but I am sure that every right-minded royalist and imperialist is ashamed to hear of such unqueenly thrift.

Then that large family, ramifying through all the little and big German Courts till they are overrun with grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and what not! That counted for much, as it counted for many. All the rest I declare to be simply the hysterical effect of excited mobs and women on each other, trying to justify the abnormal and ridiculous by uttering ceaselessly such phrases as "Oh, the dear Queen!" or "Just fancy, the dear Queen is over eighty."

A French poet recently began a poem to Wilhelmina of Holland with "O Queen of twenty years!" as if that was a statement of meritorious fact. One is no more absurd than the other as showing "virtue." It is all the hysteria of snobbery; it makes against self-respect and common sense; it is beneath the dignity of republican peoples. Let Mr. Gillig half mast himself freely at the loss of his English Sovereign. It will be observed that he is the same thing backward as forward, but when he "deplores" the Mayor's inability to take a Charing Cross view of the royal demise, he makes merry at his own expense. Mayor Van Wyck has the best republican sentiment of the town back of him in his refusal to half mast the flag for the late Queen Victoria. CIVIS.

New York, Jan. 24, 1901.

Thinks Mayor's Action Boorish.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I suppose Mayor Van Wyck enjoys his ill-gotten notoriety. As a rule, the ill-bred acts of such a politician should be ignored, but in a case like this, public disapproval is indeed hard to restrain. I doubt if even the lowest Irishman in Tammany Hall, or the most "boorish" Dutchman in this country would approve of such disrespect being shown to so noble a character as that of Queen Victoria. To excuse Mr. Van Wyck's pandering to the lower classes on the ground that he had no authority to establish a precedent is ridiculous, after the Capitol of the United States, as well as the majority of cities throughout the country, showed their esteem for England's late Queen by lowering the Stars and Stripes to half mast.

The City Hall should be representative of the prevailing sentiment on a point of this nature, and as nearly all the large public and private buildings in New York were courteous enough to place flags at half mast, it was only proper that the Mayor should have done likewise at the headquarters of the city, as an official, instead of showing his "saddish" spite as a citizen. There is only one thing to complete Mayor Van Wyck's happiness, and that is the opportunity, should Oom Paul decide to give up the ghost, of placing the flag at half mast on the City Hall in his honor.

Apropos of Krüger, there is nothing strange in the fact that Mr. Van Wyck finds in this "patriot" (?) all that is emblematic of freedom, truth, and justice, for, sad though it be, our Mayor is so used to despotic and corrupt government (for which he is mainly responsible) that he makes but a poor judge of these virtues, although he is the cause of much "righteous" indignation. Well, he may find the ice business his proper place very soon. GREGONITUS.

New York, Jan. 24, 1901.

The Irish and the Queen.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In looking over your paper I find the letter from "H. J. B.," protesting against Mayor Van Wyck's not having the flag at half mast over the City Hall. "H. J. B." says: "Are we Americans or Irish?'

"H. J. B." is unconsciously displaying the same spirit which Van Wyck has displayed—bitterness. He is in sympathy with the Boers, which accounts for it all. "H. J. B." would do some such thing toward the Irish, should the opportunity present itself.

I am Irish, and I am wearing a miniature of "Victoria, the Good Queen," to-day, with its little box of crape. It was sent me from Ireland last week. Mayor Van Wyck is Dutch!—not Irish. We love the Queen, and politicians in Ireland are the cause of all the misrepresentations and misunderstandings. Just as they are here. If corrupt politicians rule New York, it does not follow that "the people" are corrupt or disloyal. "H. J. B.s" to one side for a moment.

The Irish loved and served their Queen, and none knew it so well as the Queen herself. Her Chief Justice—Lord Russell of Killowen, an Irishman and a Catholic—and many others at home and "in the war"—who can number them?—Generals, officers, and privates. So, "H. J. Bs," when protesting against the actions of Dutch Mayors, should not lay the blame on the Irish, who have always loved and served their "Good Queen." AN IRISH-AMERICAN.

New York, Jan. 24, 1901.

He Says No! No! No!

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Although you sympathize with these mistaken Americans and English subjects in regard to the Mayor's action, I must say they acted as genuine Americans. For what else was the late Queen to the Republic of the United States than a monarch of a friendly nation? The same as the late Czar. Did anybody then expect the official flags to be lowered? And did the Russians feel insulted at that?

I say no, no, and no again. It is only the English, with their unequalled boundless arrogance, who feel insulted at us Americans for not officially mourning their late monarch, which would mean the first exception in our Constitutional traditions on their account.

But it is very hard to swim against the tide, and George Washington would turn in his grave if he could see how his once great and independent Republic is fast becoming an English colony. It is a very sickening sight to any true American, indeed.

MAN KILLED BY A TRAIN.

Engineer Says Elizabeth Resident Deliberately Stepped in Front of It.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Jan. 26.—Charles A. Huffnagle, thirty-eight years old, of 15 Crane Street, was instantly killed at 8 o'clock this morning by a west-bound Philadelphia express at the Madison Avenue crossing in this city.

From the statement made by the engineer of the train it would appear that Huffnagle committed suicide. He was walking beside the tracks, and when the train came along, the engineer says, Huffnagle deliberately stepped in front of the locomotive. He was hurled fifty feet through the air, and his skull was crushed. When picked up he was dead. He leaves a wife and four children.

A RABBI'S EULOGY OF VICTORIA.

The Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes Tells Why Jews Mourn for Her.

The Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes, in the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue yesterday, delivered an eloquent eulogy of Queen Victoria. He said in part:

"The life of the Queen mourned to-day was the fruition of womanly character born, nourished, strengthened, and crowned by religion as taught by the Book of Books which the Jew hath given the world—the Book whose tribute of honor, unequaled and matchless, paid to womanhood, proclaims Victoria's worth. She spent her strength for duties while strength she had. She stretched forth her hand to the poor; strength and honor were her clothing; she opened her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue was the law of kindness. She looked well to the ways of her household; her children arise and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praised her. Many daughters have done well, but thou excellest them all. The woman that feareth the Lord shall be praised.'

"And yet other reason why the Jew today should render tribute to her who has passed away is because her heart, so large that it took in nations and embraced the myriads with love, had nevertheless no room in it for religious prejudice or antipathy. But for her countenancing Jewish advancement to honor in her Government and in society, which took its tone from her, never would the Jew in the great British Empire have attained that eminence in political and in social life which makes us to-day bid all other nations look at England as an object lesson and learn that toleration and justice for the Jew go hand in hand with the true and lasting greatness of a nation.

"Well may we mourn. But in our tears is born the rainbow of hope that her illustrious successor, who as Prince honored our race, will as Emperor-King continue to honor the race to which the world owes its best and most ennobling thoughts."

RABBI SILVERMAN'S TRIBUTE.

"The Lesson from the Life of the Late Queen Victoria—the Royalty of True Womanhood," was the subject of the sermon delivered by Rabbi Joseph Silverman at the Temple Emanu-El yesterday morning.

"Victoria was the uncrowned queen of the whole world," said the speaker. "Ascending the throne in her teens, she then displayed the qualities which have marked her entire reign—the simplicity, modesty, graciousness, and veracity of true womanhood. Victoria never forgot the woman in the Queen. She presented in her life not the royalty of a monarch, but the royalty of true womanhood."

At the time of her marriage, the speaker went on to say, an incident occurred which was illustrative of her whole life. The Archbishop of Canterbury approached her just before the marriage service and suggested that in view of her position it might be well to omit the word "obey" from the ceremony. "My Lord, omit nothing," she replied; "I wish to be married as a woman—not as a Queen."

"There are three types of women," continued the speaker. "One is the brilliant woman, who shines through her intellect. Another is the masculine woman, who wields power through the possession of manly qualities. The third is the womanly woman, possessing those qualities of feminine virtue that rule not by the force of intellect, but through the heart. Such women were Ruth, Esther, and Queen Victoria.

"As Jews we owe a special debt to her. By her fairness in favoring equally all religions it was possible during her reign to remove the last civil disabilities against Jews in England. In her the world loses an uncrowned Queen and in this generation it will not look upon her like again."

MESSAGE SENT TO EDWARD VII.

In accordance with a resolution adopted at last night's meeting of the British Schools and Universities Club of New York the following cablegram was sent to the King of England:

The British Schools and Universities' Club of New York, whose membership represents the entire English speaking world, in general meeting assembled, respectfully assure your Majesty of their profoundest sorrow at the death of your Majesty's illustrious and beloved mother, Queen Victoria, and they pray that your Majesty may long reign over a prosperous and happy people.

J. A. IRWIN, President.

It was decided that the memorial services which the club plans in honor of the Queen shall be held in the Church of the Heavenly Rest at 4 P. M. on Feb. 3. They will be conducted by the Rev. Drs. D. Parker Morgan and E. Walpole Warren.

At last night's meeting, which was held in the Holland House, there were about sixty members present, the total registration of the club being 200. Not only were there native Englishmen in the organization, but Americans or others who have been trained at an English school or university. It was due to this fact that the cable message contained the statement that the membership of the club represented "the entire English-speaking world."

CREEK INDIAN "UPRISING"

Believed Now that Earlier Reports Were Exaggerated.

Soldiers and United States Deputy Marshals Will Arrest Unruly Bucks —Choctawa Are Quiet.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 26.—A staff correspondent of The Star, sent into the Creek country to investigate the trouble among the Indians, wires to-day as follows:

"That the situation regarding the Creek Indian uprising has been somewhat exaggerated there can be no doubt. It is true the Indians are restless, but so far no violence has been done, and it is questionable if a shot will be fired. However, the Snake band is well organized, and if whisky should get among them or some deputy should become indiscreet there might be some trouble. But a general uprising at the present time is out of the question. The presence of the United States troops at Henrietta is bound to have a good effect; not that they necessarily will be needed to do any actual fighting, but by being there the Indians who have taken Crazy Snake's word as gospel will be convinced that the President of the United States has not given the Crazy Snake authority to make Creek laws, as he has been claiming.

"Probably the most important feature of the situation to-day is the rumor regarding William A. Jones, a Commissioner of Indian Affairs at Washington. Crazy Snake contends that when he was last in Washington he called upon Mr. Jones and asked him for relief from the alleged unjust terms of the Curtis act. He asserts Commissioner Jones told him to return home, and that the Creeks might make their own laws as heretofore. Snake not only insists that this is true, but asserts he has signed letters from Jones to prove his claims. However, no one is known to have seen these letters.

"United States Marshal Bennett was busy to-day getting provisions and supplies together preparatory to starting to-morrow with about twenty deputies to join the soldiers at Henrietta. Bennett says his mission is to fight if necessary, but principally to convince the Indians that Snake has no authority from the Federal Government to make laws and that Snake and his followers are violating the laws of the United States when they attempt to enforce the old laws of the Creeks.

"Marshal Bennett, Indian Agent J. E. Shoenfeldt, and J. W. Zevely of the Interior Department, are in constant consultation. All agree in saying they do not anticipate any serious trouble, but add that they are prepared for any emergency that may arise." Mr. Shoenfeldt added:

"Many of the reports have been exaggerated, although there is no disguising the fact that the Indians are restless. Some of the young bucks have said that they will not submit to the Government's plan of land allotment. At the same time they have the most intense feeling against the railroads. They say that the roads have no right to run through their lands and are threatening to burn bridges and tear up tracks. They say they will murder all Indians who have white tenants on their lands. The particular object of Marshal Bennett's party and the soldiers is to arrest those who have been making threats. With the party will be Thomas A. Sanson, United States Commissioner, and J. H. Huckleberry, Assistant United States Attorney. The offenders will be arrested. I expect the Marshal's party and soldiers will be out a week or ten days."

MUSKOGEE, Indian Territory, Jan. 26.—Whatever may be the justice or the injustice of the Curtis act, it is certain that this law is lately entirely responsible for the threatened uprising of the Creek Indians in this part of the Indian Territory.

The Curtis act was passed in 1898. Its principal points, so far as the Creek and Chickasaws are at present concerned, is that it abolishes all tribal laws of these tribes and says that all their members shall be governed by and be punished by the laws of the United States, just the same as any other citizens of the United States. It was at this the Creeks rebelled from the start, and two years ago, or directly after the passage of the act, there was an insignificant rebellion, which was promptly suppressed.

Ever since then the Creeks have been surly and dissatisfied. They immediately began to organize, and carried on their efforts constantly, determined sooner or later to show the Federal Government that they were all powerful.

In their midst, not far from Eufaula, lives the full-blood Chitto Harjo, or Crazy Snake. He is an organizer whose power among his countrymen is apparently unlimited. The real chief of the tribe is Lah Tah Mekko. He it is who signs all official documents, but the leadership, the brainwork, comes from Crazy Snake. No sooner had the former uprising been reported than Crazy Snake outlined a plan of organization. He gathered about him warriors who were dissatisfied, and they took his name, "The Snake Band." To-day he has about 800 men armed and most of them mounted. He appointed what is known to the whites as Deputy Sheriffs, but to the Indians as Light Horse.

The Light Horse are those Indians who are supposed to keep order, but have in reality been riding about the country doing Crazy Snake's bidding and assisting in the organization.

The banding together of the Snake band went on quietly, although the United States authorities had a suspicion that something of the kind was in progress. These actions were reported at Washington, but no authority was given to act. It was not until last October that the Creeks showed their hand. On the morning of Jan. 11 a notice against the land lessees or renters was posted. The effect of this notice was that the Creeks openly defied the Curtis act and stated the Creeks were still governed by their own laws. It was in direct defiance to the plan of land allotment adopted by Congress. The Government has said that the lands shall be allotted to them in a certain way.

The Creek says that if they want forty acres worth, say $400, no one has a right to compel him to take another tract worth twice as much if he insists on having the first, which has probably been his home since he could remember.

The Curtis act says he is violating the law when he rebels. The Lah Tah Mekko notice, or proclamation, saying that the Indian should own and control only his home place, and that all adjacent property which he might be cultivating should be confiscated by the Nation, was against the law and caused the authorities to act.

Leo E. Bennett, United States Marshal, sent word that the Curtis act was the law and must be obeyed, else he would take extreme measures to enforce it. The Marshal's warning was not heeded, as there were some attempts to punish Creek offenders by the so-called Creek Government. And so the matter stands to-day.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The Secretary of the Interior has received a dispatch from Acting Chairman Bixby of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, stating that the newspaper reports relative to the Creek uprising are believed by the commission to be exaggerated. He says that the United States Marshal and deputies expect to join at once the troop of cavalry at Henrietta and proceed to Council Ground, near Senora Mission.

He anticipates immediate subsidence of the apparent insurrectionary spirit and return of settled conditions. He states that reports of Creek lawlessness have stimulated disorderly elements in the Choctaw Nation, and some difficulty may be experienced there, curable by the remedy now being applied in the Creek Nation.

SOUTH McALESTER, I. T., Jan. 26.—There were no new developments among the Choctaw Indians to-day. Gov. Duke says he can maintain order without the help of the Federal Government. It is not believed the Indians made the threats credited to them. They say they will not destroy or injure railway property or molest the whites in any way. A report that Choctaw Indians had donned war paint and feathers is not true.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 26.—Lieut. Dixon, in command of Troop A, Eighth Cavalry, sent to the Indian Territory to quiet the Creek Indian disturbances, made a second report to headquarters to-day. He states he found no trouble at Henrietta, and has been unable to find any civil officer who needs the assistance of United States troops in controlling the Indians.

WARREN, Ohio, Jan. 26.—A telegram from Alex Campbell, a cousin of President McKinley, says the Dawes Commission of Land Appraisers in Indian Territory are safe from the Snake Indians and well protected. Mr. Campbell says the reports of the uprising are exaggerated.

TOMPKINS DEFIES LENTZ.

Says If Congressman Has Information Against Administration Republicans He Should Use It.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 26.—Congressman-elect Emmett Tompkins of the Twelfth Ohio District to-day sent to Congressman John L. Lentz his answer to the notice of contest served upon him by Mr. Lentz some weeks ago. Mr. Tompkins enters general and specific denial to all the charges made by Mr. Lentz that corrupt methods and means were used to secure his election. He also prefers counter-charges, twelve cases being cited where it is alleged votes were cast illegally for Lentz or where alleged irregularities occurred in the election procedure and upon the strength of which Mr. Tompkins claims many votes could be thrown out, materially reducing the total vote credited to his opponent.

In reply to Mr. Lentz's charge that the campaign carried on in behalf of the Republican candidate for Congress was systematic and a part of a plan projected and carried on by "leaders and political speculators connected with the National Administration at Washington," Mr. Tompkins says:

"Well, what if it was? How does that fact, if it is a fact, affect my right to a seat in the House? Besides, did they not have the privilege to retire you from Congress if they wanted to? Mr. Bryun, the Democratic candidate for President, came here and spoke in behalf of your candidacy, although he said that if he was elected President he wanted you to be 'at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue.' If Mr. Bryan had the right to speak for you, and he did, did not others, no matter who, have the right to speak for me?"

Continuing, Mr. Tompkins says:

"You say in substance that a large corruption fund was raised outside of the district and sent in here to defeat you because certain Republican leaders connected with the National Administration feared the effect of certain exposures you would make. I deny that any sum was procured in any manner and sent into this district to corrupt voters against you, and I deny that anybody is afraid of you. If you have such information why do you not yield it? You are still a member of Congress. You do not quit until the 4th of March. Congress is in session and has been in session continuously, except during the holiday recess, since Dec. 5, 1900. Why are you not there on the floor revealing the all-important and exclusive information with which you are so heavily charged? You owe it to the people to make a revelation."

QUIGG'S ANTI-TAMMANY PLAN.

Wants the Republican Party to Support Any Man for Mayor Who Can Beat the Wigwam.

Ex-Congressman Lemuel E. Quigg spoke last night on "How to Win the Next Municipal Election," as a guest at a complimentary dinner tendered to George D. Roberts, ex-Chairman of the Republican City Committee, by his political associates and friends, at the Union League Club, Brooklyn. Mr. Quigg attacked Tammany Hall, which, he declared, stood for all that was "wicked, base, and foul."

"Tammany Hall," he said, "lifts its foul front and dares the common decency of the city to mortal combat. I move we accept the challenge and unite the common decency of New York and go for them. Mr. Nixon said, 'It didn't go up.' But Mr. Nixon wouldn't tell the gamblers it didn't go up. What would have been the use of it if it hadn't gone up? How could an honest man, who had never done an honest day's work in his life, get rich if it hadn't gone up?

"My programme for 1901 is the same that I had for 1897, but we couldn't do it then. We now know why; because nobody would shake hands with anybody else until he had first slapped him in the face. It is different now. They're not talking now about excluding the Republican Party. They're talking about union. It is the duty of every decent, respectable man to help smash Tammany Hall. I say, as one Republican, that I will vote for anybody for Mayor whom proper sentiment and common sense may name, who can beat Tammany Hall.

"Let us see who is that man that the sentiment of the independent Republicans and Democrats crystallizes around. Find out whom they'll vote for, and let us vote for him. Let us try their way once. Let us say, 'Take the nomination, only keep it out of Tammany Hall. We'll back you once to see what kind of a fist you make of it.' In that spirit we may win."

FOLEY FIGHTING DIVVER.

Begins Campaign for Leadership of the Second Assembly District.

Councilman Thomas J. Foley, better known as "Big Tom Foley," has decided to fight Patrick Divver for the leadership of the Second Assembly District. He made a start yesterday by fitting up three floors at 1 Chambers Street as campaign headquarters, and threw the gauntlet down to the Divverites by causing it to be made known in all the Tammany headquarters in the district that the fight was on.

Mr. Foley said yesterday that he is going to organize along with Congressman Daniel J. Riordan, who was turned down by Mr. Croker for renomination on the ground that he was too young. Mr. Croker chose Assistant Corporation Counsel Creamer, who is twice Riordan's age, and he was renominated and elected Congressman. Mr. Riordan will use all his power and influence on behalf of Mr. Foley, who has always been his friend.

Mr. Foley's organization will be known as the Tammany Club of the Second Assembly District.

CLERGYMAN GETS A DIVORCE.

Suit of Superintendent of De Peyster Home for Girls Is Successful.

Special to The New York Times.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Jan. 26.—The Rev. Elwood Rufus Ackerly, Superintendent of the Watts De Peyster Industrial Home for Girls at Tivoli-on-the-Hudson, to-day secured an absolute divorce from his wife, Hattie Louise Ackerly, through his attorney, William D. Brinnier of this city. The Rev. Mr. Ackerly is one of the most widely known Methodist clergymen in this part of the State, and before he was appointed Superintendent of the De Peyster Home he was pastor of several large churches.

Mrs. Ackerly is young and vivacious. When she first came to Tivoli she made the social hit of the season. She attended all the social functions, and was well liked by the wealthy ladies who have their Summer homes in and around Tivoli, and was constantly in society. She is highly educated, and has a love for music. When R. Cortland Pettit, a young plumber from Brooklyn, appeared at the home early last Summer, and it was learned that in addition to his qualifications in the plumbing business he was a musician of considerable ability, Mrs. Ackerly was not long in making his acquaintance.

They cultivated each other's acquaintance, and on different occasions they visited Kingston Point Park and other places, where they were photographed together. Later they extended the territory of their visits and Brooklyn and Qcean Grove are named by Mr. Ackerly as the places where his wife's conduct gave him grounds for applying for a divorce.

MINTURN HOSPITAL ROBBED.

Dr. Kellogg Reports the Loss of $790 in Cash and Checks.

The robbery of $790 in cash and checks was reported to the police of the East Twenty-second Street Station last night by Dr. Edward L. Kellogg, Superintendent of the Minturn Hospital for Contagious Diseases at the foot of East Sixteenth Street. Dr. Kellogg told the police that a drawer in his roll-top desk had been broken open.

Detectives Kane, Burns, and Robinson of the East Twenty-second Street Police Station were detailed on the case, and announced later that they suspected a boy employed in the institution. Dr. Kellogg declined to be seen.

It was rumored that a well-dressed woman who had called at the hospital to see a patient was suspected. The woman, it was said, had been left in the office alone while a nurse went to ascertain if she could see the patient she inquired for. When the nurse returned, it is said, the woman had disappeared and the drawer was found open. The rumor could not be verified.

Sons of St. George's Ball Postponed.

The united lodges of the Sons of St. George, who intended to hold their annual ball in Terrace Garden next Tuesday evening, decided last night to postpone the function until March 25, out of respect to the memory of Queen Victoria. This action was taken at a meeting in the rooms of the St. George Wheelmen, 1,775 Broadway. The wheelmen also passed resolutions of condolence and regret.

OPERA STARS SING AT CITY COLLEGE BANQUET

Gov. Odell and His Father Among the Guests of Honor.

The Governor Refers in Touching Terms to His Parent, and Both Are Enthusiastically Applauded.

The dinner at the Hotel Savoy last night of the Associate Alumni of the College of the City of New York was attended by more than two hundred graduates of the college and their guests, prominent among the latter being Gov. Odell, who, before dinner, held a reception in the parlors adjoining the banquet hall.

Ferdinand Shack presided, and with him at table were Gov. Odell, B. B. Odell, Sr., the Governor's father; ex-Judge W. M. K. Olcott, President Miles M. O'Brien of the Board of Education, Prof. R. Ogden Doremus, Prof. Michael I. Pupin of Columbia, the inventor of the ocean telephone; Prof. Compton, Fordham Morris, President Thomas Hunter of the Normal College, Prof. Johnson, Prof. Robert F. Weir, Prof. Herbermann, Senator Elsberg, Prof. Fabregou, and Townsend Wandell.

Prominent among the alumni was Maurice Grau, through whose courtesy the diners were enabled to listen to some excellent singing by Signor Campanari and M. Journet of the Grand Opera. Signor Campanari sang "Ecstacy," "My Bride Will Be My Flag," and the Toreador song from "Carmen," while M. Journet sang arias from "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" and from Gounod's "Philémon et Baucis.

Gov. Odell received an ovation when he was introduced by Mr. Shack to respond to the toast "The State of New York."

"A short time ago," said the Governor, "when occasions like this were less frequent in my life I was in the habit of devoting many hours to the preparation of impromptu speeches, but between the cares of office and many invitations I find it impossible now to do much else than eat.

"I am reminded in this connection of the story of a well-known up-State member of the bar, who was counsel for the defense in a murder trial. His eloquent appeal to the jury got his client acquitted, and when some of his friends congratulated his wife, who was present, on her husband's success, she said that she was glad it was over, as she was tired of being addressed by her husband as 'Gentlemen of the jury.' I think it must be much the same way with the lady who graces the Executive Mansion in Albany, who must be tired of being addressed as 'Mr. Toastmaster and gentlemen.'

"I believe in colleges. I believe in the college of your day and of mine, when a man had to walk up and take his medicine without any elective proposition. I believe that a college education is essential to a successful business life. [Cheers and applause.]

"I see before me among the alumni here some of my lifelong friends. Men prominent in business, in the legal profession, and one at least who is an authority on water." There was a great laugh at this sally, and all eyes were turned toward Edward Lauterbach, who seemed to enjoy the joke as much as any one. Then, referring to the late struggle in the Republican Club between ex-Judge Olcott and Henry E. Tremain, who were both present, Gov. Odell said: "You have also among you men anxious to lead the Republican hosts, and who, although pitted against each other two or three nights ago, meet here as happy as if both had won.

"Your college deserves all the support that the city and State can give it. It is part of your great school system, and should be upheld in all its great works. While reserving to myself all the constitutional rights which are part of the Governor's prerogative, I will say that should it ever be necessary I will stretch my conscience to the utmost to further any measure that may be introduced for the benefit of your Alma Mater." [Cheers and applause.]

"I am also glad," said the Governor in conclusion, "that this occasion has afforded me the opportunity of sitting at the table with one whom I love and revere, my good, old father."

There was tremendous applause when the Governor thus referred to his father, and as the diners arose and waved their handkerchiefs enthusiastically there were loud calls for a speech. Mr. Odell looked at the Governor, and the latter winked and nodded his head approvingly, whereat the old gentleman arose and said:

"I am sorry to disappoint you, but speechmaking is entirely out of my line. I thank you, however, for the privilege of being here to-night and for the honor that you have done me and my son."

A toast to the health of Gen. Alexander S. Webb, the President of the college, who was absent because of illness in his family, was then drunk, as well as a toast to the President of the United States and one in memory of Queen Victoria.

Prof. Pupin did not allude to his discovery beyond complimenting the College of the City of New York on its mechanical laboratory. This, he said, was the largest and best equipped in the country, and he had frequently, through the kindness of Prof. Doremus, been allowed to make use of it in his experiments.

The other speakers were Louis F. Gratacap, R. R. Bowker, Prof. Weir, Senator Elsberg, Prof. Alfred G. Compton, and Miles M. O'Brien.

THE WEISBARD MURDER.

Committee of 25 Votes a Reward for the Murderer's Apprehension—Italians' Treatment of Peddlers.

The Committee of Twenty-five representing the New York Protective Peddlars' Union, the East Side Business Men's Association, the American Protective Peddlers' Union, the Independent Peddlers' Association, and the East Side Furniture Association, comprising in all a membership of over 2,000, met last night in Golden Rule Hall, 125 Rivington Street, and took action on the murder of Meyer Weisbard, the peddler whose body was found in a trunk on Jan. 16.

The committee was appointed at a meeting of representatives held at the same place last Wednesday. A. Tietelbaum, Chairman of the Committee of Twenty-five, presided. Earnest speeches were made by nearly all present on the necessity of apprehending the murderer and sparing neither effort nor expense to bring him to justice.

The committee voted to pay $500 for the apprehension and conviction of the murderer of Weisbard; to pay $200 to the person who will lead to the identity of the owner of the trunk in which the body was found, and to pay $500 to the family of Weisbard. For the purpose of raising the money a mass meeting is to be held next Friday night at some hall to be determined upon.

A committee of three, comprising Meyer Ellenbogen, M. Lederman, and Sigmund Samodowitz, was appointed to call upon Capt. Titus and ask his permission to have the trunk taken from the police and placed on a truck or open wagon and paraded about the Italian quarter. A large sign, offering $200 for any one giving the information as to whom the trunk belonged, will be placed near the trunk, if Capt. Titus allows the parade, and circulars printed in Italian will be scattered broadcast.

A communication was read from two Italian newspapers, offering half rates for advertising in bringing to the notice of the Italians the work of the committee. The offer was rejected. A committee of nine was appointed to call on the various associations and ask their co-operation, as associations and individually, in detecting the murderer and assisting in raising funds.

Before the meeting adjourned those present were instructed to make inquiries everywhere in the Italian district, and that each one of the 2,000 and over peddlers should do detective work. Weisbard's movements, through this committee, have been traced to Moore Street as late as 3 o'clock of Jan. 15, the day he disappeared. Many stories were told by peddlers last night of the ill treatment of their members by Italians. One man named Galler said he was kept a prisoner for nearly two hours in a Mulberry Street house and forced to sign a contract releasing his customer from all obligations.

It was said last night that besides the money the committee will raise over $1,500 will be raised by various lodges and courts to which peddlers belong.

The meeting adjourned to meet Tuesday night at the same place. There will be a meeting of peddlers and collectors of a different organization to take steps on the apprehension of Weisbard's murderer to-morrow night at 58 Orchard Street.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

While the mystery of the telephone is as yet but imperfectly understood, two women were recently made to feel how great a comfort to femininity it may be made. A few days ago a thoughtful husband decided to give his wife a novel surprise on her birthday. He arranged that at a certain moment her mother, whom she had not seen for a couple of years, should be at the long-distance telephone office in Philadelphia, and should "ring up" her daughter in this city. The husband answered the telephone bell when it rang in his house and answered the prearranged call. Turning from the instrument he said to his wife:

"Helen, here's your mother on the wire in Philadelphia."

The wife seated herself at the instrument and heard the familiar voice of her mother. It uttered one word, "Daughter." The young matron gripped the instrument and poured out her heart in the response: "Oh, mother, mother!"

Then, as she heard the sob of her mother that came over the wire, she answered in kind, still keeping the receiver at her ear. Until the tolls amounted to $5 these two women cried to each other in true woman fashion. Later both said it was the sweetest experience they had known since their long separation began.

City Magistrate Pool delights in such humorous situations as occasionally come up in police courts to contrast with the many others that are pathetic. In the Essex Market Police Court the other day, the prisoner was a small boy, who had stolen a turkey from an east side butcher. The boy had been caught by the market man with the turkey in his hands. After the complainant had told his story, which appeared to make out a clear case against the urchin, and the turkey had been produced in court as an exhibit, Magistrate Pool asked the market man if the turkey in question was a hen or a "rooster" turkey.

"I cannot tell about that," responded the astonished poultry vender.

"You mean to say you cannot tell the sex of the bird?" the Magistrate queried. "Then the case is dismissed and the prisoner discharged because the complainant cannot identify his property."

It was hard for the market man to believe the case was settled, even after another had been called, for the boy, frightened and trembling, had apparently pleaded guilty. In his hurry to get away when told he had been discharged, the boy had altogether forgotten about the turkey, which, according to the Magistrate's ruling, was his property.

It was the steward at one of the fashionable restaurants who has had abundant opportunity to observe the sort of thing he was talking about, who remarked: "Rather funny, this talk they are making about the revivifying and rejuvenating effect of salt on the human system, don't you think? It may be new to some of the doctors, but it's older than I am to the high livers and hard drinkers of this town. Reckon the doctors must have been observing the appetites of some of their patients who have dropped in to get the latest thing in a medicinal way in the shape of a 'pick-me-up.' Salt! Why, it has been the saver of all the old rounders of this and most every other city for more years than there is any record of. Take a man who has been out all night with the boys, and who wakes with a brown velvet taste in his mouth, no appetite, and a knowledge that he must eat something. What does he do? After his bracer of brandy and soda he orders something that is salt, very salt, the salter the better. Salt mackerel, bacon, salt ham, picked-up salt codfish, any little tid-bit of that sort, so long as it is salt. He doesn't need any doctor with hypodermic injections of brine to tell him what he wants as a revivifier. He calls his favorite waiter and pours into his ear the fact that he wants a lot of salt stimulant. That waiter, who knows his business, goes to the chef and sees that all the salt the house can spare is served in that one dish for the man who is looking for rejuvenation. From the relish with which the old rounder eats his salty meal, it is certain that the stuff hits the right spot, and after a bit he goes away much steadier on his pins. Men have been doing this sort of thing for generations, and yet the Chicago doctors and scientists have pounced on it as a new thing. The principle is the same, whether you get the salt in a meat or by hypodermic injection, it strikes me, though I'm neither physicist or physician."

Hockey on the streets has come again to be the bright particular nuisance on the upper west side of town. Armed with their crooked sticks boys flock to the streets and drive from one block to another, with all the force they can command, little balls of wood or hard rubber. Broken lamps on the streets, broken windows in the houses, and an occasional broken head are the marks of the triumphs of the urchins. Some of these are the results of accident, others of malice on the part of the players who have spotted men who have complained of them as nuisances to the police. Sorry the lot of the man who complains, if the boys find it out. They have him under espionage, trace him to the house where he lives, and if there are basement windows he may be sure the boys will find and break them with their hockey balls. Woe to the pedestrian who gets in the way of a lot of the lads engaged in a lively game with their sticks. He must pay heed to their cries of "out of the way," or he will be a victim of the flying balls unless he is skilled in the dodging of such missiles.

"Fortune's tides run queerly," said a lawyer who had just returned from Providence. "After I had finished the business that took me to Rhode Island I went out for a stroll toward the new State House, and on the way passed ex-Gov. William Sprague, a mere wreck of the former "war Governor" of the little State. Less than a generation ago everybody in the State bowed before the Sprague family, and people were simply awed by their wealth and power. Gov. Sprague was a social as well as a business despot. Now no one seems lowly enough to do him reverence. Fortune gone, fame forgotten, social caste lost, Gov. Sprague is a pitiable object when his former position is remembered. So wasted are the fortunes of the Governor and his brother that both will soon figure in the courts of the State as contestants of the will of their sister, widow of former Mayor Doyle, in order to get at least a share of her estate of about $25,000, all of which had been left to a niece of Mrs. Doyle, at present a resident of this city. Neither the Governor nor his brother, Amasa, who, like the Governor, was a one-time power in the State, were remembered by this sister. I was told that the old men actually need the money, so poorly off are they in this world's goods. Therefore the contest of the will, which has already been begun. A generation ago either of the men would have looked on $25,000 as a matter not worth their consideration. Yet to-day they are forced to go into the courts to get a share of that amount. Jointly, they squandered millions. Now they are fighting for the necessities of life. As they were never overpopular in their State and city, I failed to find that they had many sympathizers in this contest for a few thousands."

Columbia University has a little war of the sexes that is making a lot of talk among the students, though the matter has not yet reached the public ear. It all grows out of the fact that the young women at Barnard College have been granted the use of the swimming tank in the gymnasium at certain hours of the day. Heretofore this has been an exclusive privilege of the male students. Some of these who have been in the habit of going to the tank for a plunge at such times as best suited their convenience are growling because they now have to wait the pleasure of the girls on certain days and at certain hours. It doesn't set at all well. So far they have done their growling among their fellows, but the grumblings are growing louder and louder. The young ladies are not at all pleased at some of the rumors that reach their ears, and are preparing to stand their ground in case the matter comes to any issue before the Faculty. This is not deemed probable at present, for the young men will likely be content to make their hours for a bath suit those of the girls, who have few of the privileges of the university, from their point of view. As the girls have also had certain hours set aside for the use of the gymnasium and its paraphernalia, they argue that they have the right to the use of the swimming tank as well. So they are prepared to make a strong argument for the continuance of the privilege.

ARREST IN FOSBURG CASE

Brother of the Murdered Girl Indicted for the Crime.

Family Gave Out Story of a Desperate Encounter with Burglars—Bail Fixed at $12,000.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Jan. 26.—Robert S. Fosburg was placed under arrest here this forenoon, charged with manslaughter in causing the death of Miss May L. Fosburg, daughter of a prominent Buffalo (N. Y.) contractor, here on Aug. 20 last. The prisoner, who is a brother of the victim, was indicted at the recent sitting of the Berkshire County Grand Jury. The arrest, while not altogether unexpected in some quarters, was a surprise to a majority of the people, many of whom accepted the theory prevalent at the time that Miss Fosburg had been shot by burglars. Bail has been fixed at $12,000.

The authorities state that they have been unable to find evidence that burglars entered the Fosburg house, and it is generally believed that the police were driven to the belief that the shooting was the result of a family quarrel, but whether it occurred by accident or design they are unable to determine.

Since the murder of Miss Fosburg last August this community has not been so deeply stirred as it was this afternoon when the news spread that the brother, into whose arms it was reported that the girl had fallen after being shot, and who had bravely grappled with her slayer until beaten off by another burglar, was under arrest, charged with killing the young woman.

It was announced on the morning after the shooting that three burglars, who had made masks out of pillow cases, had entered the Fosburg home, and that Robert L. Fosburg, the father, having attacked the intruders, knocked a revolver from the hand of one of them. He was beaten off, the family said, just as Miss Fosburg came to his assistance. At that instant, it was stated, one of the burglars recovered the revolver, and, placing the muzzle almost against the young woman's breast, fired.

The girl fell into the arms of her brother Robert, who, it was said, taking in the situation, quickly laid her on the floor and attacked the man who had done the shooting. A blow with a sandbag caused the young man to loosen his hold, and the three masked men made their escape.

The police found that the shooting had been done with a revolver which belonged to a member of the family, and which had been found in a dresser in the house. They began at once to search for clues to the robbers, and they have followed many rumors, but each has been run out without apparent result.

Miss Fosburg was prominent in church and social circles in Buffalo, and for a time was a singer in the choir of a leading church there. The Fosburg family offered large rewards for the capture of the guilty persons and similar action was taken by the City Government.

It develops that at the Coroner's inquest held on the death of Mary L. Fosburg, which has never been closed so far as known, Miss Bertha Sheldon of Providence, R. I., who was at the house on the night of the murder, failed to put in an appearance. The murder is supposed to have occurred about 1 A. M., and at about 9 o'clock that same morning Miss Sheldon left for her home. Since then every effort has failed to bring her here to testify at the inquest. She is the only one whose story as far as known has not been secured.

MR. BACKUS'S LIVELY TIME.

He Attempts to Arrest a Crap Shooter and Is Bombarded with Missiles.

Erastus Backus, a detective attached to the Kings County Court, had a jarring experience last night with the strenuous life as it is lived in the "Darktown" section of Brooklyn, in the neighborhood of Raymond Street Jail. Mr. Backus, who is a brother of ex-District Attorney Foster L. Backus, is a philanthropist. His specialty in that line is reclaiming small boys who have fallen into evil ways. He devotes much of his time and a good part of his salary to this work. Mr. Backus is a sworn foe to the game of craps, and has confiscated several bushels of dice left behind on sidewalks by juvenile players who have fled at his approach.

The detective had occasion to visit Raymond Street Jail early last evening. Coming out he was shocked to behold a group of pickaninnies, most of them only about knee high, earnestly shooting craps on the sidewalk near the jail.

"Come, seben; come, eleben," a fat fit-the derky with the "bones" was pleading.

That was enough for the devoted crusader against juvenile wickedness. He made a dash for the crap players, and they fled, darting like rats into the hivelike tenements nearby. Mr. Backus singled out one of them and gave chase. The boy ran into the dark hallway of one of the tenements, and the sprinting philanthropist followed.

Once inside the building Mr. Backus found things coming his way. The first of these was a soda water bottle. It performed an inshoot from the hand of a dusky lady who appeared at the other end of the hall, and carromed off the vice chaser's left eye. In its wake followed a battered tin coffee pot, hurled by another negress. In less than six seconds the air was filled with all manner of household utensils, all in flight to a common goal, the anatomy of the philanthropist.

When the ladies tired of throwing things at Mr. Backus they started in to mop up the hall floor with him. Mr. Backus explained that he was an officer of the law. The women retorted that they were glad to hear it, and proceeded to pommel him more cheerfully than before. Mr. Backus finally succeeded in getting out of the house and dragged one of the women with him. He took her to the Classon Avenue Police Station, where he charged her with being one of his assailants. The woman, who described herself as Lucy Reden, thirty years old, was locked up. Mr. Backus didn't return for the boy.

RUSSIAN SEAMAN'S FUNERAL.

Crews of Two Warships Follow the Body to the Grave.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 26.—Many thousand people lined the route over which 600 subjects of the Czar followed one of their number to his grave to-day. A band of 100 pieces, over 50 carriages, and a hearse led the procession and the sailors followed the body over six miles, chanting the requiem odes of the Greek Church. By order of the Czar, Timotheus Tschuparinoff, an able-bodied seaman, one of the crew of the Russian cruiser Variag, was buried with full honors and a spectacular and impressive ceremony resulted.

The service was conducted by the Rev. Petroff Malenski, the cruiser's Chaplain, in the chapel of the German Hospital. The body of the dead sailor lay in a white coffin. On his breast was a picture of the Saviour and a cross of carnations, and there were fern leaves at his feet. Three candles were beside the bier. A temporary altar had been erected, and the mass of the Greek Church was sung; a choir of twelve sailors, each holding a lighted candle, chanted the responses. The whole effect of the lights and the gorgeous vestments of the priest was very impressive.

As the last words of the mass were said Capt. Vladimar Behr of the Variag, stepped up to the coffin, and leaning over reverently kissed the picture of Christ and the face of the dead man. He was followed by the Captain of the battleship Retvizan, and by William B. Tucker, Russian Vice Consul in this city, and then one after another the sailors filed by.

A squad of mounted men led the way to Greenwood Cemetery, where a ritualistic ceremony not unlike that of the Masonic fraternity was conducted by the Greek priests and the officers of the Russian Navy.

PHILIP STERNBACH'S SUICIDE.

Relative of a Member of a Large Broadway Firm Shoots Himself.

Philip Sternbach, up to the first of the year in the employe of H. Herrman, Sternbach & Co., a large importing house at 568 Broadway, shot himself dead on the sidewalk on West Eighty-sixth Street, near Central Park West, last night. He was within a block of the home of his brother Morris, a member of the firm. The cause of the suicide is not known. The family is very wealthy. Morris Sternbach refused to talk of the matter last night.

Policeman Toomey of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station discovered the suicide. He was at Eighty-fifth Street and Central Park West early in the evening, when he heard a pistol shot. He ran in the direction it came from, and, 200 feet down Eighty-sixth Street from the avenue, he came upon the body of a well-dressed man about thirty-seven years old, with a revolver in his right hand.

The man had a bullet hole in his right temple. He was already dead, but Toomey thinking some life might be still in the body, sent to Roosevelt Hospital for an ambulance to come quickly. Dr. Brown arrived hastily in an ambulance, and he said the man had undoubtedly died the instant the bullet entered his head. Toomey had the body removed to the West Sixty-eighth Street Station House, and a search was made of the clothing. Papers showed the man to be Philip Sternbach, and Morris Sternbach of 146 West Eighty-sixth Street was notified. He identified the body as that of his brother.

Morris Sternbach said his brother was employed as a salesman by the firm on Broadway. He came from Germany about ten years ago, where their mother still lives, and he entered the employ of the house. He complained recently of illness and gave up his place. He lived for a time, Morris Sternbach said, at his house, on West Eighty-sixth Street. Then he went to Atlantic City. Upon returning, he lived at the Hotel Navarre, Thirty-eighth Street and Seventh Avenue. He was a single man.

A letter was found in the possession of the dead man which was addressed to Morris Sternbach. The latter read it when it was given to him in the station house, but he refused to disclose its contents. It was conjectured that the letter must have been written after a meeting of the brothers in the afternoon.

TREE PLANTING IN THIS CITY.

Over Four Thousand Set Out in the Five Boroughs Last Year.

It is shown in the annual report of the Tree Planting Association of New York City that during last year 4,072 trees were planted in the five boroughs of the city, the number of the preceding twelve months having been only 1,623. Two bills drawn up by members of the association were passed by the Legislatures of 1899 and 1900, respectively, empowering the Park Commissioners to take entire charge of street tree planting in order that such work might be carried on systematically. Both the bills, however, failed to become laws on account of the disapproval of the Mayor, although the Governor had signified his intention to sign them.

At the end of the report it is stated that "nurserymen have become more familiar with the requirements, and the vast majority of trees that are properly planted not only live but thrive even under what we consider the adverse circumstances of asphalted streets and flagged sidewalks. If in the past we have considered utility more than beauty, there is no reason why we should continue to do so when beauty pays."

23D REGIMENT REVIEW.

Col. Albert L. Mills, Commandant of West Point Military Academy, reviewed the Twenty-third Regiment at its armory, Bedford and Atlantic Avenues, Brooklyn, last night. For the review the regiment was equalized in ten companies of twenty files each. Lieut. Col. Jasper Ewing Brady was in command. Following the review the ceremonies of guard mount and evening parade were had.

At parade regimental long service medals were presented to those who had served ten years or more. One of the recipients of the long-service medal was Capt. Frederick A. Wells, commanding officer of Company D, who has served twenty-five years with the regiment.

The Various Phases of Mourning for the Queen Characterized.

HER CHARITY AND SIMPLICITY

England Easily Pleased in Kings—Edward VII.'s Qualities, His Debts, and His Mother's Estate—Peculiar Functions of the Heralds' College and the House of Commons.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Events have moved so swiftly this week that we cannot yet realize the change the Queen's death has brought. The word King is unfamiliar in people's mouths and memories linger around the name of the deceased monarch. Thanks to the world-girdling electric telegraph volumes of expressions of sorrow have poured in upon the country unprecedented since time began. From every dependency England's flag waves over as well as from utmost India and from all parts of the two continents of America sympathetic tributes of respect have come and met with most grateful reception, yours by no means the least. At home we have been overwhelmed with hyperbolic eulogy on the life of the Queen until the appetite cloys and people begin to sigh for a change of theme. It has been falsetto in excelsis and in crescendo with the great majority of our organs of public opinion, the least reputable often weeping and grossing in print the loudest and most servilely.

When all is said, however, in deprecation of redundant language in the praise employed, it remains true that Queen Victoria possessed a wonderfully binding influence over the various badly jointed portions of England's dominion, and it is interesting to inquire whence this influence came.

For thirty-nine years she wore widow's weeds and eschewed all pomps and ceremonies of a monarch's court. Society knew nothing of her visits to the metropolis, which were few and far between, transitory also when they did occur, and all her connection with the side show of kingship lay in the performance of public functions mostly, during late years at least, in regard to the celebration of England's naval and military prowess. As the spirit of militarism grew in the country so was the Queen compelled to act at more frequent intervals the part of Bellona in the blood-stained drama of our imperial expansion. And now even her funeral is to be utilized for the same purpose, not as an opportunity given the nation to express for the last time in an active way its feelings of veneration and respect for a noble lady's memory, but as a great pageant in the glorification of our fighting appliances. This is a pity were it for no other reason than because in this show the real reason of the Queen's hold over the nation will not be symbolized. It lay in the reticent simplicity of her life.

THE QUEEN IN THE HIGHLANDS.

I remember many years ago accompanying my father to call upon the widow of a former Chief Forester of Balmoral, a gray-haired old lady possessed of a certain statelliness of mien, by no means uncommon among the mixed population to be found around Lochnagar, a population neither wholly Celtic nor wholly Saxon. The room into which we were ushered was small, and in former days it might have been unattractive, but we found it full of mementoes which the Queen had given by her own hand, photographs with autograph signatures, not only of the Queen herself, but of every member of the royal family, and tokens of regard and affection. "Her Majesty," our hostess said, "takes tea with me in this room at least once every year, and she never misses coming to call on me when at Balmoral."

This was her conduct always in her Highland home, not only with that particular retainer, but toward humble people all around the castle domains. As long as she was able to walk she used to wander about on foot among the cottagers, accompanied by her faithful retainer, the late John Brown, entering their lowly dwellings, inquiring into their well-being, and furthering the education and advancement in life of their children, and generally interesting herself in their affairs. This spectacle caught the hearts of the nation at large far more than anything else in her life, and explains the peculiarly reverent and affectionate attitude which the masses of the people of all classes undoubtedly displayed toward her throughout her closing years. In this direction the sentiment evoked by her death is unquestionably genuine.

IN PLUTOCRATIC CIRCLES.

It was not so amid the upper classes, among the plutocratic circles of the West End, or the ranks of impoverished aristocracy. There the Queen has been the object of calumny and derision ever since I can remember. Her parsimony has been sneered at quite unjustly, her foibles have been exaggerated, and every incident in her life that malicious gossip could turn to evil account has been seised upon and magnified. Therefore I regard the fulsome language of eulogy employed unstintedly in these quarters over our dead Queen as something little better than an insult to her memory. Society with a big S not only mocked at the Queen's life in words, but in its actions likewise, and never in the history of this or any other country has wasteful luxury risen to such corrupt and morally enervating heights as it has attained in London to-day. No wonder, therefore, that the people who indulge in such habits should look askance upon the Queen, whose Court was severely homely, and whose mode of life was unostentatious and who systematically throughout her reign displayed an uncompromising hostility toward every woman who lapsed in her rigidly correct standard of moral conduct. Quite a number of individuals, grandees before the world, were forbidden to attend the Court ceremonials held in her Majesty's name because they had compromised themselves, and she did her best at all times to discountenance the rush of the upper classes into ruinous habits of gambling and luxury. The people as a whole knew and understood this, and all the foreign dependencies embraced within the empire were kept in touch with her Majesty in other ways.

She followed the course of public affairs attentively, and no calamity could occur in any part of the empire, or the world almost, without drawing from her a message of sympathy, and frequently of substantial help for the distressed. These ways, therefore, became, in time, legends of beneficence and grew up around her Majesty's name so strong as to make it the binding force of holding the empire's disjointed fragments together, as it were, and keeping populations infinitely diversified in character and circumstances in touch with the imperial sentiment.

STATUS OF ROYAL INFLUENCE.

Look how the Dutch Huguenot people of South Africa, whom Milner branded as rebels, received the news of her death, draping their churches in black, our very Boer prisoners suspending their amusements until after the funeral to show their respect and grief. Hardly a burgher homestead in all South Africa was without its portrait of the Queen in some place of honor until this war broke out.

It is more and more coming to be known that the Queen bitterly opposed the South African war, but I touch this baleful subject merely to illustrate the contrast between her position and that of her grandfather George III. in the years of the War of Independence. In spite of the cult of pomp and the language of servile adulation applied nowadays to a British monarch, power has passed from the Throne in a remarkable degree since George III. forced on and kept going the Colonial war, which ended in emancipation. He was the mainspring of the party of coercion, and the guiding spirit of the Ministry that existed only to do his bidding. He formed a power alongside of but sometimes above Parliament. With the late Queen how different! She might privately remonstrate with her Ministers, might indirectly sway them by letting her views leak out, though that was often perilous. But never a word could be uttered by her in her capacity of monarch indicative of the slightest opposition to the wish of the nation as expressed through Parliament and its responsible Ministers. Our monarchy, a Parliamentary one, was so in George III.'s time, but since then insensibly the power inherent in the kingly office has been undermined until now it is but a shadow, and the only real influence a sovereign can exercise is social and sentimental.

THE NEW KING.

With quaint and ancient ceremonies Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, now nearly sixty years old, has been converted into Edward VII., King of England and Emperor of India. He will be Edward I. of Scotland, by the way, and there among a rigid sort of patriots his name will fall of grateful acceptance. On the whole, however, his new Majesty will be well received and have a fair chance. He has many good qualities of a kind necessary to his situation, is affable when he likes, prompt in expressing sympathy, tactful with the tact of his mother, so that if he keeps his private life in better order than it has been, he may do very well. We are easily pleased in Kings, it must be admitted, and always have been.

One of Edward's first troubles may arise from the unbridled license in his life when heir to the throne. Gossip, of the malicious society kind, puts the accumulation of his debts at £5,000,000, and the more radical section among politicians is already roundly declaring that the money left by his mother ought to be utilized to pay these debts up. "She left £40,000,000," chatter runs, "and in such circumstances the nation ought not to be called upon to furnish a penny. We do not want a repetition of George IV.'s story, whose debts were at least twice paid by the taxpayers."

AMOUNT OF DEBTS EXAGGERATED.

This is all very well, but I think that both the above totals are exaggerated. It does not seem possible that the King can owe £5,000,000, judging from the evidence that has come before me from time to time. He might owe half the amount, and, again, he might not owe much more than one-fifth of it. What I am sure is that his West End tradesmen have in many instances never seen the color of his money since the day they first began to supply him. His debts are, therefore, unquestionably considerable, possible £1,000,000, unless the parvenu plutocrats have written their loans off, which is probable; but there was no £40,000,000 fortune left by his mother to pay them.

The old lady was thrifty, but not parsimonious, and she had many poor relations to provide for, as well as many of their spendthrift debts to cover. Her income was by no means excessive when measured by what great monarchs are supposed to possess, and I shall not be surprised to learn that she left less than half the amount her estate is alleged to be. We can get no details of an authoritative kind, because royal wills are exempt from probate, and therefore inaccessible to public scrutiny, but the truth will come out indirectly before long, and if her Majesty has left whatever money and estate she possessed largely away from the new King, Parliament may have to be approached to see whether it will consent to pay his accumulated debts. The present, though, is not the favorable moment for broaching the subject. We are getting hard up, and income tax payments are exercising an inevitable effect in stimulating the disposition to grumble at departmental extravagance, at the cost of the African war; in fact, at everything the Government does.

THE POMP OF HERALDRY.

An amusing letter might be written upon the functions of Heralds and knights at arms when new sovereigns come upon the scene. They appear in gorgeous figured garments that the most exalted Chinese mandarin could not possibly rival, and are altogether curious and picturesque, if somewhat a survival of the dead past. The Heralds' College will, I believe, find any man's pedigree for sufficient money down, and it does not surprise me to hear that some day our new British citizen, William Waldorf Astor, had been at his inevitable ennoblement endowed with a pedigree, tracing his descent from King Canute. The Heralds' College can do mostly anything, as it has to live by its wits, and possessing no State income, its wits are sharp.

More interesting, as indicating the curious nature of our Constitution, is the way Parliament meets on the death of a monarch. It does not wait to be summoned, but comes on its own motion nominally to swear allegiance to the new official head of the State, but concealed in this function lies the assertion of the nation's right to say who nominally shall rule it. Although kept rigorously within ancient forms in all of its movements, the House of Commons is perfectly competent at its meeting to raise any public question it thinks fit and pronounce, if need be, upon the right of the claimant to the throne to ascend it.

American Consul's Arrival at Harpoot.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The Department of State has received a dispatch from Thomas H. Norton, United States Consul at Harpoot, announcing his arrival there on Dec. 21. The Governor General sent out his carriage with a cavalry escort some nine miles to meet Mr. Norton. The American colony at Harpoot also went on horseback to meet him. On Dec. 24 Mr. Norton called upon the Governor General and the military commander. His reception was friendly and satisfactory.

Arnold White, inquiring "Why are England and America strangers yet?" answers, "Lack of understanding," and declares that Americans regard England as becoming a "back number."

THE BOERS VERY ACTIVE

Capture a Train with Troops and Supplies Near Kimberley.

Also Take Soldiers and Police Prisoners at Other Points—De Wet Reported to be Near Standerton.

KIMBERLEY, Jan. 25.—A train with troops and military stores on board was waylaid and captured by the Boers at Slypklip (north of Kimberley) this morning.

The Republicans captured a small post of Dublin Fusiliers, then blew up a culvert and waited for the train.

An armored train has gone in pursuit of the Boers.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 26.—Twenty Cape police surrendered to the Boers at Devondale, north of Vryburg, on Jan. 21, without firing a shot.

CLANWILLIAM, Cape Colony, Jan. 26.—The Boer invaders are roaming over the country between Calvinia and Lambert's Bay.

STANDERTON, Jan. 25.—The Boers today blew up a culvert near Greylingstad.

De Wet is reported to be in this district, and is said to be supplied with dynamite.

PRETORIA, Jan. 26.—The Boers have summarily expelled all the British, numbering seventy, from Petersburg, giving no reason for doing so. The refugees have arrived here.

PEACE PARTY SOUNDS BOTHA.

PRETORIA, Jan. 26.—The Burghers' Peace Committee has sent to Louis Botha, Commander in Chief of the Boer forces, to ascertain if he will receive delegates to discuss the question of peace.

Boers to Trek into German Territory.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—The conditions imposed by the German Government upon Dr. Hendrik Muller, who is negotiating for the emigration of Boers to German Southwest Africa, include the defense of the territory against internal and external foes, the sending of the Boers' children to schools where German is taught, and that children born to them in Southwest Africa must become Germans politically. These conditions have been accepted, and there will be a number of treks after this, the first, a small one, next Tuesday.

Gen. Prinsloo Reported Wounded.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 26.—It is reported that Gen. Prinsloo was wounded in the fighting of Jan. 16.

CHINESE REQUEST REFUSED.

Foreign Envoys at Peking Decline to Give Up Possession of the Forbidden City.

PEKING, Jan. 26.—The request of Prince Ching and Li-Hung-Chang for the transfer of the Forbidden City to the Chinese, in order that preparations may be made for the Emperor's return, was referred by the Generals to the Ministers, who have replied that they see no reason to alter the previous determination.

They declare that the Chinese must show deeds proving their desire to comply with the demands of the joint note before any concessions will be granted.

United States Minister Conger called upon Prince Ching to-day. The visit was mainly a social one. Prince Ching expressed regret at the refusal of the Ministers to give the Chinese the Forbidden City, saying that it was impossible for the Emperor to return to Peking until a place shall have been prepared for his residence.

Prince Ching also stated that he had informed the missionaries that the Chinese Government had no objection to their remaining in the country and continuing their work, which was often beneficial to the country. He considered many of them good men.

Conger Did Not Demand Death Penalty.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—In view of recent publications touching the insistence of the Ministers at Peking on the imposition of the death penalty upon the Chinese concerned in the Boxer uprising, this statement is made by authority: "The reports which come from Peking representing Mr. Conger as demanding the imposition of the death penalty on all the Princes and Generals mentioned in the dispatches are untrue."

DUTCH ALL ON SKATES.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 15.—The ice is here, and in consequence all Holland is on skates. Even the approaching great event, the Queen's wedding, seems for a brief space forgotten. For some time past the Hollander of the south has been envying the Hollander of the north, for the newspapers were full of the splendid skating in Groningen, Zwolle-Hoorn, and Leeuwarden. At last "the fog" came to us—a freezing, thick fog—so that windows of your opposite neighbor could no more be seen. For two days and nights there was the continued music of horns, then the fog fled away as it had come—suddenly—and a bright sun came smiling over the peaked roofs and crooked chimney tops and showed us what the fog had done. The woods were fringed with soft silken threads on every leaf and branch. Even the trunks of the huge trees were completely wrapped in white. It had decked the bushes in diamond robes, and built fairy abodes out of some torn old box or basket that was caught fast in the "sloot," (a small canal,) or forgotten along the roadside.

When this freezing fog appears the Hollander begins to smile and forthwith to shine up his skates, the small boy to sigh over lessons, and the old man to regret his years. The good mother of a growing family looks up the big iron pot for pea soup—a Dutch pea soup that possesseth many things valuable, unknown to the land where skating is not a national sport. The tired skater looks to find a dish of Dutch pea soup, with a big sausage in it. There is not an inn to be found where pea soup is not, when the ice comes, and all along the skating "ban" of long distances are booths with steaming pots of it.

Off they all go now—Meester" and Kneche," side—flying on to Leiden or down the sloot that leads to Wassenaer, along the Schenk to the Rhine, their bright ribbons—at this time orange—flying from their skating poles. Pater familias is out, with his long skating pole, which will safely carry along with him his five daughters, to go, perhaps, to take luncheon with friends who live thirty miles away. On they all go, from all classes, from all sides. A change comes over the spirit of the Hollander's dream when the ice comes. The lines of soberness so marked in the Dutchman's face seem to disappear; the stiff bows with which men usually greet each other in the streets break forth into a cheery hallo. The woods, always so silent with only the whir of the "wheelers" as they fly past you, ring with the cries of the merry crowds as they hurry on to the frozen rivers, marching to the music of their clanging skates. The school children, always let loose for a brief holiday by the authorities, shriek as wildly as the Winter crows that circle over the town.

Everywhere the newspapers announce the places where no danger threatens; and warnings are given all along the "ban" where danger is by the sweepers in charge. The ice clubs of the whole of Holland are, in a sense, one. The membership is one gulden a year. This admits the member to all the slooten, canaals, and river ways, and just now one can go to Friesland on skates.

Parties are made up to join friends for the splendid fetes that are given in the North, where less chance of a thaw setting in can occur, and where the people work for championships in fast and fancy skating. They all wear the fancy dress that belongs to each club, and those belonging to the old Fries families, who no longer in everyday life wear the costume of their particular State, put it on for such occasions. All the peasants still wear it. So throughout our land to-day is holiday attire, and brightness greets you everywhere, for the ice has come and bids fair to remain a long time.

RUSSIA'S GROWING POWER

Sweden to Raise a Large Army, Fearing a Muscovite Invasion.

Czar Likely to Rule Over 200,000,000 Subjects in Another Quarter of a Century.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 14.—Great importance is attached here to the army reorganization plan which is about to be submitted by the Swedish Government to the Rigsdag at Stockholm.

For some time past the St. Petersburg press has been attacking the Swedish people and their Government, which they accuse of harboring hostile sentiments toward Russia. The Novoe Vremya recently sent a special correspondent to Sweden and Norway to ascertain the state of public opinion in Scandinavia concerning Russia. The correspondent lays much stress upon the hostility of the Swedes to the Russian Government. But, as a matter of fact, it has been well known here that since the violation of the Finnish Constitution by Gen. Bobrikoff two years ago, the Swedes have become alarmed at the danger by which they are threatened from the north. The Grand Duchy of Finland, which formerly constituted a kind of buffer State between Russia and Sweden, will shortly be transformed into a Russian province. The invasion of Scandinavia by the Muscovite forces would then be an easy matter.

It is for the purpose of resisting such an invasion, inasmuch as it is possible, that the Swedish Government has elaborated a plan for the radical reorganization of the existing system of national defense.

That Russia may invade Sweden some day is certainly more than an idle supposition, and is well within the range of probability. It has long been known that the War Department here has a carefully drawn up plan of campaign for the invasion of Sweden and Norway. The officers of the Russian General Staff are of the opinion that an army of 120,000 men would be sufficient to compel Sweden and Norway to accept the conqueror's terms. It is, likewise, well known that numerous Russian spies have recently been sent to Scandinavia, and that the Swedish language is now studied by many Russian officers. The apprehensions of the Swedes are, therefore, well grounded, particularly as the Russians have made no secret of the fact that they want an outlet on the open sea; and where could they find better ports than on the Norwegian coast, where the sea never freezes, even in the coldest Winters? But to reach the Norwegian coast the Russians must pass through Sweden; in other words, they must conquer a great portion of the Scandinavian peninsula to attain their purpose.

Hence the great importance attached here to the proposed reorganization of the Swedish Army. In all probability the Rigsdag will adopt the Government's proposal, and will grant the necessary sum, which is a considerable one, for its realization.

COMPULSORY SERVICE.

The Government proposes to introduce compulsory military service for all Swedes, the term of service being a year instead of three months, as at present. The army will consist of six divisions, each with four regiments of infantry, consisting of three battalions of 1,000 men, with a considerable force of cavalry, and particularly of artillery. Four regiments will, besides, be formed to constitute a permanent garrison for the three fortified cities of the kingdom and the Island of Gothland. The total strength of these twenty-eight regiments will be about 100,000 men and 20,000 horses. To these active forces will be added the reserve troops, consisting of 150,000 men between the ages of thirty-three and thirty-eight, and the "landsturm," the strength of which has been estimated at 250,000 men, between the ages of thirty-nine and fifty. Of these 500,000 men one-half will form the active army, properly speaking, consisting of six army corps, while the "landsturm" will be used to reinforce the garrisons of the fortified towns. A special corps of from 8,000 to 9,000 men will be formed for the protection of the seaboard.

The Swedish Navy consists of twelve ironclads and of numerous cruisers, gunboats, and torpedo boats.

The army budget in Sweden will henceforth amount to over 60,000,000 crowns a year, (about $17,000,000.) This sum does not include the expenses for the construction of new fortifications near Boden, in the north, work on which has already begun.

As a result of the army reorganization as planned by the Government Russia will in a few years be confronted on the Scandinavian frontier with an army of no mean size, made up of men famed for their bravery and still animated with that martial spirit which for so many years enabled Gustavus Adolphus and Charles XII. to march onward from victory to victory.

The Russian Admiralty has just decided that the last remaining wooden vessels in the fleet shall be destroyed. Among these vessels are four frigates—the Ascold, the Bayan, the Ghihak, and the Bagatyr—which will be replaced by new vessels of the same name, two of which have been built in Germany and two in France. Among the new Russian men-of-war worthy of mention are the first-class cruiser the Gromobol, armed with 16 rapid-firing guns, with a tonnage of 12,400 and a speed of 20 knots an hour; an iron-clad, the Prince Souvoroff, of 13,600 tons, which will shortly be launched, and a cruiser now building at Sebastopol, for which the Admiralty recently granted a sum of 7,000,000 rubles. The Government has latterly established new shipbuilding yards at Vladivistok similar to those at Sebastopol, Nicolaieff, and St. Petersburg.

The press here has taken advantage of the advent of a new century to publish various articles dealing with the rapid growth of the Russian Empire in the past 100 years. All due allowances being made for the exaggerations of the Chauvinist newspapers, some of the articles in question are not without interest. The exact area of the Muscovite empire is to-day 18,350,000 square miles, or about forty-three times the size of France. Nicholas II. rules over one-sixth of the inhabitable portion of the earth, with a total population of 136,000,000.

RUSSIA'S RAPID GROWTH.

The first census in Russia was taken in 1724 and showed a population of 14,000,000. On the accession of Catherine II., in 1762, the population of the empire was 19,000,000, at the time of her death in 1796, 36,000,000; in 1815, under Alexander I. 45,000,000; under Nicholas I., in 1835, 60,000,000; under Alexander II., in 1858, 74,000,000; under Alexander III., (1893,) 127,000,000, and, to-day, 136,000,000, including the Grand Duchy of Finland. As the population now increases at the rate of nearly 2,000,000 a year, in a quarter of a century Russia will number 200,000,000 inhabitants. The average ratio of inhabitants in the empire is but six per square kilometer, (whereas in Belgium, the most densly populated country in the world, it is upward of 200.) The population of Russia is, however, very unequally distributed. In the Province of the Vistula, it averages 75 inhabitants per square kilometer, (which figure is superior to the average in France, 71 per square kilometer.) The region of the Southwest (Kiew) has 58 inhabitants per kilometer, the Province of Moscow 43 inhabitants, Lithuania 40, the Baltic provinces 25, Southern New Russia 24, the Volga Basin 17. Finland has but seven inhabitants per kilometer, and Archangel but one inhabitant per kilometer. In the regions of the Amur the proportion of inhabitants is but four per 100 kilometers.

The population of Russia, which was for centuries almost exclusively rural, tends more and more to become "urban." Thus, in 1724, the urban element was but 3 per cent. of the entire population, while, today, it forms 15 per cent. of the whole. In 1724 the total population of the Russian cities was hardly more than 300,000. Today it is nearly 17,000,000. Thirty years ago Russia contained only four cities, the population of which was upward of 100,000. To-day there are twenty-two cities of this kind. St. Petersburg and Moscow each have over 1,000,000 inhabitants; and Odessa, which was founded only 105 years ago, already has a population of 420,000. Lodi, which had 32,000 inhabitants thirty years ago, now has a population of 325,000; Hakou has, in the same space of time, increased from 13,000 to 115,000, and Kiew from 68,000 to 225,000. Thirty years ago Russia had exactly sixteen cities with a population of 50,000 and over. To-day there are sixty cities of the kind.

It is curious to note into what social classes the population of the empire is divided. The great majority of the Czar's subjects are peasants, (81 per cent.) The class known in France under the general name of petite bourgeoisie only represents 9 per cent. of the population. The military element, including their families, represent 6¼ per cent., the nobility and their families 1 per cent., and the clergy 1 per cent.

The number of Christians in the empire is 87 per cent. of the population, the great majority being members of the Orthodox Church. The Roman Catholics form about 9 per cent. and the Protestants 5 per cent. As for the non-Christian sects they are represented by 9 per cent. Musulmans, 5 per cent. Jews, and about 1 per cent. Buddhists.

The number of emigrants who leave Russia every year, without the intention of returning, is but 35,000 on an average. These emigrants are mostly Jews, Poles, and Tartars. On the other hand, many Slav immigrants (for the most part Czechs, Ruthenians, Moravians, Servians, Croatians, and Slovaks) enter Russia every year from Austria, Hungary, and the Balkan peninsula.

BELGIAN GOVERNOR MURDERED

M. de Xivry of Luxembourg Province Assassinated by a Government Employe.

ARLON, Belgian Luxembourg, Jan. 26.—Orban de Xivry, Governor of the Province of Luxembourg, was assassinated here this morning by a man named Schneider, who afterward committed suicide.

Schneider asked for an audience of the Governor, and immediately after he had been admitted he drew a revolver and shot M. de Xivry. He then blew out his own brains.

Schneider, who was an employe of the Provincial Government, recently showed signs of incipient madness.

HIGHER DUTIES IN PRUSSIA.

Count von Buelow Announces that the Government Favors More Protection for Agriculture.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—In the lower House of the Diet to-day, in the debate on the Agriculture Estimates, the Imperial Chancellor, Count von Bülow, made an important announcement on the subject of the protection of agriculture, as follows:

"Fully recognizing the present difficult conditions of agriculture, and animated by a desire to effectually improve them, the Prussian Government has resolved to endeavor to secure adequate protective duties for agricultural products and, therefore, an increase in the present rates sufficient to attain that end. The Government is also anxious to expedite in every way the introduction of a new Tariff bill."

The announcement was greeted with loud cheers.

A motion of Count von Limburg-Stirum, demanding increased protection for agriculture, was afterward adopted by 238 to 43 votes.

Preceding the vote, Dr. Barth, the Freisinnige leader, said that whoever agreed with the motion favored an increase of the customs duties at the risk of no new commercial treaties being secured with other nations, in which latter question the vital interests of millions of working people were involved.

Herr Richter said the Radicals would place themselves in line with the Social Democrats in order to combat Social Democracy, increased duties being fertile soil in which Socialistic ideas thrive.

The Baldwin Polar Expedition.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Evelyn B. Baldwin sailed for home on the American liner New York to-day, having practically completed arrangements for his coming arctic expedition. Mr. Baldwin returned to England this week from Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, having chartered the steamer Frithjof of Christiania, which last year was used by a Swedish polar expedition. As now planned, the Frithjof will leave Christiania about June 20 and Tromsoe July 1, taking to Franz Josef Land the equipment and provisions for the expedition. The steamer America, which Mr. Baldwin bought at Dundee, will proceed to some point off the north coast of Russia, for the purpose of taking on board dogs and other equipment. The America will proceed thence to a designated point off Franz Josef Land, where the Frithjof is expected to meet her.

Heavy Sentences for English Lawyers.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The courts have administered a striking lesson for honesty in handling trust funds, dealing severe sentences to three defaulting lawyers, the discovery of whose crimes a few months ago greatly disturbed the people's confidence in the profession. Benjamin Tako, President of the Law Society, whose firm swallowed £170,000 of its clients' money, was sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment. His only defense was that he left the details of the business to his nephew. Two minor lawyers were sentenced to ten years' imprisonment each for similar embezzlements.

SMALLPOX IN CHICAGO.

Health Commissioner Has Had to Call for More Help.

Special to The New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Commissioner Reynolds has made a requisition for eight more men in the Health Department. The prevalance of smallpox, he says, demands the extra help. The department needs four extra doctors and the same number of expert disinfectors. Five new cases have been reported since yesterday.

Daily there are scores of reports that reach the health office of cases thought to be smallpox, though only a small percentage proves to be the dread disease.

Officers at the headquarters of the Department of the Lakes, in the Pullman Building, are not alarmed over the appearance of smallpox at Fort Sheridan. Col. Hall, Adjutant General, said: "Every man at Fort Sheridan is vaccinated, and there is no danger of the disease getting a foothold. The first thing a soldier does when he enlists and joins the army is to get vaccinated."

GRIDIRON CLUB'S DINNER

Washington Correspondents Entertain Distinguished Guests.

Serious Side of Life Temporarily in Eclipse—A Menu in Rhyme.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The annual dinner of the Gridiron Club, composed of Washington correspondents, was given tonight at the Arlington Hotel. About 200 guests and members were at the handsomely decorated tables. Among the guests were distinguished men in all walks of public life—Cabinet officers, members of the Supreme bench, Senators, Representatives, army and navy officers, and Ministers of foreign countries. The reputation of the club was sustained in the matter of unique features, burlesques of public affairs, roasts on public men who were guests, new "stunts," all being interspersed with bright speeches, songs, and choruses. President Arthur W. Dunn gave the keynote in welcoming the guests, saying the "serious side was in eclipse" during Gridiron dinners, and from the flashing of the Gridiron until the end there was abundant merriment.

The menu was an old style primer, both in printing and illustrations, being the alphabet with a rhyme for each letter which hit off some public man or passing event. The inauguration of the President furnished an opportunity for the Vice President to protest vigorously, because he was not in the procession, and finally to appear with a mountain lion and assert he would have an inauguration of his own.

Early in the dinner several members of the club came into the dining room singing "Benny Havens, O," and asserted that there were fourth-class men present who had not "qualified." Whereupon the army officers present were brought forward, duly "hazed," and notified that as soon as the present investigation was over they would be "called out."

Many men were present who are either editors or business managers of large newspapers. These were called up, but when all the names had been read, a member of the club noted the absence of a distinguished editor, and immediately presented another member, representing W. J. Bryan. The latest arrival began immediately to grind out copy, and when five banners with nominations from 1904 to 1920 had been presented, he declined, but another member immediately came in and accepted. He looked like Cleveland, and bade the band and file "to follow him, and as the procession marched out, the club sang "Four Years More of Grover."

Congressional guests received attention in a "Senate Press Gallery Symposium," where good stories on some were told, while songs burlesqued others. The "Dead Ducks," those who fell in the November battle, or since in the Senatorial elections, were duly remembered. "Uncle Joe" Cannon was remembered by the following song, to the tune of "Baby Mine," alleged to be his latest effusion:

From the land of suckers, many,
Illinois, Illinois,
But of statesmen few, if any,
Illinois, Illinois,
For two years there'll be a pause,
Then we'll have Young Charley Dawes,
And won't that be a corker
On us poor old boys?

Gen. Grosvenor was declared to be handsqueezing for 1904. Senator Chandler was presented with a toy railroad train and admonished to begin over again. These, with other quips and jokes, were enjoyed by the guests, even those who were on the gridiron.

Speeches were made by Secretary Root, Justice Brown, Senators Chandler, Depew, and Carter; ex-Senator Gorman, ex-Gov. Francis of Missouri, the Chinese Minister, the Turkish Minister, and others.

Among the guests present were:

PARITY OF THE SILVER DOLLAR.

House Committee Votes to Report the Overstreet Bill.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The House Committee on Banking and Currency today voted, 6 to 4, in favor of reporting the Overstreet bill, maintaining at all times the parity of the standard silver dollar with gold. Two Democrats, Driggs of New York and Thayer of Massachusetts, voted with the Republicans in favor of the bill. As reported, the bill is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to maintain at all times at parity with gold the standard silver dollars of the United States, and to that end he is hereby authorized and required at the demand of the holder to exchange gold coin for standard silver dollars when presented to the Treasury of the United States in sums not less than $50.

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Treasury, when in his judgment there is not sufficient gold coin in the general fund of the Treasury to justify a further use of it for exchange for standard silver dollars, shall be authorized and required to employ any part of the reserve fund of gold coin established by Section 2 of the act of March 14, 1900, and the standard silver dollars received in the reserve fund in exchange for gold coin under the provisions of this act shall be held in said reserve fund and not paid out except in the manner provided in regard to United States notes in said Section 2 of the act of March 14, 1900, and all provisions of law for the maintenance of said reserve fund relating to United States notes are hereby made applicable to standard silver dollars in said reserve fund.

That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

The report on the Overstreet bill places two gold redemption bills on the House calendar, the committee on coinage having previously reported the Hill bill. The measures differ, however, the Hill bill providing for turning the silver dollar into small coin, while the Overstreet bill establishes a parity by making the silver dollar exchangeable for gold on demand at the Treasury.

Chairman Southard of the House Committee on Coinage to-day introduced a resolution making the Hill bill a special order in the House with two days for debate. The resolution goes to the Committee on Rules, which will determine whether the measure is to be brought to the front as a special order. Before this is done the advocates of the measure will canvass the sentiment of Senators with a view to assuring Speaker Henderson that the consideration given to the measure in the House will not be fruitless.

ASK $750,000 FOR BUFFALO FAIR.

Exposition Representatives Argue for Aid from the Government.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Representatives of the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, including President J. J. Melbourne, Director General Buchanan, Norman E. Mack, and other citizens of Buffalo, were before the House Committee on Appropriations in behalf of Federal participation in that enterprise. Many of the New York representatives in Congress accompanied the delegation.

The purpose of the hearing was to set forth the magnitude and progress of the work being done, and to urge an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill giving Government aid to the extent of $750,000. This is not expected to be an outright contribution, as the stock of the exposition to the amount of $750,000 is to be issued to the Government. The financial estimates of the enterprise were explained at length indicating that there would be a considerable surplus after discharging the debt to the Government and all other obligations.

The action of the committee will not be known until the sundry civil bill is reported, but the delegation is encouraged to believe that it will be favorable.

POSTAL CODIFICATION DEBATE.

Several Attempts to Amend the Loud Bill Are Defeated.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The House today proceeded with the consideration of the bill to revise and codify the postal laws which was interrupted by the consideration of appropriation bills. An amendment offered by Mr. Latimer (Dem., S. C.,) to provide that no star route contract should be let to any one not a resident of the county in which the route was located aroused a great deal of opposition from the immediate friends of the bill, who argued that the injection of such amendments into a bill to codify the postal laws would result in loading the measure down and make its ultimate defeat certain. The amendment was supported by Mr. Tate (Dem., Ga.,) and Mr. Bartlett, (Dem., Ga.,) Mr. Stephens, (Dem., Texas,) Mr. Talbert, (Dem., S. C.,) and others.

They argued that the amendment would result in breaking up the present sub-letting system. Mr. Loud, (Rep., Cal.,) in charge of the bill, reiterated the statement that if the amendment were adopted the bill would fail. More than that he believed the amendment unwise. There were many star routes, he said, where no one lived who could or would bid for the contract of carrying the mails. The amendment was lost—38 to 47.

Mr. Tawney (Rep., Minn.,) discussed the advisability of placing upon the bill as an amendment his bill for the reclassification of the railway mail clerks.

Mr. Loud appealed to Mr. Tawney not to offer the amendment on the ground that, if adopted, it would sound the death knell of the bill. If the bill contained any provision which could not pass the Senate by unanimous consent, it must fail.

Mr. Tawney pointed out the fact that substantially the bill which he offered as an amendment already had passed the Senate three times. He did not think the incorporation of this reclassification scheme into the bill would jeopardize it.

Mr. Loud replied that, in the face of general elections, one house of Congress frequently passed measures, knowing that they would be held up by the other house, and he insisted that if the amendment went on the bill, all chance of its passage would disappear.

Mr. Tawney declined to be convinced, and offered the amendment. It classified railway mail clerks into ten classes, with salaries ranging from $800 to $1,800 per annum. In support of the amendment, he recalled that its provisions had received the pledged support of 260 members of the House at the last session. After some further debate by Messrs. Sperry (Rep., Conn.,) and Fitzgerald (Dem., Mass.,) in favor of the adoption of the amendment, and Mr. Bromwell (Rep., Ohio,) against it, the amendment was lost, 48 to 48.

OLEOMARGARINE BILL REPORTED.

The Minority Calls the Measure Dangerous Class Legislation.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Senator Proctor, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, to-day presented to the Senate the report of that committee on the oleomargarine bill. The report is favorable to the bill, but Senator Heitfield presented a minority report adverse to it. The majority in their report say:

The bill appears to be unanimously desired by the farmers of the country who are engaged in dairying, and has the earnest approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. Your committee has listened with interest to the representatives of the live stock interests and the cottonseed oil manufacturers, and is unable to see in this measure anything that can greatly injure either.

The Secretary expressed the opinion before the committee that the dairy cow was a necessity to the restoration of the exhausted cotton lands of the South. We have heard some objection to this measure from organized labor, and, while it is true that some laboring men may prefer, as a matter of pride, to consume oleomargarine that is yellow instead of white, yet your committee believes that, while the pride of some may suffer under this measure, which will raise the tax on the colored and reduce it on the uncolored, a far greater number are now being deceived through the sale of oleomargarine as butter and at butter prices.

The minority report is signed by Senators Heitfield (Pop., Idaho,) and Money, (Dem., Miss.,) and Senator Bate (Dem., Tenn.,) concurs in their conclusions. They present a substitute bill providing more stringent restrictions upon the retail dealer and for proper marking of oleomargarine, but removing the restriction as to coloring.

The minority take the position that oleomargarine is a legitimate article of commerce, and quote the United States Supreme Court to substantiate this position. They find that most of the frauds in connection with the oleomargarine trade are committed by the retail dealers and say that the makers of butter cannot rightfully claim an exclusive right to use coloring matter. They continue:

The object of the bill is to prevent competition between two home industries by building up the one and destroying the other. Such use of the taxing power of the Government is an abuse which should not be encouraged or even tolerated for a moment. The bill is class legislation of the most dangerous character. It is not demanded by any economic conditions in this country, and its passage would be not only a perversion of the taxing power of the Government, but a violation of the Constitution both in its letter and spirit.

Hawaii Cost America $3,447,535.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Secretary Gage has sent to the House a full statement of the indebtedness incurred by the annexation of Hawaii, with a request for appropriations to cancel the indebtedness, aggregating $3,447,535.

The President Commutes Sentences.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The President to-day commuted the sentences of two men now serving time for offenses against the postal laws. They were D. G. Dumas, who pleaded guilty Sept. 5, 1900, to stealing a letter from the mails while employed as a railway postal clerk in Texas, and George E. Shippey, convicted in Chicago April 5, 1900, of using the mails to defraud.

Preaidential Nominations.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The President to-day sent the following nominations to the Senate:

NEELY SAILS FOR HAVANA

Alleged Embezzler Leaves Here Apparently in Fine Spirits.

Has Confidence that He Can Clear Himself and Be Acquitted—Deputy Marshals Will Watch Him Closely.

Charles F. W. Neely, the ex-Chief of the Bureau of Finance of the Cuban Post Office Department, who was arrested in Rochester last May charged with embezzling $36,000 of the department funds, sailed yesterday for Havana in custody of two United States Marshals on the Ward Line steamship Mexico. Since May 22 last he has been in Ludlow Street Jail, where he has awaited the decision of the United States Supreme Court on the question of the legality of his extradition. The decision, rendered on the 14th of this month was adverse to him.

Neely was up early yesterday morning, and when United States Marshal Henkel arrived at the jail he found him ready for the trip. Just before 11 o'clock Deputy Marshals Frank H. Daley and Abraham Adler, who are taking him back to Havana, came to the jail. No time was lost, and all three immediately started for the pier in a cab.

As the prisoner left the jail he bade Warden Pickett good-bye, saying: "I am glad that I am going back to Cuba, for I am certain that I can explain everything and will be acquitted."

The prisoner was dressed in a dark suit, a light overcoat, and a light derby hat. In his hand he carried a small valise. He was not handcuffed, and appeared to be in excellent spirits.

He chatted pleasantly with his custodians and gave no indication that he was thinking of the seriousness of the charges to which he will have to answer when he arrives in Havana.

When the party arrived at the pier Neely was the first one out of the cab, being followed closely by Adler and Daley. All at once boarded the ship, where Neely was greeted pleasantly by the officers. To them he said:

"Once more I say that I am glad to take this trip."

Meanwhile there were many people on the pier who were looking curiously at the prisoner, commenting on how carelessly he appeared to look upon his situation. The Marshal would not allow any one to communicate with him. A relative of Neely was at the pier, but he would not give his name. Neely's stateroom is on the port side, amidships, and one of the Marshals will always be with him during the voyage in order to guard against any attempt on his part to commit suicide or to escape by jumping overboard.

The Mexico is due in Havana next Wednesday. There the Marshals will turn their prisoner over to the local authorities, after which they will return home.

$7,500,000 CONTRACTS SIGNED.

Newport News Company Agrees to Build the Warships.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Contracts for naval work, aggregating no less than $7,500,000, were signed at the Navy Department to-day by President Orcutt and Judge Payson, representing the Newport News Ship Building and Dry Dock Company. The contracts were for one sheathed armored cruiser of 14,500 tons, to cost $3,883,000, and for a similar cruiser unsheathed to cost $3,775,000.

Capt. Converse, now inspector of the Illinois, and the future Commander of the big battleship which is building at Newport News, reported at the Navy Department to-day that the battleship will be ready for her preliminary trial about the middle of next month, and that she will be ready to go into commission in July.

Chisholmn Lease Transferred.

Special to The New York Times.

DULUTH, Minn., Jan. 26.—The American Steel and Wire Company has secured the Chisholm Iron Company's lease to its lands on the Mesaba range. By the terms of the lease the Steel and Wire Company pays the Chisholm Company a bonus of $75,000 and 10 per cent. annual royalty, and in addition pays to the fee owners 25 per cent. annual royalty. The terms call for a minimum annual production of 100,000 tons. The property is a valuable one, having shown up more than 7,000,000 tons of ore, mostly high-grade bessemer. The Steel and Wire Company now controls four Mesaba Range mines.

IRRIGATION PLAN ATTACKED.

Debate in the Senate on Proposed Amendment to Indian Bill for Experimental Dam.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—National irrigation was discussed in the Senate for three hours to-day, the text being an amendment to the Indian Appropriation bill providing for surveys looking to the construction of an irrigation dam and ditch for the watering of the reservation of the Pima and Maricopa Indians, at San Carlos, on the Gila River, Arizona.

Mr. Platt (Rep., Conn.,) led the opposition and was assisted by Mr. Quarles, (Rep., Wis.,) Mr. Stewart, (Rep., Nev.,) Mr. Chandler, (Rep., N. H.,) and Mr. Thurston (Rep., Neb.,) argued for the experiment.

The amendment concerning town-site appraisements was considered, Mr. Pettigrew renewing his opposition to the town site commission. After some debate the town site amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Platt (Rep., Conn.,) opposed the appropriation of $100,000 for investigation and survey of proposed irrigation dams and canals on the Gila River in the San Carlos Reservation, Ariz. He said he was opposed to the plan as it was one which would commit the Government to a new policy which would be one of immense cost before it was carried out. Mr. Platt explained that settlers at the head of the Gila River had taken up water rights at the head of the stream, and thus cut down the supply. The amendment, he said, was framed in reality to commit the Government to a policy of National irrigation.

The National Irrigation Congress and the Geological Survey, he said, had combined those who believed that humanitarian principles dictated that the Indians should be supplied with irrigation that they might be self-supporting, and the irrigation forces so that they were almost irresistible. The scheme, he said, would commit the Government to the expense of some $4,000,000. He criticised the reports of the Geological Survey.

Mr. Platt added that all the irrigation needed for the Indians could be secured for $100,000, but that the irrigation advocates favored this scheme because it would foist the burden of irrigation of the arid lands inevitably upon the Government.

Mr. Stewart (Rep., Nevada,) contended that the amendment contemplated only the completion of the surveys already under way, and that nothing would follow but a submission of the complete plan to Congress. He maintained that every other method of providing water for the Indians had been exhausted, leaving only that proposed by this amendment. He made a general argument favoring the irrigation of the arid lands.

Mr. Quarles (Rep., Wis.,) discussed the general irrigation proposition, indorsing it, but deploring what he called the guerilla tactics which attempted to secure legislation upon appropriation bills rather than bringing forward a bill contemplating the whole scheme of watering the arid regions. He said that what he opposed was the method, and not the scheme. He said the States and Nation must act in harmony to preserve water rights, and that action must be taken quickly to secure all rights for the people.

Mr. Thurston, (Rep., Neb.,) Chairman of the Indian Committee, resented the imputation that the committee was moving by indirection, or was endeavoring to secure by unfair means any advantage to the irrigation advocates. He went over the legal phases of the storage of water by such a dam as is proposed. Then, taking up the general features, he said the site for the proposed dam was the most favorable that might be chosen for an irrigation experiment. He protested that there was always objection when a small appropriation was asked for the West, while Western men were ready to vote for coast improvements.

Mr. Chandler (Rep., N. H.,) caustically replied to the strictures on New England by Mr. Thurston, reviewing the history of irrigation legislation, and saying he favored a comprehensive plan of irrigation and hoped some such scheme would be reported.

Mr. Thurston, referring to the East, said moss seemed to grow not only upon the houses, but upon some of the citizens. Against this expression, Mr. Platt (Conn.) put himself on record as against any classification of the East as against the West or any other section. He had always, he said, endeavored faithfully to represent the entire country, and he was favorable to an irrigation scheme when carefully prepared. He asserted that there is a lobby in the interest of irrigation, and declared that feeling had been worked up without any reference to the merits of the work.

Amendments were agreed to appropriating $11,000 for light, heat, and water supplies at Klamath Agency, Oregon; permitting the Secretary of the Interior to expend not more than $150,000 for purchase of water rights for the Southern Utes; appropriating $25,000 for the purpose of investigating the mineral character of lands in Indian reservations, and to withhold from such reservation all mineral lands; providing for an investigation as to whether or not a personal tax may be levied in the Indian Territory to maintain a free school system; permitting the sale of 20,000,000 feet of timber from the Jicarillo Apache Indian reservation.

The Senate adjourned with the irrigation amendment pending.

THE CONVENTION AT HAVANA.

Animated Debate on the Article in the Constitution Referring to Religion.

HAVANA, Jan. 26.—The third section of the Cuban Constitution, as submitted by the Central Committee to the Constitutional Convention, on Monday, relative to rights guaranteed by the Constitution, was discussed by the convention to-day. The first twelve articles of the section were accepted without debate, and it looked as though much work would be accomplished at this sitting.

Article XIII., however, regarding religion and the separation of Church and State, brought out a flood of talk, lasting nearly four hours, and several amendments were offered, one by Señor Cisneros proposing to strike out the word "religion." Señor Cisneros objected to any reference to religion in the Constitution.

Señor Llorente made a hot retort, and said the Cubans were not atheists. The amendment was defeated.

A general discussion ensued upon the motion of Juan Gualberto Gomez to strike out the words "the Church and State shall be separate." Señors Nunez, Zayas, and Sanguilly did not want the union of Church and State, and said they believed in guarding against any possibility of it in the future Government.

Señors Gomez and Giberga argued that the future Government might want a union, and that it would be best to leave the Constitution so that such an arrangement might be made. It might be politic, they claimed, to have a union with such a strong organization, and it was not necessarily an uncivilized movement, as the opposition intimated. The speakers cited the union of Church and State in France and England.

The motion was defeated; and the article remains the same as in the original project, with the exception of a stipulation that the State shall pay no money for the support of the Church.

It was voted to hold night sessions of the convention, beginning next Monday.

MR. DADY SELLS HIS RIGHTS.

To Receive $250,000 from the Havana Government—May Enter the Competition for the Contract.

HAVANA, Jan. 26.—The Government has made arrangements with Mr. Dady, the American contractor, to purchase all his rights in law and equity in the project for sewering and paving Havana, for $250,000. This sum will be reimbursed to the State by the successful bidder for the contract.

The Ayuntamiento has been instructed in a letter from Gov. Gen. Wood to prepare an advertisement for bids. According to the plans of Mr. Gray, bidders will be obliged to deposit 5 per cent. of the amount of the contract, and the successful bidder must deposit 5 per cent. more before commencing the work.

Mr. Dady under the new conditions, has no more rights than other bidders. He is reported to have said that he is satisfied with the awards, and will enter the competition for the contract.

Reported Carnegie Deal Denied.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 26.—The Chronicle Telegraph says: "It can be stated on the highest authority that the story of the absorption of the Pressed Steel Car Company by the Carnegie interests is entirely without foundation. The relations between the two companies are at present of the most intimate character, the Carnegie Company having practically the command of the supply of raw material to the Pressed Steel Car Company, but no union of interests has taken place, nor is any such thing contemplated at the present time."

BOLOMEN SWEAR ALLEGIANCE.

Details of the Ceremony in Santa Maria When 1,900 of Them Took the Oath.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The last mail from the Philippines includes a brief report made by Gen. Young of an important event in Santa Maria on Dec. 2, when 2,180 Kattipunans voluntarily renounced connection with the insurrection and swore allegiance to the United States Government. This number includes 1,900 sworn bolomen. The oath of allegiance was administered by a padre in the church at Santa Maria and was followed by a Te Deum and benediction. The ceremonies lasted from 9 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock in the evening, and included an address by Gen. Young, interpreted by the President, and an earnest exhortation by the padre.

Gen. Young says that the natives who have sworn allegiance to the United States include about all the men capable of bearing arms within the jurisdiction of Santa Maria, which, he says, was considered the worst town in this district.

"I believe," says he, "my action to-day to be in the best interests of our cause. Three reasons seem to have brought about this condition of affairs, viz: First, the re-election of McKinley; second, and stronger, the arrival of more troops in the district; third, and strongest, the vigorous enforcement of war measures and deportation of prisoners.

"It will be necessary to occupy all pueblos and patrol all the barrios to protect these people against the vengeance of Tagalo leaders. This I have promised them, as far as lies in my power. This action in the jurisdiction of Santa Maria will have a good effect on the adjoining jurisdiction of Narvacan."

Over 50,000 Filipinos Have Taken Oath.

ILOILO, Island of Panay, Jan. 26.—Upward of 50,000 Filipinos have sworn allegiance to the United States in Iloilo Province. Thirty insurrectos surrendered at Santa Barbara yesterday.

PHILIPPINE COMMISSION ACTS.

Men in Arms After March Next Ineligible to Hold Office.

MANILA, Jan. 26.—The Philippine Commission has passed the act declaring persons in arms against the United States authority or aiding and abetting the insurrectionists after March next ineligible to hold office.

A bill has been enacted regulating the hours of labor and leaves of absence of civil service employees. The measure requires six hours' work daily, and provides free transportation for American employes from San Francisco, with half salary from the day of embarkation.

Gen. Funston reports that thirty of his men near San Isidro yesterday killed five insurgents. Later the same detachment engaged thirty insurgents under Tagunton, the notorious leader and assassin. Tagunton was killed while trying to escape.

The Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth Regiments have been ordered to Manila from the Visgan region, preparatory to returning to the United States.

The Twentieth Regiment, which has been constantly on provost duty in Manila, has been ordered to Vigan.

The Thirtieth Regiment will be brought to Manila shortly.

PORTO RICAN LEGISLATION.

Tax Rate Cut Down One-half—Land Leased to French Railroad.

SAN JUAN DE PORTO RICO, Jan. 26.—The House yesterday passed Hollander's bill (to provide revenue for the people of Porto Rico and for other purposes) by a vote of 22 to 14. There were many amendments, the most important cutting down the real and personal taxes from 1 to ½ per cent. The excise and liquors taxes were reduced, but the tax on tobacco was raised.

The Assembly has passed the bill leasing to the French Railroad Company for ninety-nine years a water front on Government lands at San Juan, valued at $100,000. The company will build a terminal there and plans to spend considerable money on completing the road, though it has not succeeded in obtaining a Government guarantee.

THE LANCASTER AT LA GUAYRA.

Was Due There To-day to Await the Return of the Scorpion.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The Navy Department was informed this morning that the Lancaster sailed yesterday from Santa Lucia for La Guayra, having filled her bunkers at the former point for her trip down to Venezuela. She should arrive at La Guayra by to-morrow, and will there await the return of the gunboat Scorpion, which is keeping a temporary watch over affairs in the eastern portion of Venezuela, having left Curaçao for Trinidad yesterday.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The Saturday Review, as might be expected, jeers at the United States concerning Venezuela. It declares "two of the greatest problems of the century are the future of China and South America. In the United States the politicians have formulated a creed for South America, for in South America the protecting hand of the United States is regarded with more apprehension than affection," and the paper suggests that Great Britain, "as a Central American power," protect South America against its "would-be champion."

Perfunctory Ballots for Senator.

DOVER, Del., Jan. 26.—The ballots for United States Senators were merely perfunctory to-day, only two Senators and two Representatives participating. All the others were paired. For the full term Kenney received two votes and Addicks two. For the short term, Saulsbury two and Addicks two.

Vote for Senator in Nebraska.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 26.—The vote on United States Senator to-day was: Allen, (Fusion,) 48; W. H. "The same goods for less money or better goods for the same money."

Another Case in Point.

The retail druggists have formed a combination to prevent price cutting. Druggists are brought up on the big profit plan—that's the only way they are thought to do business—that's the only way they know.

The agreement—which, as we hear, has received the signatures of 99 per cent. of all the druggists in Greater New York—compels each member to adhere strictly to a certain arbitrary percentage of profits, and expects you to submit peacefully.

You would have to, were it not for the Big Store and a few other up-to-date establishments—and to give you an idea of what these differences between our prices and the retail druggists amount to we name a few goods covered by their new agreement:

	Makers' List Price.	Druggists' Low Price.	The Big Store's Price
Carter's Little Liver Pills,	.25	.10	.13
Ayer's Hair Vigor,	1.00	.35	.74

TRAINING POLICE HORSES

Great Care Taken to Get the Mounted Squad in Trim.

THE ANIMALS LEARN QUICKLY

Their Average Service Is Five Years, but Some Last Longer—Story of Chief Devery and "Bullet."

Of all the horses bought in New York City there are none more difficult to select than those ridden by the mounted police. The horses must possess not only most of the virtues known to horse flesh, but must resemble each other as closely as twins. It would be an easy matter with two horses, but when it comes to 400 which must look so nearly alike that only their riders can tell them apart, it is a task.

The greater number of the horses used in the mounted police force come from the West, though occasionally there may be a horse from Virginia. The order to purchase comes from the Police Commissioners. Three at a time are purchased, and when the order comes the market is watched, and when the right horses are found they are taken. They are supplied by New York dealers. Chief Devery and Sergt. Egan, drill instructor of the mounted squad and in charge of all the horses of the department, make the selections.

The animals belonging to the police force must be bays with black manes and tails, between five and seven years of age, sixteen hands high, and weigh 1,100 pounds. They must have short backs for strength, strong limbs, and even tempers.

As soon as a satisfactory animal is found he is taken to the training stable in Central Park to be broken. He is what is called a green horse, and work begins at once. The horse is kept at the stable for ten days on trial, and if in that time he is proved not to be sound or has not all the virtues required for a police mount, he is taken back and another horse takes his place. The period of training is usually ten days. The stronger horses do best, and sometimes a horse will require a month's work in the stable before he is ready to go on duty. When they are ready they are gentle, docile, and obedient, and ready to respond to the lightest touch, a necessary qualification in a horse used for this work.

To obtain this result they require careful handling and riding. Policemen John J. Doolady and Bernard Doyle, graduates of the Central Park Squad and expert horsemen, have immediate charge of training the animals. A "dumb" jockey is put on the horse's back, and a cavesson on his head. There is nothing that can break if the animal behaves badly and throws himself, and there are elastic lines from the gutta percha arms of the jockey to the horse's head, which is held in position, but without unnecessary constraint. The horse is driven around the ring within a radius of 20 feet from the man in the centre, who controls him, while another man with a whip follows the horse to keep him in line. He is driven first one way and then the other, half an hour's exercise morning and afternoon, and is also ridden for half an hour.

THE ANIMALS LEARN QUICKLY.

The new horse does not understand this. He frequently kicks, rares, and makes himself generally unpleasant. After a few days he is ready to accommodate himself to circumstances, and apparently begins to enjoy his new position. At the end of ten days or a month he is assigned to the precinct where he is to go and becomes a part of the mounted squad. Not 1 per cent. of the horses trained prove ineffident. But the work is hard, and the service of the horse of a mounted policeman averages five years. There are some who give good service for ten and twelve years, and some live to be a good old age.

Policeman Joseph Miller of the Thirty-sixth Precinct has a horse, Georgie, bought in 1886, when he was six years old. Now Georgie is old enough to be twenty-one, and still doing good service. Shiner, ridden by the Sergeant of the precinct, is also an old horse. When a horse, after doing duty as a mount, grows too heavy for good work, he is put on the patrol wagons, or if not strong enough is driven to a buggy. When their days of service in the department are over there is an auction sale and the horses step down and out of police service.

The length of service a horse will give depends to some extent on the rider. Some riders are harder on their horses than others. It is certain when a horse gives a long time of good service that he has a careful driver, although it does not prove because a horse gives out that the rider is careless. This may occur to any one. An effort is always made to secure horses with even tempers, but they are not all alike. A nervous horse is given to a rider not easily excited, and the more phlegmatic animals go to the men of an opposite tendency. This equalizes matters with good results.

The strongest and swiftest horses are put to detailed work in the parks and speedways, where there is only day work, but the most difficult and dangerous. Central Park is considered the most dangerous post. It is up and down hill, the roads are hard and slippery, and the curves short, which adds to the danger in case of runaways. There are exciting runaways on the Speedway, but the roads are wide and straight and there is less chance of accident. A horse is sometimes used up on a single hard run on the slippery roads of the Park. The most dangerous runaways are those with carriages, though there are more runaways on the bridle paths among the riders.

In running a runaway horse, the first things is the runaway alarm, three whistics, which may be blown by a policeman on foot to notify the mounted men, by another not within easy distance of the runaway, or by the policeman who is after it, to notify his fellow-officers to be on the lookout. As the runaway approaches, the policeman regulates the speed of his mount to that of the coming horse, and when that animal's head is on a line with his leg he crowds in on it and reaches for the bridle. He is careful at the same time to keep well ahead of the runaway and the wheels of the carriage off the heels of his own horse. A runaway it is expected will be stopped within a distance of 200 feet, and the policeman who does not succeed in doing this is not happy. But it seldom occurs. As a reward for his skill and bravery—though the officer looks upon it as a simple matter of duty—the gratitude of the people rescued may lead them to notify Police Headquarters, and the officer receives honorable mention, and often promotion.

The horses take to this work with great zest, and the officer has not a thought for his own mount while he is at work. The horses are frequently injured as well as the men in runaways or in the course of regular duty. One policeman, whose horse fell with him last Sunday, received a scalp wound in which twenty-eight stitches were taken, and there are always horses laid up for one cause or another.

GETTING ACCLIMATED.

The department has four veterinary surgeons to look after the welfare of the horses. The horses seldom escape without illness of more or less importance during the first part of their work. That is the time in which they are not only becoming accustomed to their duties, but to the climate. They are not in their best condition until they have had this illness; they are then counted acclimated. The horses doing regular mounted duty take their turns with the policemen on night and day duty, and it is a hard service.

Four hundred horses are used in the Police Department of New York; 250 are for mounted duty and 150 for patrol wagons and buggies. In the Borough of Manhattan there are 107 horses, 39 ridden by patrolmen, 4 by Roundsmen, and 2 by Sergeants. The others are used for patrol wagonss and biggies. In Brooklyn there are 111 horses, 52 ridden by patrolmen, 8 by Roundsmen, and 5 by Sergeants; the others are used for buggies and patrol wagons. The number of mounted men is greatest where there is a wide expanse of open country, and in the Borough of the Bronx there are 145 horses, 102 ridden by patrolmen, 19 by Roundsmen, 5 by Sergeants, and the remaining 19 are in patrol wagons and buggies. In the Borough of Richmond there are 15 horses, 10 ridden by patrolmen, 1 by a Roundsman, 3 are in patrol wagons, and the other is driven by Capt. Blake. In the Borough of Queens there are 6 horses, 3 used in patrol wagons, and 3 in buggies. This makes a total of 884 horses at the present time, 16 short of the number usually kept on hand.

The respective Captains of the different mounted squads doing detail work each considers that he has the finest squad and best horses and men to be found in the city. There are twenty-four mounted patrolmen, two Roundsmen, and one Sergeant in the Central Park squad in the Twenty-seventh Precinct, under command of Capt. England. They are men of experience, and the Captain has reason to be proud of them. There are nine patrolmen on the Speedway in the Thirty-third Precinct and Capt. Kirshner believes they can catch any runaway going, and they have pretty good experience in the fine horses to be found on the Speedway. In the Thirty-fourth Precinct there are ten mounted patrolmen and one Roundsman, commanded by Capt. Gannon, doing duty on Seventh Avenue, which has had a record since the days when it was a speedway. It was then one of the liveliest thoroughfares in the city, and reckless young men made the work of the squad exciting. Some of the men have belonged to the squad since that time.

There are seven mounted patrolmen and one Roundsman in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, and seven mounted patrolmen on the Ocean Driveway, under Capt. McNamara, who asserts that his Brooklyn men are the cream of the mounted force. The horses for this squad are stabled in Prospect Park. All told, there are fifty-four patrolmen, four Roundsmen, and one Sergeant doing detailed work and day duty only.

SOME PET NAMES.

All the horses belonging to the force are named and numbered, the numbers running up to 404, four numbers more than there are horses. Every name is different, and the horses are registered in alphabetical order by their names, and no name is duplicated. A careful record is kept from the date of purchase, with the different transfers, the purposes for which the horses are used, and finally the date on which they are condemned and sold.

The department keeps up to date in the names of its horses, which are frequently those of prominent people in whom public interest centres at the time. There are the Generals of the late war, and there is McKinley, called "Kinley" for short; there is Oom Paul Krüger, and Schley is one of the horses, and Dewey another. Another name known to fame is that of "Cissy," named by "Cissy" Fitzgerald herself, who admired the horse, seeing it as Sergt. Egan was one day riding through the Park. "Cissy" is now driven by Capt. Kirshner of the Thirty-third Precinct. Sergt. Egan's present horse is Gen. MacArthur, and Chief Devery rides a horse named "Bullet," who knows his master as far as he can see him. They tell a pretty story about this.

It was at the time of Bryan's presence in the city, in November, and a mounted squad was escorting him, Sergt. Egan riding Bullet while the Chief drove. The party had stopped on Broadway, in Brooklyn, near the Twenty-third Street ferry, the men dismounting. The Chief was standing on the sidewalk when a horse walked up to him and gently pressed against him with its nose.

"What is this?" cried the Chief, but immediately recognized Bullet, who had seen and come to him immediately. Bullet received a lump of sugar for his cleverness, and it is possible that he has an honorable mention on the books. Many of the horses have been taught clever tricks, and "Pompey," who is ridden by Policeman Keresy of the Seventh Avenue Squad, has learned to count and tell time. There is some skepticism among the members of the force as to how much Pompey really knows about these matters, but he always lifts one foot in the air and paws a certain number of times to indicate the count or the time. Most of the horses have learned to follow when the policemen dismount.

Special drilling for horses and men comes in the Spring to prepare them for the annual parade in March, April, and May the mounted squad are drilled once a week. The men assemble in their different precincts at a convenient point and are drilled thoroughly until they understand the school of the trooper. After that all the men of the Boroughs of Manhattan and Bronx are drilled together, and all the men of Brooklyn together three or four times previous to the parade.

Mallory Mill at Paterson Burned.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 26.—The Mallory Mill, the oldest structure of the kind in the city, was destroyed by fire this afternoon. The first floor was occupied by H. C. Hopping, wool scourer, and the second by Jacob Dime, silk throwster. The loss is in the neighborhood of $40,000, and is partially covered by insurance. The building was a brick structure, 150 by 50 feet. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Fire at the Bogota Paper Mills.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Jan. 26.—A fire started this morning in the engine room of the mills of the Bogota Paper Company, at Bogota, near this place. A high wind prevailed at the time, and the flames spread rapidly. A large portion of the plant was destroyed, and the loss is estimated at from $30,000 to $40,000. The building, stock, and machinery are partly insured.

EXCITING DUMP CART CHASE.

Policeman Seizes Private Vehicle and Races After an Offending Driver.

Pedestrians on upper Second Avenue yesterday afternoon witnessed an exciting brush between a dirt cart driven by John Riordon of 211 East Fourteenth Street and Policeman Price of the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Station in a light wagon. The speedway extended from First Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street to Second Avenue and One Hundred and Tenth Street, the dirt cart badly distancing the road wagon in the first part of the race.

Riordon had persistently dumped dirt into a lot in One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street against the owner's wishes, and complaint had been made about it at the police station. The truckman was in the act of dumping in the forbidden lot when he caught sight of Policeman Price bearing down upon him. Riordon drove off at a rapid gait and Price, jumping into a light road wagon he found standing at the curb, gave chase.

The dirt cart had only a few yards start, but sped up First Avenue at a tremendous pace, followed by the road wagon, which was rocking from side to side and jolting up the excited policeman in a discouraging manner. Price tried to yell to Riordan to stop, but the words were jolted out of his mouth in a half-uttered state, and the inhabitants gathered on the curb and cheered on the contestants.

Up First Avenue to One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street and up that street to Second Avenue the dirt cart madly sped, with the light road wagon tearing along behind. At the corner of Second Avenue the policeman lost his helmet, but gave no heed, urging on his horse with sundry vegetables which he found in the bottom of the wagon. Several times he was thrown over to the side of the vehicle and hung there desperately until a jolt in the opposite direction flung him violently over to the other side, but he managed to cling on in some manner, while the excited spectators held their breath.

Several well-meaning individuals, thinking Price's turnout a runaway, flung themselves into the street in an attempt to stop the fleeing animal, necessitating the policeman's driving them away with decayed vegetables. Riordon paid no heed to the storm and stress behind him, but tore down the smooth asphalt of Second Avenue at a breakneck pace. Women and children scurried out of the way.

At One Hundred and Nineteenth Street Policeman Price dropped his club and at One Hundred and Sixteenth Street Riordon ran over a dog, but the race went madly on. The heavy dirt cart, in fact, forged ahead at this point and was five blocks to the good. After this street had been left behind, however, the horse before the dirt cart began to tire and slackened speed gradually until overhauled by the sorely exasperated Price and his outfit.

Riordon was roughly taken to the Harlem Police Court, where he was fined $3 and warned against illegal dumping. The possible charge of fast driving was overlooked.

Postal Clerks Discharged.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The Postmaster General to-day dismissed Charles Hardin and R. C. Walton, clerks in the Dead Letter Office, on charges of having purchased packages at the dead letter sale Dec. 17 last, knowing in advance their contents. After an investigation the department several days ago called upon four clerks in the Dead Letter Office to answer the charges. The other two clerks, Mrs. Lillian Browne and Charles Abert, were not found guilty.

FELLED IN HER HOME BY THIEF.

Suave Stranger Was Caught by Mrs. Robinson In the Act of Plundering a Doctor's Office.

Capt. Titus, Chief of the Detective Bureau, and Capt. Martin of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station, are trying to find a fashionably dressed young man who calls himself "Dr. Moore" and claims to be connected with the J. Hood Wright Hospital. There is a warrant out for his arrest on a charge of assault and battery, and the officers think they have several more cases against him.

Last Monday morning an elegantly dressed young man of most suave manners called at the office of Dr. T. L. Ward, in the apartment house kept by Mrs. Worthington Robinson, 2,146 Seventh Avenue. The young man asked for Dr. Ward, and Mrs. Robinson, who answered the bell, told him that the doctor was out. He said that he was Dr. Moore of the J. Hood Wright Hospital, and that he had called to see Dr. Ward in regard to a patient whom he had placed in the hospital.

Mrs. Robinson knew that Dr. Ward was one of the consulting surgeons at the J. Hood Wright Hospital, so she asked the young man to step into Dr. Ward's office, and, after conversing with him for a few moments, left him alone, and went back into one of the rear rooms. About fifteen minutes later she had occasion to return to the front of the house, and while passing the door of the doctor's office looked in and was surprised to see the stranger ransacking the place and packing up surgical instruments.

When the young man saw Mrs. Robinson he leaped at her and struck her with his fist over the left eye. Mrs. Robinson was knocked down by the blow and her head struck against the staircase, rendering her unconscious. When she regained consciousness she called the janitor of the house, William McEwan, who searched the building, but was unable to find any trace of the stranger.

When the office of Dr. Ward was inspected it was found that tin boxes containing about $300 worth of jewelry belonging to a deceased relative of the doctor's had been stolen, together with $20 in money and about $200 worth of surgical instruments.

Mrs. Robinson describes the thief as about 5 feet 11 inches in height, is clean shaven, and has dark brown hair and dark brown eyes. He wore an Oxford raglan overcoat, a silk hat, and patent leather shoes. He is apparently about twenty-eight years of age.

Investigation shows that there was a Dr. Moore connected with the J. Hood Wright Hospital several years ago, and it is supposed that the thief assumed his name.

VACCINATION DISPUTE ENDED.

Health Board Doctors in Queens Must Do Duty in Long Island City.

A controversy between the officials of Queens as to who should have charge of the vaccination of the public in that borough was settled yesterday by President Murphy of the Board of Health.

Up to a month ago and before the spread of the smallpox epidemic made wholesale vaccination necessary, it had been the custom of the physicians of the Health Board to report at the office of Borough President Bowley in Long Island City twice a week. A month ago Dr. O. L. Lusk, Sanitary Superintendent of the Board of Health in Queens, whose office is in Jamaica, instructed the physicians connected with his department to abandon this practice and vaccinate the public only at the office in Jamaica.

President Bowley held that this was unnecessary hardship on the public. He pointed out that persons residing in Long Island City who wished to be vaccinated would have to make at least two trips to Jamaica at a cost of 90 cents, and that this was an important matter to poor people.

Dr. Lusk insisted on having all applicants go to Jamaica, however, and yesterday President Bowley visited President Murphy and explained the matter to him. President Murphy said he did not know that any change had been made, and at once notified Dr. Lusk that in the future the physicians must be present at President Bowley's office on the regular days each week prepared to attend to all who might apply for vaccination.

COMMISSION PLAN NOT NEW.

Project Suggested by Gov. Odell Was Advocated by David B. Hill.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 26.—The recommendation of Gov. Odell for the abolishment of certain of the State boards and the substitution of single Commissioners to take the place of each board done away with is not a new proposition. When David B. Hill was Governor, he made a similar suggestion. It was because of this suggestion that the State Board of Charities and other of the boards marked by him for extinction had themselves engrafted upon the Constitution.

The reason given by Gov. Hill for the abolishment of these boards was not that of economy, but their uselessness. He believed that the responsibility vested in the boards could be better discharged by a single Commissioner. His suggestion proved unpopular, as is attested by the fact that the boards whose abolishment he recommended were not only continued, but the members exerted influence enough to have their official existence made independent of the will of the Governor and Legislature, as they believed, by Constitutional amendment.

Ex-Gov. Hill has not changed his opinion as to the worthlessness of these boards. He still believes that a better administration could be secured under the single Commissioner system. He is in entire accord with Gov. Odell on that point. But there is a question in his mind as to whether the boards which are now provided for in the Constitution can be lawfully abolished by the legislation which is proposed.

The concessions made by Leader Aldis with regard to the Prison Commission bill indicate that even the Republican leaders are not convinced of the constitutionality of the single-headed commission bills as they came from the Governor. If all the single-headed commission bills are amended in the same way as the Prison Commission bill was yesterday in the Assembly, they will fall short of accomplishing the radical reform which the Governor recommended.

TOWNSEND IS CHAMPION.

He Defeats Keeney for First Honors of Amateur Billiard Players' Association.

Arthur Townsend, the billiard champion of the Hanover Club, Brooklyn, was greeted with loud cheers last night as the champion of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players. The defeat of Frank A. Keeney on the previous night by Edward Gardner caused a tie for championship honors between Townsend and Keeney, with a record of four games won by each in the two weeks of billiard competitions in the Hanover Club for the National honors of the association. The concluding match, played last evening, brought out a large delegation of enthusiasts. The game was at fourteen-inch balk-line, and fulfilled the promise of a championship final thoroughly, for the new champion only won his honors by the narrow margin of 15 points, the score being 300 for Townsend to 285 for Keeney.

Townsend was the favorite, for Keeney's poor showing of the previous night had made even his friends skeptical of his staying powers when coolness and steadiness were needed for a hard-fought finish. Townsend began well and held the lead for twelve innings. Then five blank periods gave Keeney an opportunity to creep up. The latter was the first to score 100, which he did at the close of the sixteenth inning. He did not hold his advantage long, for substantial runs in the twenties put Townsend in the lead at the twenty-second inning. Keeney appeared dangerous, but once after that, when he made a run of 42 in the twenty-sixth inning, and immediately followed with one of 29. He could not keep the pace, however, and Townsend gradually forged ahead, winning in forty-eight innings.

The game was much longer than many of the preceding ones had been. Townsend also wins the prize for the longest single run in the tournament, 69 points. Keeney gets second honors, and J. Byron Stark and Edward Gardner, who won three games each, will play off for third prize to-morrow night.

The score:

YALE TEAM BEAT HARVARD.

Victors Rolled Up 41 Points in a Basket Ball Game.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 26.—The Yale basket ball five defeated the Harvard team to-night by the score of 41 to 16. From the start Yale outplayed Harvard. There was a large attendance of students at the game. Clark of Yale distinguished himself by scoring 25 points, earning 12 field goals. He is a brother of Capt. Clark of the Harvard team, who acted as referee, preferring to remain out of the game because he is a Yale alumnus. The summary:

Yale.	Position.	Harvard.
Clark	Right Forward	Lehmann
Hyatt	Left Forward	Hamlin
Sharpe	Centre	Pennock
Lockwood	Right Guard	Underwood
Rogers	Left Guard	Gilles

Score—Yale, 41; Harvard, 16. Field goals—Clark, 12; Lehmann, 2; Hyatt, 2; Lockwood, 1; Goal from foul—Clark, 1. Referee—John A. Hyatt. Umpire—George May, Yale, and Dixon [illegible], Hartford Y. M. C. A.

Regimental Indoor Baseball.

The Twelfth Regiment's indoor baseball team last night defeated the team of the Forty-seventh Regiment, considered the best in Brooklyn, in the latter's armory. The game was practically between the pitchers; Donohue of the Twelfth far outclassed his opponent, and materially aided in defeating the Brooklyn team. Because of non-appearance of their players, the Twelfth was forced to play with only eight men. The game, which the Seventy-five with that Regiment team was to play the Eighth was postponed.

An interesting exhibition game of indoor baseball, resulting in a tie, was played last night in the Ninth Regiment's armory, between the teams of the Ninth and Fourteenth Regiments. Two of the Fourteenth Regiment's men being absent, their places were filled by substituting First Baseman Enright of the Sixty-ninth, and Left Fielder Gangs of the Ninth. The Second Naval Battalion team forfeited a game to the Ninth Regiment by failing to appear. The score:

GIUSEPPE VERDI IS DEAD

He Passed Away at Milan Early This Morning.

ROME REPORT WAS PREMATURE

The Famous Composer Astonished the Doctors by His Vitality—Story of His Career.

MILAN, Jan. 27.—Giuseppe Verdi died at 2:50 o'clock this morning. The dispatch printed in the Patria of Rome announcing his death yesterday morning was premature.

The doctors were astounded that Verdi lived as long as he did. Several times yesterday a suspension of breathing gave the impression that he had expired, but animation slowly returned, and Verdi lifted his arm as though he wished to unbutton his shirt-collar.

The Pope telegraphed to inquire whether Verdi had received the last sacraments.

Intense interest has been shown throughout Italy in the condition of the composer, and crowds have been assembling to read the bulletins, which were posted in music stores in most of the towns.

The death of Giuseppe Verdi comes like the echo of a vast historical event out of a past epoch. For nearly sixty years Verdi has reigned over the domain of Italian opera. He was the leader and the representative man. He was the rejuvenator of an old style, the creator of a new one. He led Italian opera out of its dull and witless routine, and even when he sent into the world the score of "Ernani" made the human ear hum with a new musical life. In his later years, yet a quarter of a century ago, he hurled into the arena of art a new work, a new style, an utterly new creation. Men shook their heads and said that he had drunk of the virus of Wagnerism and gone mad. But he was still beautifully, serenely sane, purely and voluptuously Italian, a musician of musicians, a master of masters. He sang with all the buoyant power of his first period, but with a new and more glorious purpose. And with his new song he founded a new school, for the children of his fancy are Mascagni and Leoncavallo, and Puccini. But a few days ago our Opera House rang with the pulsating rhythmic measures of his "Trovatore" and his "Aida," the choicest blossoms of his old and his new fruitfulness. Both of these works throb with power, and the day is far distant when the threadbare melodies of the former will cease to stir the multitudes. As for the latter, it will live its threescore years and ten and go the way of all operas, for the fashions of the Opera House change with the passing of centuries, and only Mozart lives forever.

All estimates of the position of Verdi as an artist based upon the works produced before "Aida" and "Otello" were rendered null and void by those two splendid achievements. Before writing these operas Verdi was essentially a popular composer. He wrote for the masses according to the formulas handed down to him by his predecessors in the field of Italian opera. It is undeniable, however, that he infused into these forms a new and masculine spirit in striking contrast to the dreamy lullabies with which Rossini soothed war-weary Europe to rest.

Verdi was called, after the brilliant works of his transition period, the "most nervous, theatric, sensuous composer of the nineteenth century," and the description was far from being unjust. He exhibited in the works of this time a singular misuse of power, coupled with a master's fund of melodic inventiveness. He gave the familiar elementary rhythms of the Neapolitan school a fresh and inviting aspect. He infused into the vocal score a new dramatic energy, not always truthfully significant, but rich in theatrical effectiveness. The orchestral score under his treatment became more varied in tone color and more startling in inexplicable climaxes of sound. His operas abounded in tunefulness, and at one time the entire musical press of the world, from the concert orchestra down to the hand organ, were engaged in the publication of his arias and the celebration of his glory.

His style in the works of this period was often sadly meretricious, and his melodies of the cheapest kind, while sensationalism and violent outbreaks of meaningless noise were frequent in his scores. He astonished and overwhelmed the shallow, while he perplexed and grieved the judicious. It he had left it to posterity to award him his place among the immortals on the merits of "Rigoletto," "Il Trovatore," and "La Traviata," the frequency of false and pretentious conceits would probably have outweighed the lyric beauties of the few real genius—the quartet in the first, the death scene of the second, Azucena's narrative, the "Miserere" of the third—and Verdi might have been relegated to a secondary position.

But in "Aida" the great Italian revealed the existence of a genuine dramatic power, untrammeled by any subservience to old forms. It is true that he did not abandon the Italian apparatus of his school, but he molded it to the traditions of his purpose and infused into the set arias and duets a new soul. He constructed his melodies with an unexpected breadth and a convincing significance, occasionally—in spite of a tendency to pomposity—approaching the "grand simplicity" which Gluck sought to attain. The work was begun and sustained on a lofty level. Its dignity never flagged, and its coherency, elevation, and depth of feeling as a whole revealed not only novel methods, but a new purpose. Verdi had at last striven to give the world a rounded, symmetrical art work, and had cast aside forever the trumpery tunes, simple dance rhythms, and empty orchestral hubbub of his transition period. The instrumentation alone, with its ingenious and appropriate combinations and expressive color, shows how thoroughly Verdi had entered into the spirit of his mature enterprise.

VALUE OF "OTELLO" AND "FALSTAFF."

If these things are true of "Aida," how much more praise is due "Otello." The former is probably the more inspired work of the two, but the latter is unquestionably the more sincere. It makes known in every scene an honest desire on the part of Verdi to produce something of universal worth. In this effort, throwing over all the restrictive formulas of an ultra-artificial school, and accepting with the generous acknowledgment of a true artist the theories of the new romantic writers, the aged composer was conspicuously successful in demonstrating that he possessed not only a conviction of duty toward art that has few parallels, but unsuspected resources of eloquence and pathos. The scope, the vigor, and the vitality of his genius were revealed as they never had been before; and, while it is true that Verdi in "Otello" frankly admitted the conquest of Teutonic ideas in music, he sacrificed not a jot of his individuality. Preserving a style distinctly Verdian, "Otello," by the eloquence of its orchestration, the rich harmony of its choral passages, the continued loftiness of its style, the genuine earnestness of the music in its entirety, together with the forcible exposition of the composer's design to make every part of his work subservient to the dramatic purpose of the whole, impresses the unprejudiced hearer with the belief that it is one of the masterpieces of our time.

In his "Falstaff" Verdi departed still further from the hard and fast formulae of modern Italian opera, yet, without losing either his nationality or his individuality. All vestiges of the old set forms disappeared in this work, and the composer wrote brisk, vivacious, eloquent musical dialogue, built mostly of the melodious arioso style of his last period, yet containing purely lyric fragments of exquisite beauty. The orchestral part is composed of a series of picturesque and significant phrases that illuminate the text and at times comment on it with irresistible humor. Grace, elegance, and subtlety alternate with brilliancy, abandon, and resistless vigor in this wonderful work, and it is safe to say that in writing it Verdi lifted himself out of the ranks of Italian opera composers and placed himself fairly beside Mozart and Wagner as one of the greatest lyric dramatists the world has known.

The probable influence of Verdi's last works on the future of Italian music cannot now be measured; but their effect on posterity's estimate of his genius may be surmised. They may be expected to live when Verdi's less sincere works are forgotten, and to establish for him a lasting fame as the foremost operatic composer produced by Italy and as the one who in the degenerate post-Rossinian period did the most to restore to the lyric drama of his native land the high spirit in which Jacopo Peri and his enthusiastic friends conceived and brought it forth.

HIS PLACE AS A MASTER.

In the history of Italian opera there is no figure comparable to Verdi except Alessandro Scarlatti, but he possesses now only a historical importance. France has never produced a master who equaled Verdi in brilliancy and power, in passionate intensity, in dramatic vitality. She has given us his superiors in grace, elegance, refinement, but never his equal in masterful originality or glowing virility. We are forced to go to Germany to find his compeers, and there we can count but two, or at best three. The names of Mozart, Weber, and Wagner alone may stand on the page of musical history beside that of Verdi. And of these three we of to-day dare name but one as that of the master of all. The immortal Mozart, whose artistic children in certain senses both Verdi and Wagner were, alone is entitled to stand in the centre of this trio and lead the others by the hands. With Verdi there passes from the world one of the Titans of music, one of the true geniuses. To us, the contemporaries of his later years, he has presented a beautiful and inspiring spectacle, that of a man of genius still laboring to advance, still seeking higher and chaster slopes of sunlit glory. We have seen him snap the rusted shackles of convention, drive the jailer fashion with the whip of sharp invention, and

> "Burst all links of habit—there to wander far away
> On from island unto island at the gateways of the day."

We have seen him, already honored and adored through all the world, seek for its own sake the nobler path of a truer art, and, having laid at the feet of humanity the choicest fruit of his ripest imagination, retire to his home and the peaceful exercise of a benignant charity to his fellows. Well might his departing spirit sing to us:

> "I have touched the highest point of all my greatness;
> And from that full meridian of my glory,
> I haste now to my setting; I shall fall
> Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
> And no man see me more."

INCIDENTS OF HIS CAREER.

One of the most singular incidents narrated in connection with Verdi's career is the rejection of his application for admission to the Conservatory of Milan. A few hours after reaching the capital of Lombardy he waited upon Francesco Basily, the aged musician then in charge of the conservatory. Basily was accounted an admirable theorist and a learned professor, but if any doubt prevailed as to his complete lack of intuition, his treatment of Verdi must soon have set it at rest. After an examination of the applicant, Basily decided to refuse him admittance to the conservatory, on the ground that he revealed no musical aptitude. Fétis, who seems inclined to excuse Basily's lack of judgment, recounts Verdi's experience, and says that the older musician, having gauged the newcomer by his appearance, was not to be too severely censured. He adds: "Whoever has seen the composer of 'Rigoletto' will admit that never was countenance less fitted to disclose talent. An icy exterior, impassive features and attitude, thin lips, and a steely ensemble may admirably indicate intelligence; diplomat might be once did in their disguise, but no one can detect beneath them those impassioned movements of the soul which can alone accompany the creation of beautiful works of the most emotional of arts."

The principal incidents attending the production of Verdi's operas would, if recounted ever so briefly, fill a small volume. Hence the need of referring to the most noteworthy only, and in the most succinct manner. Eleven months after the performance of "Nabuco" Verdi completed "I Lombardi," which was received by the Milanese public with equal favor. "I Lombardi" was not successful in Paris, where it was sung under the title of "Jerusalem." His next achievement, "Ernani," was done in Venice on March 9, 1844, and his fifth opera, "I Due Foscari," at the Teatro dell' Argentina, in Rome, on Nov. 3 in the same year. "I Due Foscari" was only partially successful. "Giovanna d'Arco," subsequently given at La Scala, fared better, but "Alzira," brought out at the San Carlo, in Naples, and "Attila," produced at La Fenice, in Venice, were rather coolly received. Nor did "Macbeth," first sung at La Pergola, in Florence, in 1847, and given at the Paris Théâtre Lyrique, in 1865, produce a very marked impression.

Verdi was now on the point of attaining his greatest popularity and celebrity; the three best-known and best-liked works of his transition period, "Rigoletto," "Il Trovatore," and "La Traviata," were to be made known within the following three years. The production of "Rigoletto," which is founded on Hugo's "Le Roi s'Amuse," was somewhat delayed by the Austrian censors, who insisted upon changing the characters and local color of the libretto. It was at length produced at La Fenice, in Venice, on March 11, 1851, with overwhelming success. On Jan. 19, 1853, "Il Trovatore" was sung at the Apollo, in Rome, amid the wildest enthusiasm. A month and a half later "La Traviata" was heard in Venice. Strange to say, "La Traviata" proved a complete failure. On the day following its production Verdi wrote to Emmanuel Muzio, his friend and pupil: "'La Traviata' last evening, fiasco."

After bringing forth "La Traviata," Verdi produced no new work for a period of two years. In 1855 "Les Vêpres Siciliennes," written to order for the Grand Opera House in Paris, was represented with success, and subsequently transferred to the boards of the principal Italian theatres. "Simone Boccanegra" was his next opera, and it was sung in Venice with little or no encouragement. "Un Ballo in Maschera," produced in Rome, was more attractive. "La Forza del Destino," composed to order for the St Petersburg Opera House, never became popular, nor did "Don Carlos," composed for the Parisian Grand Opéra, and produced in 1867, achieve immediate success. This work was better liked in Italy. In December, 1871, Verdi's "Aida" was given in Cairo amid great demonstrations of delight. "Aida," written to a libretto supplied, as to the characters and subject, by Mariette Bey, and upon a commission from the Khédive of Egypt, has since been sung all over the world.

HIS LAST GREAT WORKS.

"Otello" was produced at La Scala, Milan, Feb. 5, 1887. It was received with tumultuous applause and with serious approbation by the critics. It was produced at the Academy of Music here on April 16, 1888. It was believed that this would be the great master's last work, but with indomitable energy and the courage of genius he devoted himself at once to the fulfillment of a long-cherished ambition to write a second comic opera. Again Boito supplied the libretto, selecting the materials from "The Merry Wives of Windsor," with the addition of a few lines from "Henry IV." The news of the new undertaking was disclosed to the surprised and delighted publisher Ricordi at a little dinner in the latter part of 1890, and speedily spread through the civilized world, which looked forward with eagerness to another opera from this grand old man. The question whether the fertility of his genius had been exhausted was triumphantly answered when the work was produced at La Scala, Milan, Feb. 9, 1893, with Maurel in the title rôle, Falstaff. It was first performed in America on Monday evening, Feb. 4, 1895, at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Verdi had for nearly four years devoted himself particularly to the completion of his home for indigent Italian artists, which is outside the gate of Magenta at Milan, and which he calls the Casa di Riposo, (House of Rest.) It is designed to accommodate sixty men and forty women, and is provided with individual rooms instead of dormitories. To provide an endowment fund he was accustomed to set aside a part of his income from copyrights. He stipulated, however, in entering upon this philanthropic project that the home was not to be opened until after his death. He amused himself in his leisure by returning to his early study of Palestrina, and had composed an "Ave Maria," which was produced here at the concert of the Musical Art Society on Dec. 21, 1899.

All rumors as to Verdi's being at work on new compositions have received emphatic denials at the Villa St. Agatha. He was recently asked to write a national hymn for Italy, but sensibly answered that such things could not be written to order.

It should be added that Verdi was concerned in the political life of Italy. In 1859, when the revolutionary movement was on foot, the young Italians took as a rallying cry the words, "Viva Verdi," for the composer's name supplies the initial letters of Victor Emmanuel, "Re d'Italia." When the Duchy of Parma was admitted to the new kingdom Verdi was elected Deputy for Busseto. Afterward at Cavour's request he entered the Italian Parliament and the King made him a Senator. But he was never an ardent politician.

He wintered in Genoa and summered at his villa St. Agatha. He was a practical farmer, and in the conduct of his affairs generally showed himself an excellent business man, with a decided tendency to what is familiarly termed closeness. He rose early, walked in his garden, inspected daily every part of his little domain, indulged now and then in a game of billiards with a friend, and retired betimes. He composed at the piano, reading the libretto, the subject of which he habitually chose and the design of which was fashioned to his will, striking forth the themes as the perusal of the scenes suggested them, and changing and enriching them as he progressed. In person Verdi was rather tall, with a full beard, mustache, and whiskers, a deeply furrowed brow, a Roman nose, and a stern and somewhat expressionless countenance.

THE NICARAGUA QUESTION.

A Discussion of What Has Already Been Done and an Inquiry as to What May Be Done.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—There is reason to think that a happier outcome to the controversy over the Nicaragua Canal is probable than appears on the surface. The reason is that the considerations which most influence public opinion are least influential in guiding official decisions. "We will build the canal in spite of our engagement not to," shout the canal boomers. "We will never submit to such insult; we will reject the amendments," chorus back the London editors. The officials of neither country will pay any attention to this exchange of insults and threats. They are not on record, and the record will control the course of events. The Englishmen now have the pleadings, so to speak, and upon examination of them, together with other sources of official knowledge, they will or can discover:

1. The most eminent Anglophobes were defeated. There were only eighteen nays in the vote to ratify the treaty, and among them were the very élite of the professional talltwisters to the British lion. Upon the other hand, the average of the Senate's whole character and ability is certainly below that of the average of the Senators voting aye. Perhaps all the Anglophile sentiment of the Senate was not confined to the ayes, but most of it was.

2. All the proposals intentionally hostile to England were therefore defeated. The proposal to "abrogate" the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by the sole act of the United States was defeated. So were the amendment authorizing discriminating tolls against British commerce, the amendment for forts independent of the necessity of defense of the canal or of the United States, and a long list of others. Some were withdrawn in despair or disgust; some were beaten viva voce; not one succeeded which was not dictated by regard for American interests as the Senate viewed them.

3. Instead of the "abrogation" of the Clayton-Bulwer convention—what the British press calls the unilateral violation of a bilateral obligation—was substituted supersession by mutual agreement. If the agreement be mutual there is no more to be said. If it be not mutual, the status is unaltered. The proposal to substitute one mutual agreement for another may be unacceptable, but it is not any more all of the other things alleged by the English press following a cue set by its enemies.

4. The treaty itself is proof of the United States willingness to enter into reciprocal obligations with England upon a subject which it will not even discuss with any other nation. The Clayton-Bulwer treaty is the sole and regretted exception to Monroe's rule against permitting any alien power to have any share in the regulation of American affairs. There were reasons for the exception, and the exception is repeated in the Hay-Pauncefote convention. But the invitation to the world to adhere is struck out. Perhaps it is an excess of caution not to permit "abroad" to promise to be neutral and not interfere in cisatlantic affairs. However that may be, readiness to repeat with England a bargain from which all others are excluded is a singular way of beginning a quarrel with England. The compliment is more appreciated by those making than by those receiving it.

5. We yield everything and receive nothing, says the chorus of the English press. The United States proposes to give English commerce the largest share in the usufruct of $200,000,000. This seems to the United States the cost of a little war, the ransom of a Prince, or a province. It is true that tolls are to be charged, but the promise is made to England that they shall be the same to her vessels as to American. There is no promise that the canal shall ever be free, but it will approach toward freedom in proportion as the American policy of regarding canals as water highways can be realized. The canal, as a money-making enterprise, is most strongly criticised in the English press, which fails to show a corresponding appreciation of the sacrifice made by the United States in giving this great work of humanity to the world.

6. The canal is deneutralized, complain the British. That is as you may look at it. What other great public work built in the soil of any nation, is neutralized by international guarantee? As a rule, nations protect their own property, even when internationally used. It is true that the obligation for joint maintenance of neutrality falls with the fall of the joint obligation respecting the cost. Should it not do so? Secretary Hay thought, and the weight of opinion outside the Senate supported him in thinking, that a universal guarantee of neutrality should replace the joint guarantee. But the Senate substituted guarantee by the builder alone, to wit, by the United States. Is there anything in this alarming to England or the world? Is there a nation more stalwart? Is there one with higher repute for liberality toward neutrals? Under the treaty of 1846 the United States guaranteed the neutrality and security of transit at Panama. The United States has used force for this purpose more than once, and is doing so at this time. Has there ever been any complaint of the manner in which the United States has executed this right and duty? Are not Americans better pleased that this function is being executed now by American vessels and marines than they would be at hearing that German, or Russian, or even English cruisers had been ordered to the scene where the American cruiser Philadelphia will shortly arrive. When the United States says that the canal shall be neutral toward all commerce, at all times, and to all warships similarly, except those making war against the United States, is there any ground for discounting the obligation assumed or the good faith with which it will be discharged? What nation is offering to put a dollar into the pool as a qualification for joining in the guarantee? Is any one of them has any business interest in the enterprise does not ordinary commercial common sense exclude them from sharing in any aspect of the management as effectually as the Monroe doctrine excludes them for political reasons? Is it indeed true that the United States is insulting and betraying the universe by proposing to give to all and sundry a share in the use of an enterprise which is beyond any other nation's resources and desire to create and upon the sole condition that it shall not be used as a means to facilitate attack upon the builder?

A WAY OUT, PERHAPS.

These are some of the reasons why Americans think the treaty is fit to be offered to England. Whether or not England can or should accept the treaty is another question fitter to be discussed in London. Nothing can be said here to affect that result. Her Majesty's Ministers and British editors are the proper advisers regarding the British interests and in proportion as the treaty is more strenuously urged by others upon Englishmen they will fear the Greeks bearing gifts. This is strictly according to human nature and American precedent, for nothing said in London regarding what the United States ought to do has any effect except that resembling a boomerang's. Nevertheless, too much hope should not be based on these facts. It does not follow because Americans think their procedure correct, and know it was not malevolent, that England will therefore forthwith approve it. It may be said that the Senate is asking of England more than it should, even if it be conceded that the Senate was correct in its amendments generally. The Senate's amendments were motived more than anything else, apparently, upon inability to appreciate the theory of neutrality to an enemy's warships in time of war. To put it concretely, if the Spaniards had beaten Dewey, and the canal had been existing under Secretary Hay's arrangement, the Spanish fleet would have had a right to sail through the canal to attack New York. The United States could not have honorably prevented them; and if it had tried to do so in violence of treaty engagements it would thereby have aggrieved every signatory which had adhered. But what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

If the United States may properly be influenced by strategic considerations respecting the Philippines, why may not England properly be so influenced by regard for her Oriental and Australasian responsibilities? Is it not to the interest of the United States that England should be facilitated in defense of the "open door"? Is it to the interest of the United States that England should be impeded in access, in war or pence, to her over-sea colonies? Under the Clayton Convention the position was one of equality. Under the Senate's amendments those powers which are excluded from pledging neutrality are, of course, free to attack under the risks and responsibilities of war. But England is asked to sign a document which gives the United States belligerent rights where it now possesses none, and yet places England in a position inferior to those who do not sign. England might well enough prefer abrogation with freedom to adapt herself to circumstances, with freedom to blockade, for example, to joining in an engagement which frees the hands of the United States and non-signatories while tying England's.

If the United States has to think of New York and San Francisco, so also has England to think of Vancouver and Quebec, and of that northern half of the Continent which Sir Wilfrid Laurier recently glowingly declared to be superior to the United States portion. The future security of these vast regions is dependent strategically upon the Isthmian transit just as truly as is the American portion. It is true that England has no financial interest in the canal, but she has a vested interest in Isthmian affairs through the Clayton treaty, which in a way may be said to be the English complement to the American Monroe doctrine. If that prevents all the world, including England, from enlarging their spheres upon this side of the ocean, so does the Clayton convention bind the United States against enlarging its sphere upon the Isthmus. If this obstacle is to be waived, England has clear rights firstly to compensation, and secondly that no more damage be done to the existing status than necessary. Why should any more of the Clayton convention be superseded than will suffice to permit construction of the canal? There was and is no agitation to disturb the settled status there; let sleeping dogs lie is a good maxim for the occasion. If England were to ask for its compensations in kind for releasing the United States from the obligation which prevents it from utilizing the canal strategically it would be feasible to permit the passage of England's warships when at war and to prevent the passage of the ships of England's enemies. The Clayton convention specifically stipulated that in the event of war between England and the United States neither should impede the passage of the other's warships. England may ask more, and in other directions. But if she were to ask this and the preservation of the remnants of the Clayton convention it would be embarrassing to deny the validity of motives which actuate ourselves. It would, of course, enormously increase the complications of the canal's future, but that cannot be helped—it is the logical result of the Senate's action. Secretary Hay had entirely removed the canal from consideration in any war. The Senate decided it must be available to ourselves and forbidden to our enemies. England's claim for similar consideration is the same in kind and little less in degree, and is backed by the honor of the United States to reach some friendly agreement. There was a hint in London about the forcible maintenance of the Clayton convention. Let it rest there. There should be no talk here about forcible abrogation in the manner of the Senate's minority. The suggestion was rebuked in the Senate, and the President's hands would be upheld in further resistance in the same direction. Americans would indeed blush to be in fact guilty of the things already alleged against them in the British press.

IF ENGLAND WHOLLY REFUSES.
